A thousand years ago, when the dinner was ready to be served, the first thing brought into the great hall was the table. Movable trestles were brought, on which were placed boards, and all were carried away again at the close of the meal. Upon this was laid the tablecloth. There is an old Latin riddle of the eighth century in which the table says: "I feed people with many kinds of food. First, I am quapruped and adorned with handsome clothing; then I am robbed of my apparel and lose my legs also." The food of the Anglo-Saxon was largely bread. The bread was baked in round flat cakes, which the superstition of the cook marked with a cross, to preserve them from the perils of the fire. Milk, butter, and cheese were also eaten. The principal meat was bacon, as the acorns of the oak forests, when they covered a large part of England, supported numerous droves of swine. Our Anglo Saxon forefathers were not only very hearty eaters, but, unfortunately, deep drinkers. The drinking horns were at first literally horns, and so must be immediately emptied when filled; later, when the primitive horn had been replaced by a glass cup, it retained a tradition of its rude predecessor in its shape, so that it, too, had to be emptied at a draught. Each guest was furnished with a spoon, while his knife he always carried in his belt; as for forks, who dreamed of them, when nature had given the man 10 fingers? But you will see why a servant with a basin of water and a towel always presented himself to each guest before dinner was served, and after it was ended. Roasted meat was served on the spit or rod on which it was cooked, and the guest tore off a piece to suit himself. Boiled meat was laid on the cakes of bread, or, later, on thick slices of bread called "trenches," from a Norman word meaning "to cut" as these were to carve the meat on, thus preserving the tablecloth from the knife. At first the trencher was eaten or thrown upon the stone floor for the dogs, who, crouched at their master's feet. At a later date it was put in a basket and given to the poor, who gathered at the manor gate. During the latter part of the middle ages the most conspicuous object on the table was a salt-cellar. This was generally of silver in the form of a ship. It was placed in the centre of a long table, at which the household gathered, my lord and lady, their family and guests, being at one end and their retainers and servants at the other. So one's position in regard to the salt was a test of rank — the gentlefolks sitting "above the salt" and the yeomanry below it. In the houses of the great nobles dinner was served with much ceremony. At the hour a stately procession entered the hall. First came several musicians, followed by the steward bearing his rod of office, and then came a long line of servants carrying different dishes. Some idea of the variety and profusion may be gained from the provision made by King Henry III. for his household at Christmas, 1254. This included 31 oxen, 400 pigs, 356 fowls, 29 hares, 59 rabbits, 9 pheasants, 56 partridges, 68 woodcock, 39 plovers and 3,000 eggs. Many of our favourite dishes have descended to us from the middle ages.

CHOICE RECIPES

Plum Cake.

One cup of butter, creamed, two cups white granulated sugar, four eggs beaten light, one cup sweet milk, four cups flour sifted, with one-half teaspoon salt, one even teaspoon baking soda and two teaspoons cream of tartar, one cup currants, one cup very good raisins, one cup candied orange and lemon peel sliced fine. This makes two loaves. Cook in bread tins two hours in a rather slow oven.

Beef or Lamb Pie.

One cup of chopped meat, one cup of hot water or gravy, two cups of hot mashed potato, one-half teaspoon salt, one-half cup of hot milk, one tablespoonful butter, few grains of celery salt, one-eighth teaspoon of pepper. Put the meat in casserole or baking dish, add salt and pepper, the hot water or gravy. Mix the remaining ingredients with the mashed potato and spread on top of the meat. Bake in a hot oven until the potato is brown.

Spiced Beef Tongue.

Wash clean and neatly trim a large fresh beef's tongue; then drop in boiling water to cover well. All a lump of sale and a pepper pod. Cook gently until the tongue can be easily piercer with a silver fork, adding boiling water from time to time until needed. Then take out of the pot and peel off the skin. Put again on the fire in a clean saucepan; add four tablespoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful each of ground allspice and cloves, one cup of water, half a cup of cider vinegar and simmer until the liquor has been evaporated, turning the tongue frequently. Chill on ice, cut into very thin slices and garnish with sliced lemon and parsley.

ENGLISH CHEESE CAKES.

Heat a quart of sour milk very slowly, until the curd separates from the whey, and drain carefully through a colander; beat the curds finely with a fork; add two well-beaten eggs, half a cup of sugar, a pinch of salt, and the juice of one lemon with half a grated nutmeg. Bake in a slow oven in small tins lined with pastry.

COCOANUT RICE MOULD.

Boil one pint of milk, stir in three tablespoonfuls of well-washed rice; allow to cook till the rice is quite soft; add three tablespoonfuls of sugar, two heaping tablespoonfuls finely-chopped cocoanut, and a half-tablespoonful of gelatine which has been dissolved with a quarter-pint of hot milk. Allow to get cool.

Stir in half a pint of whipped cream and pour into wet moulds. When firm turn out on a dish; serve with cold stewed fruit.

CUP CAKES.

One egg, pinch of salt, two tablespoons of melted butter, one cup of cream or good rich milk, one and one-half cups of flour, mix one level teaspoon of soda and two of cream of tartar. Flavour with lemon or vanilla. This makes a dozen and a half of cup cakes.

Codfish With Egg Sauce.

Soak the boneless fish, using the large pieces, over night in cold water. Next morning drain and cover with fresh cold water, then set where it will come to the boiling point very slowly, then simmer 20 minutes. In the meantime prepare a white sauce as follows: Place two level tablespoonfuls of butter in a frier; when melted stir in two level tablespoonfuls of flour; when thoroughly mixed add one pint of hot milk, stirring and cooking until creamy. Cut hard cooked eggs into slices, and just before pouring the sauce over the drained fish stir the eggs carefully into it. Season the sauce with salt and pepper to taste.

Cream Pie.

Line a pie plate with good paste. Make a cream with one half cup of sugar, two level tablespoons of butter, two rounding tablespoons of flour, two well beaten eggs and two cups of milk. Cook five minutes and add a teaspoon of vanilla flavouring. Pour into the plate and bake until firm.

Make Monday Ironing Day

LET Sunlight Soap do your washing Monday morning and you can do the light ironing Monday afternoon.

The rub, rub, rub at the board has no place in the Sunlight way—so with the hardest part of washing cut out you'll feel like making it a good day's work by doing at least part of the ironing.

Follow the directions that cut your work in half and remember there's nothing in Sunlight to injure fine fabric or dainty hand. A $5,000 guarantee backs this statement.

HARDENING PLAY GIVES A CHILD STURDY CONSTITUTION

In addition to the hardening of the body, the education of the child should include measures which increase the resistance of the child against pain and discomforts of various sorts.

Every child, therefore, should undergo a gradual process of hardening," and be taught to bear with equanimity the pain and discomfort to which everyone sooner or later cannot help but be exposed.

What I have said about clothing, cold baths, walking in all weather and at all temperatures, play and exercise in the open air, has a bearing on this point, for a child who has formed good habits in these various directions will have learend many lessons in the steeling of his mind to bear pain and to ignore small discomforts.

Physicians who wark among nervous cases realize how often the child who has been too much protected from pain becomes the victim of nervous breakdown later in life.

The boy who learns to tumble, in a gymnasium, to box and wrestle and keep his temper while engaging in these exercises will have subjected himself to a training which cannot help but stand him in good stead later on in life.

One reason why women are more prone in later life to nervousness than men lie in the lessened opportunity which girls have for bodily "hardening" in the games which they play and the life which they lead as children.

Particular care should be taken with young girls who show any tendency to nervousness to see to it that no too much concession is made to their likes and dislikes.

Especially when a child shows a tendency to be nauseated by certain smells and tastes and to complain of noises or of sensitiveness to bright light, the family physician should be consulted and, provided no actual disease of the sense organs or brain is responsible, the process of "hardening" should at once be begun.

Neglected, it is surprising to what vagaries such hypersensitiveness may lead.

It takes very little time to satisfy the healthy demands of your body and keep your health—much less than is hopelessly lost when you are sick and unable to work.

TO REDUCE YOUR WEIGH EASILY AND QUICKLY

If you are overstout the cause of your over-stoutness is lack of oxygen-carrying power in the blood and faulty assimilation of food. To little is being made into the harder tissue of muscle and too much into little globules of fat. Therefore you should correct the mal-assimilation and increase the oxygen-carrying power of the blood. To do this, go to any good druggist and get oil of orlissa only sold in original packages and in capsule form, and take one capsule after each meal and one at bedtime till your weight is reduced to what it should be on all parts of the body. The effect of oil of orlissa in capsule form is remarkable as a weight reducer and it is perfectly safe.—E. J. T.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address E. J. Little Drug Co. Box 1248, Montreal, Can.

Behind Redpath SUGAR

1854 1864 1874 1894 1904 1915

Stand 60 Years of Experience and Progress

THIRTEEN years before Confederation John Redpath turned out "Ye Olde Sugar Loafe"—the first sugar refined in Canada.

In 1880, thirty-five years ago, the Redpath Refinery brought out Canada's first Granulated Sugar, known ever since as the best.

Again in 1913, the Redpath Refinery introduced the third great improvement in Canada's sugar supply—the Redpath 2 and 5-lb. Cartons.

DURING all these years of leadership, the Redpath aim has been QUALITY—the quality on which the national preference for Redpath Sugar now rests so solidly.

Such quality is the result, not of modern machinery alone, but of experience, modern methods, and a fixed determination to produce nothing unworthy of the name Redpath—to maintain in every pound of our product the reputation of "Canada's Standard Sugar". 129

Woman Justice To Make Brides Swear to Obey

KANSAS CITY, Kan., April 20—Miss Mettje Middaugh, second woman to be appoined a justice of the peace in Kansas, is going to include the word "obey" in the ceremony when she officiates at weddings.

The word 'obey' ought to be included — women ought to swear to obey their husbands, says Miss Middaugh.

"In all marriages there comes a time when there is a disagreement and either the husband must obey the wife or the wife must obey husband. The husband being more active in general affairs, should be obeyed by the wife at such times.

"I do not mean, however, that a wife should be a slave to her husband. She ought to have equal rights with him in all things possible. But the promise in a marriage ceremony that the wife will obey often prevents an unhappy ending of a happy marriage.

Miss Middaugh, speaking of methods she will pursue in holding court, says she is sure she will give no more weight in testimony of a handsome man than to that of any other person.

A woman can use her mind just as well as a man," says Miss Middaugh. She can consider the fine points of law without being influenced by outside considerations."

Miss Middaugh does not say, but intimates that many courts run by men are swayed by good looking women witnesses in disregard of the evidence.

Miss Middaugh has been appointed justice to succeed her sister. Miss Laura Middaugh, who left to farm a homestead in Colorado. The sisters for several years have conducted an office for stenographic and notary work.

Of course a man's appearance, action and words may be taken into consideration when he is a witness or appears as an attorney before me" says Miss Middaugh "However, it would be only to decide whether he is a clean-cut, honest man and sincere in what he says—not to measure his charms.

"Mny times, while reporting trials as court stenographer, I have disagreed in my own mind with judges. However, I always found I was considering the right or wrong of the case and not the point of law at issue."

Miss Middaugh looks forward with eagerness toward sitting in judgment over men. Officiating at marriages, she says, will not be a task, but a pleasure, for her.

"BILLY" SONDAY'S INVITATION TO "HIT THE TRAIL"

Addresses Fifteen Thousand People at Patterson N. J. on the Subject of Backsliders

NEW YORK, April 20—"Billy" Sunday last night gave his first invitation in Paterson to converts to "hit the trail," and 311 responded to his call. It was at the end of the evening meeting just after he had finished his sermon on "back-sliders."

"Billy" was facing the greatest assemblage he has seen in Paterson. Suddenly he asked:—"How many of you believe in Jesus? How many of you want him for your Saviour and are willing to make it known? How many will say to me, 'Mr. Sunday, I wish to live a Christian life? How many will come down and give me your hand in token of that, thus saying 'I believe in Jesus and am going to do my best to serve Him?' No, 'Rody,' sing 'Just As I Am, Without One Plea.'"

"Billy" reached out his arms.

"Who'll do it? Who'll be the first?" he cried. Then they began to push their way to the front through the thronged aisles. Seats in the front of the middle tier were vacated for the penitents and there they were seated by the ushers and secretaries after having shaken hands with the revivalist. More than two-thirds were girls from twelve to twenty-five years old. There were, however, fifty-six men among those who responded.

The first to step forward was Miss Agnes DeJong, sixteen years old, who works in a mill in Paterson. Among those who followed her were many young cash boys out of the stores. Some of the "trail hitters" were in tears. Others giggled hysterically and two or three did not cease chewing gum.

Scores Step to the Front.

The choir kept busy. It sang "Why Not Come to Jesus Now?" and all the while "Billy" kept shouting:—"Come on, old Paterson, come on, give me your hand for Jesus and give your hearts to Christ. Open the way there and let 'em through."

Scores merely shook hands with "Billy" and then passed out, but more than three hundred were seated and their names were enrolled. To each a little printed tract was given, bearing a letter from "Billy," under his portrait and suggestions headed: — "What it means to be a Christian."

While "Billy" was urging the main audience "Ma" Sunday was busy among the girls in the choir. She led several of them down to the "mourners' benches," among them a blind woman. Fifteen thousand persons struggled at night to find space in the tabernacle, which accommodates at most ten thousand, including standing room. Of this number 6,000 were business women from the stores and mills of Paterson, who had assembled in the Fifth Regiment Armoury, and from there marched in seemingly endless procession to the barn-like structure in Broadway.

Although two-thirds of the seating space had been reserved for these women's delegations, the accommodations were utterly inadequate. The doors of the tabernacle had to be closed to the general public at seven o'clock. About ninety per cent. of the big audience were women and girls who had availed of the general closing of stores and mills half an hour before the usual time.

Girls in Clergymen's Seats.

Before the preaching began "Billy's" speaking platform was covered with brighteyed girls closely packed about the grand piano and all the aisles were congested. The huge crowd was in holiday mood. "Rody" and "Billy" needed all of their powers of persuasion to get some semblance of order.

A hundred clergymen gave up to the girls the places reserved on the platform for the clergy. Even the press boxes were invaded. Five hundred persons from Hackensack helped to swell the crowd, which was easily the largest "Billy" Sunday has addressed since he left Philadelphia.

"I've been preaching for twenty years," said "Billy," "but I've never seen a more enthusiastic meeting. I've fallen in love with you here and with your grand old town. I have just one regret. That is that we haven't got the money question out of the way yet and we have to shove the tin pans under your noses, girls. But you can pass them up and let these Hackensack people chip in, instead of you self-supporting women."

"Billy" was peevish again at times.

"Now ushers," he said, interrupting his sermon, "don't be doing a marathon up and down the aisle. You disturb fifty people trying to seat one." He also had occasion publicly to rebuke several who coughed and thus annoyed him. He defended the tabernacle's construction as ideal and its ventilation as perfect and urged his hearers to pay no attention to it if ill or fainting persons had to be taken out.

Again Tells Shocking Tale.

"Billy" told the story which Dean West, of Princeton., considers shocking and disgusting, of the Irishman who fucked the Jew until he professed conversion to Catholicism, and then held him until he drowned, "so that he would die in the faith."

Then the evangelist said—"So I have sometimes thought it would be a good thing if God were to send an epidemic of typhoid and Asiatic cholera and yellow fever after a revival and take some of this sort of converts into heaven before they had a chance to backslide. I don't know how the Lord is going to land them safely in glory in any other way. That ought to stand the test of theology, or at least the test of horse sense."

Sin as the cause of failure was the topic "Billy" undertook in to expound in the afternoon meeting to a crowd of about four thousand persons, who never warmed up enough to endanger spontaneous combustion in the sawdust aisles. His text was from the Prophecy of Jeremiah, fifth chapter and twenty-fifth verse: "Your iniquities have turned away these things and your sins have withholden good things from you." These are some of the things he said.

"New Thoughtism gives me a stomach ache; it is some more of the devil's dope."

"You'll spend $3,000 for an automobile, then throw a plugged nickel in the collection plate and sing 'Jesus paid it all'."

It was cooler yesterday. "Billy" kept his clothes on throughout both services. The collections for the two meetings amounted to $830.51.

A WORD TO MOTHERS.

Mother, when your children are irritable, do not make matters worse by scolding and fault finding, but correct their irritability by good nature and mirthfulness. Irritability comes very often from errors in food, too little sleep or physical ailments. Find out what the cause is first, then thoughtfully correct it.

When a mother becomes irritated at the same time the children do, there is serious trouble. I have been in homes, where mothers, because displeased with one child, cuffed and shook every child in the family. Such a display of temper is not calculated to inspire either respect or affection, to say nothing of the injustice done defenseless childhood.

Wet the spots with tepid water, then rub on dry starch and hang out in the sun. Washing in kerosene before washing with soap and water is another way of taking out fruit stains.

AFTERNOON TEA.

When you're balancing a teacup and a bit of badinage,
A saucer and a saucy macaroon,
An olive and an almond and some sprightly persiflage,
While you turn an apt quotation with a spoon;
While you nibble at a sandwich and the very latest book
And sip a bunch of -isms with your tea,
Don't you wish you had the courage of a fellow who can look
As stupid as he knows himself to be?
Ah, feminine the time and place! and feminine the wit!—
They thrust and parry —trying out your skill!—
While their airy, fairy fancies in fantastic phrases flit
O'er refreshments that you're trying not to spill.
But with elephantine humour and a double-barrelled smile,
You answer when la femme has deigned to quiz.
But don't you wish you had the sand of one who, lacking guile,
Admits himself the donkey that he is?
Ah, blissful the condition of the frankly commonplace—
The chap who makes no bluff at being smart.
You know no more than he does, but when woman sets the pace
You make believe and boldly play your part,
But he! Why bless your heart, he's — wise! He's hep! He's next! He's it!
She likes the dear old stupid, d'ye see
Now, don't you wish you had the nerve, the courage to admit Yourself the dunce you know yourself to be?

EGG SHAMPOO.

To make egg shampoo, take the yolk of one egg, hot rain water (one pint), and one ounce of rosemary spirits. Beat the mixture thoroughly and rub it well into the roots of the hair. Rinse in several waters or use a bath spray, which greatly simplifies the work.

It is well to moisten the hair with warm water before the shampoo is applied; this makes the work easier and the egg will not stick to the hair.

HOUSEKEEPING IS A PROFESSION

Housekeeping is as much of a profession as law, journalism or any of the professions one has to study well to make a success, according to one who is a model housekeeper and yet finds time for many outside interests. She declares that too many women take up housekeeping without the necessary preparation, thinking that any woman can learn it from experience, and do not place the proper value or importance upon the work. No man would undertake to open a law office without years of preparation, yet many women will join a partnership for the opening of a home without the least training for the work, not realising that much of the pleasure that the family will derive from the home will depend on the work and management of the housekeeper.

With the many interests that occupy the women of to-day, there has been a tendency with some to undervalue the work in the home. The necessity and custom for girls to become wage earners have had an influence toward carrying the endeavours and interest into other channels; but, according to the statements of this woman, who is well known because of her broad work outside of her home, the home is woman's most important place of activity. There is one here or there whose outside work needs all of her time, but these cases are the exceptions, for with the majority of women the home is the centre and from there one's interest radiates to other activities. Civic, social, artistic and educational work is often better done because of the home environments, and the home where system, harmony and happiness reign, cannot but have the same effect on the other interests in which one is engaged.

There is much more comprised under the heading, "good housekeeping," than many realize; it does not mean that if the front room and reception hall are in order, or if the front porch be immaculate, or if one serves delicious meals, the housekeeper can be considered an excellent one, for the bureau drawers and closets may tell a tale of disorder that would take away many of the laurels earned in other ways that show more plainly to the casual observer.

One woman may be an excellent cook and serve remarkable meals, but if she is disorderly and neglects to keep her rooms clean, she could not be called a good housekeeper; another may delight in sweeping, dusting and keeping the house immaculate but will allow the family to eat anything she can pick up at the bakery, served on the kitchen table; or another will keep in perfect order the parts of the house that show to callers. It requires a well-rounded system for keeping up every part of the work to earn the title of good housekeeper. This, it is pointed out, should not require any more time, if the work were done systematically, than it would take to do it in a haphazard way with poor results. It is not necessary for the good housekeeper to do many of the things that her grandmother would have thought she could not leave undone. With the call for greater simplicity in other lines, the art of housekeeping has been touched, and it has been found that many things can be omitted. An illustration of this is the change in opinion regarding a great variety of cake to be served at a meal. At one time it was thought that the cook who did not serve at least two or three kinds was falling far short, but to-day it is usually looked upon as being in better form to avoid any attempt at display or overloading of a table.

Modern conveniences have done much to lessen the work of the housekeeper, and, if she plans well, she should have much more time to devote to outside interests, without detriment to her home work. It is just as easy to put an article in its proper place if one only realizes it, and save the time and extra work of moving it. If a child is taught to hang its coat and hat in the closet when it enters the house instead of throwing them upon a chair or table, the time will come when it will be seen that it is easier. These are simple illustrations of the ragged edges that are often left in the housekeeper's work and which it takes time to smooth off later.

A GOOD MEDICINE FOR THE SPRING

Do Not Use Harsh Purgatives—A Tonic Is All You Need.

Not exactly sick—but not feeling quite well. That is the way most people feel in the spring. Easily tired, appetite fickle, sometimes headaches, and a feeling of depression. Pimples or eruptions may appear on the skin, or there may be twinges of rheumatism or neuralgia. Any of these indicate that the blood is out of order—that the indoor life of winter has left its mark upon you and may easily develop into more serious trouble.

Do not dose yourself with purgatives, as so many people do, in the hope that you can put your blood right. Purgatives gallop through the system and weaken instead of giving strength. Any doctor will tell you this is true. What you need in spring is a tonic that will make new blood and build up the nerves. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that can do this speedily, safely and surely. Every dose of this medicine makes new blood which clears the skin, strengthens the appetite and makes tired, depressed men, women and children bright, active and strong. Mrs. S. E. Stephens, Ponoka, Alta., says: "I suffered severely from headaches, and was badly run down in health. I had tried several remedies with no benefit, until I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and these have fully restored my health, and I can recommend them with confidence to all weak women."

Exposes Tricks Used by Pickpocket

NEW YORK, April 21.

A well-dressed man walked into a police station on the upper east side the other night, and said to the lieutenant behind the desk:

"I've ridden around town considerably this evening. During my travels I've had my pocket picked. All they took from me was $5, and my object in coming here is not to make a complaint—they are welcome to the money—but to ask you if you can tell me how it's done."

The lieutenant, being an obliging person, laid down the pen with which he had been writing in the blotter when the victim entered and walked around to the front of the desk. His intention was to give the victim a practical demonstration of how an expert pickpocket extracts money from a victim's pocket.

"You say the money was taken from the right hand pocket of your trousers," began the lieutenant, "and you are puzzled to know how the pickpocket extracted it without you catching him in the act? You are surprised that you did not feel his hand slipping into your pocket to grasp your money? Do you know, as a matter of fact, that the pickpocket who stole your money never slipped his hand into your pocket?

"I knew you would be surprised; it seems impossible, doesn't it? It's a fact, though. How did he get the money without putting his hand in your pocket? Let me explain. As soon as he had completed his preliminary work to satisfy himself that you had some money in your pocket, he set to work to get it out. But he didn't put his hand in your pocket.

"This is what he did. He took hold of the lining of your pocket with his thumb and index finger, and when the car lurched or jolted he pulled the lining up a little more until finally the edge of the bill came in sight. As soon as enough of the bill had appeared to enable him to get a grip on it he carefully plucked it out of your pocket and you never knew the difference.

"You must admit that there is nothing wonderful about that, although I wouldn't advise you to try it the next time you are in a car. You might get in trouble. You understand, while it appears simple, a great deal of expertness is required to accomplish the trick and get away with it without attracting attention, not only from the victim, but from other passengers.

"The dip who picked your pocket is apparently one of the old school," continued the lieutenant when he saw his visitor was interested, "for there are few pickpockets in the game now who resort to such clever methods to get results.

"The present-day pickpockets use brusque methods to rid their victims of their pocketbooks, wallets and cash. No clever stuff for them. Their method is to have two or three members of a gang board a car at a propitious time when the car is crowded. After thoroughly sizing up the situation, one of them gets into an argument with either a fellow-passenger or one of his pals. The argument is followed by blows, and of course the passengers are thrown into a state that borders on panic.

"Men and women push toward the doors; they are jostled, shoved and pushed, but they are so anxious to reach the street and get out of the disturbance that they pay little attention to the manner in which they are handled.

"The pickpockets, though, get right to work while the passengers are panic-stricken, and they ply their calling with good results. It's surprising how fast these light-fingered fellows can travel through an entire car and relieve passengers of their money and valuables. And they do not hesitate to intimidate passengers, having little fear of being caught during the excitement. They are even bold enough to strip women's fingers of their rings.

"The pickpockets of a decade ago did not use these rough methods to strip their victims. Theirs was the polite way, the method by which they were able to go through the pockets of a dozen passengers in a car and yet not arouse the suspicion of anybody. The victims did not learn that they had been robbed until they looked for their money and discovered it had disappeared.

"Somehow or other I had respect for the fellows who could pull the trick off so nicely and politely. They didn't have to stampede a carful of passengers to get results. All they did was to board a car, take all the valuables and money they could pick up in safety; alight at different corners, and meet at some pre-arranged spot, where they could lay their plans for the next raid.

"At one time they were so active and successful on the cars of some crosstown lines that we had complaints in this house every night, almost without exception. Conditions became so bad that as soon as a man would enter the station the lieutenant behind the desk would anticipate his complain and say, "What crosstown line were you on when they picked your pocket?' Invariably the lieutenant was correct in his surmise.

"Just to illustrate how clever they were, let me tell you of an incident which occurred one night while I was behind the desk. A young fellow came in and complained that his pocket had been picked while riding on a surface car. He had a wallet in his inside pocket in which was some money in bills. The car was crowded, he couldn't get a seat, and occasionally he reached up and held on to a strap. On one of these occasions a pickpocket extracted the wallet from his inside pocket, took the money out, slipped a folded newspaper into the wallet, and put the wallet back in the victim's pocket. Can you beat that?"

TO CURTAIL HOURS.

General Reduction of Time of Sale of Liquor Likely In Britain.

LONDON, April 23. — That the British Government does not intend to have recourse to prohibition in dealing with the drink question was inferred from Premier Asquith's statement in the House of Commons last evening, when he said that on Wednesday or Thursday next the Chancellor of the Exchequer, David Lloyd George, would bring forward proposals for dealing with the limiting of facilities for drinking."

The Prime Minister's remark was generally interpreted as meaning that the hours during which drink would be obtainable in the public houses would be considerably curtailed throughout the country, and not merely in the areas where munitions of war are manufactured.

GIROUARD PROMOTED.

Sir Percy Is Now a Temporary Major-General.

LONDON, April 23. — Sir Percy Girouard who was Wednesday gazetted temporary major-general, has resigned his directorship of the Armstrong-Whitworth armament firm.

Maj.-Gen. Sir Edouard Percy Cranwell Girouard, R.E., K.C.M.G., C.B., D.S.O., was formerly governor and commander-in-chief of Northern Nigeria and was Kitchener's right-hand man in the Nile expedition which culminated at Khartoum. He was born at Montreal, Jan. 26, 1867. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Kingston, entered the British army in 1888, was promoted major in 1899, and served in the Dongola expeditionary force, for which he was awarded a D.S.O., the British medal, and the Khedive's medal, two clasps. He also served in the Nile expedition in 1897 and was mentioned in the despatches. In the South African War he became famous as a transport director.

One Ship Last Week.

LONDON, April 23.—The Official Press Bureau of the Admiralty last night announced that only one British merchantman had been sunk by German submarines during the week ending April 21.

There were 1,519 arrivals and sailings from British ports during the week, one fishing vessel being sunk.

Some men are too honest to take a hint.

2,000,000 Needy In Belgium Look Here For Relief

This Country Must Increase Gifts, Says American, After Inspection

LONDON, April 20.—An American who has passed ten days in the towns and villages of Belgium and Northern France tells a correspondent who writes from the Dutch frontier that there are more persons hungry in Belgium than the charitable world knows of.

"America is the one hope of the Belgians," he says.

"Thousands will starve, despite the great work that the various commissions for relief are doing, unless the American people dig deeper into their well filled pockets and send more food ships across.

"I believe there are nearly 2,000,000 persons in Belgium who are absolutely dependent upon the bounty of the outside world. The people in the larger cities are receiving enough food to keep body and soul together. It is in the smaller and out of the way places that the suffering and want are more acute. There are hamlets where hunger reigns."

"Everything that one learns here," the correspondent continues, " at the gateway of the land of misery, bears out the account of my American informant, who is a United States Representative. Here is how a Dutchman just returned from an errand of mercy put it:—'Hundreds of thousands are not able to earn anything. They are dependent on charity. Sometimes they get food, and then have to go without for a spell or else live on half rations. It is not starvation, but very often semi-starvation. What that means is that gradually their strength is sapped; then their vitality dwindles, and they fall an easy prey to the first disease that comes their way.

"Of course splendid relief work is being done, but it is not nearly enough in a country where 6,000,000 people are still living—a country many of whose industries have been destroyed and whose pasture lands have been swept by the pestilence of war; a country in great measure, of wreckage and ruin.

"Belgium is a small country, but in these days, when the whole internal organization has been shattered by the blow of the mailed fist, there are parts of it that are almost cut off from the rest of the civilized world. Occasionally, after a weary journey, some one comes over the frontier with stories of life in the Forest of Hainault, for instance, or near the banks of the lower Meuse. Here is one such glimpse which has been given to me in this way.

"It is of a little village of which one has not heard before, called Sarinnes, not far from Dinant. My informant went there a few days ago and found to his horror, that of Sarinnes nothing remained but a heap of blackened ruins. He discovered the fixe hundred or six hundred inhabitants living in the chateau and adjoining outhouses. This residence has been spared, and its owner, a titled gentleman, has gathered to gether the little flock of homeless people. There they are, crowded together, most of them, of course, with no bed to sleep on.

"Very similar is life in Dinant itself. Here came the Huns in the ferocious days of August, with torch and fire bomb, and of 1,800 houses burned all but 900. Amid this scene of desolation 5,500 people are now living, herded in cellars or finding precarious shelter under boards spanning roofless walls.

"They would be even worse off than they are but for one factor. Sharing their lot and ordering as far as possible their lives are members of aristocratic families, for whom this most beautiful part of the country has always been a favourite residential district. They are real noblemen and noblewomen. Most of them were wealthy, or had wealthy friends elsewhere, and could easily have gone when the invaders came. But they chose to stay with the stricken people who naturally looked to them for help and guidance. And there they remain, purely from a sense of duty and responsibility. I am not told of one such titled family whose chateau was destroyed. Opportunity to join their friends elsewhere or go to England was open to them. But they felt that their place was amid their poorer fellow sufferers. They are living now in a cellar, just like the others, solacing and helping them, and by their mere presence keeping alive in their hearts the spark of hope.

"Of the cities of Belgium few have felt the effects of the war in worse degree than what was formerly the great industrial centre of Ghent. Lack of raw materials and the continual "requisitions" by the Germans have brought most of the mills and factories to a standstill so that scores of thousans of men are unemployed and they and their families are dependent on charity. The population is "on rations." Bread is restricted to half a pound a day for each person. Other supplies are also regulated, and may only be purchased once in five days.

"As in other places, Ghent is being drained of its money by the fines imposed by the Germans. Antwrep, owing to its greater accessibility to the outside world, is better off than any other city in Belgium. But even in that port there are at least 100,000 persons dependents on public charity. Yet there is an example of the way in their spirit of independence. Each day one of the bands of the German garrison gives an open air performance. The Belgian audience stands around and listens to the music. But at the first notes of 'Deutschland uber Alles' everybody turns as one man and walks away. It is the most effective way in which they could express their loyalty to King Albert."

SPRING BRINGS CHEER.

British Troops Now Bright and Sick List Falls Of.

LONDON, April 23. — The latest contribution to the account of events at the front by Eyewitness makes the claim that the morale of the British troops is now much superior to that of the enemy, which has noticeably weakened since the Neuve Chapelle fighting. The success in this fight accepted as the commencement of the spring and summer's work, has resulted in a noticeable dropping off in the number of sick.

The troops are now supplied with many things to take the mind of the men off the serious side of the war. Chief of these is a general bathing system, which keeps down the vermin. Big rest depots are established at which band concerts, bagpipe competitions, moving pictures, vaudeville and boxing divert the men.

In addition, thousands of mouth-organs and penny whistles have been distributed and the soldiers are encouraged to stage football matches in their rest periods. The beneficial result is very marked, the Eyewitness' narrative says.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, April 22.—Wheat futures opened ⅛c lower to ⅛c higher, oats ⅛c higher and flax ⅛c to ⅛c lower. The final closing figures showed comparatively little change.

The demand for cash wheat was quiet, few buyers being on the market. Inspections Wednesday 177 cars, as against 196 cars last year, and in sight today were Wheat futures closed ⅛c to ⅛c lower, oats ⅛c down and flax ⅝c to 1⅛c lower.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, April 22.—There was a better demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat and sales of a few loads of No. 2 and No. 4 were made for nearby shipment, and some new crop American wheat for August-September. In sympathy with the lower prices ruling in the Winnipeg option market for oats, prices here for Canadian western grades declined ½ per bushel, but local oats were steady. The trade today was quiet, the demand being only for carlots to fill actual wants. A feature of the flour trade today was the stronger feeling in winter wheat grades, and prices were advanced 10c per barrel. Spring wheat flour is firm and the demand is steady for small lots. In millfeed a fair amount of business was done.

An easier feeling has developed in the butter market owing to the more liberal supplies coming forward, and lower prices are looked for in the near future. Eggs active and firm.

KEEP URIC ACID OUT OF JOINTS

Rheumatism is easier to avoid than to cure, states a well-known authority. We are advised to dress warmly; keep the feet dry; avoid exposure; eat less meat, but drink plenty of good water.

Rheumatism is a direct result of eating too much meat and other rich foods that produce uric acid which is absorbed into the blood. It is the function of the kidneys to filter this acid from the blood and cast it out in the urine; the pores of the skin are also a means of freeing the blood of this impurity. In damp and chilly cold weather the skin pores are closed, thus forcing the kidneys to do double work, they become weak and sluggish and fail to eliminate the uric acid which keeps accumulating and circulating through the system, eventually settling in the joints and muscles, causing stiffness, soreness, and pain called rheumatism.

At the first twinge of rheumatism get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts, put a tablespoonful in a glass of water and drink before breakfast each morning for a week. This is said to eliminate uric acid by stimulating the kidneys to normal action, thus ridding the blood of these impurities.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and is used with excellent results by thousands of folks who are subject to rheumatism. Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which helps overcome uric acid and is beneficial to your kidneys as well.

Angry Guinea Pig Ends Life

Turns Science Down Cold and Volplanes Six Stories Very Successfully

MILWAUKEE, Wis., April 23.— A blonde guinea pig whose parents called him Hophead leaped to his death to-day rather than aid science the slightest whit. Its lack of the milk of human kindness had been supplemented by an injection of tubercular milk which the Health Department hoped to observe in its action upon the ungrateful young piglet. So far as they were able to discover it merely gave him the jumps, for within five minutes after the operation he had gone to the happy snouting grounds.

Hophead was one of a family of guinea pigs that has been living in a room on the sixth floor of the City Hall. His cage had a southern exposure, he was at the pulse of the city so to speak, and he had, apparently, everything to live for. His parents are speechless.

CHAPTER IV.

The Rescue.

AFTER talking to the engineer, John Dorr had missed Gallon and saw him at the anchorage of the ore cable car up the hill, across the gulch from the trestle.

"John," said Gallon, "I am getting old. Years ago there were two partners of us prospected this country, and we found free milling gold. I say 'we,' John, but there was a little girl—I kept the location of that mine to myself. There was trouble, John. He suspected me"— He turned his dimming eyes on the stalwart young man in entreaty. "I guess you know why I tried to keep those plans to myself."

"What does he want?" demanded Gallon peevishly.

John Dorr's eyes saw the miners in the camp, wives and all, streaming out and staring upward. They had got the meaning of that cry. He thought to himself, "Where is Ruth?" It came soon to her father and himself in the mine. He stared up at that dark hole in the hillside and saw an eddy of smoke. Instantly he knew that she must be somewhere within that dark depth.

With all the force of his lungs he bawled down to the engineer, who was staring stupidly upward; swung himself into the bucket, pulled his signal whistle out of his pocket and blew it furiously.

The engineer seemed to listen for a moment, then kicked off his brake and blew his answering whistle. A second later the bucket was swinging down the lofty cable across the gulch.

It was not clear in John's mind how he could rescue Ruth. The quickest way to get to the trestle was by the bucket; then he would have those long, long stretches of ties to traverse, and when he reached that smoke filled tunnel could he get through? He must. He steadied himself and thought, his eyes fixed on the hole in the hillside.

The bucket was still surging a hundred feet away from his goal when he saw the ore car emerge and in it the slender form of Ruth. No one realized better than he that her strength was not equal to setting those brakes and that she had escaped one death only to meet another.

The engineer's blank face upturned toward him seemed that of a man dazed by imminent disaster, but John Dorr's imperious will reached across and down that space. The engineer pulled his throttle wide open, and as he did so John Dorr swung himself over the edge of the bucket and, hanging down by his knees right over the trestle, waited for the oncoming car.

"Ruth!" he cried. "Ruth, come to me!"

He saw her turn toward him, balance herself in the swaying ore car and lift up her arms. He stretched his own down, and as the mass of steel and ore dashed under him, caught her up. He did not hear the crash that followed. All he saw was the upturned face of the girl he loved, swinging a hundred feet above death in his strong arms, safe.

* * * * * * *

About 3,000 miles away a dark and splendid woman was looking critically at her maid. "Eloise," she was saying, "I don't like to be waked this early in the morning. I have told you often enough about this. What do you mean by disturbing me for a mere letter?"

"You told me, madame, always to call you when there was a letter in this handwriting."

The woman under the roseate coverlets held out her jeweled hand. The maid gave one swift glance at her mysterious avaricious eyes and vanished. As she closed the door after her the envelope, torn into shreds, fell to the floor.

Mrs. Darnell sat up alertly and quickly perused the slow, even script written on the old fashioned blue lined paper of a country hotel:

Dear Cousin Jean—Since you last heard from me I have found Gallon. I am leaving today for Silent Valley. His "Master Key" mine is only ten miles from there. Won't he be surprised to see me? I will let you know later how our scheme comes out.

Goodby for now. Keep mum! As ever.
HARRY.

When Gallon thought he had killed Wilkerson he became infected with the ineradicable disease of dread. In his conversation with John Dorr he had given first expression to his feelings. The young mining engineer on account of his youth did not fully understand that men do not speak of such things until age—loosener of tongues as well as of the shards of life—suddenly oppresses them—makes them feel helpless, brings them to a realization of what the ultimate fact of death means. He had barely caught the appeal in the old man's voice when he had comprehended Ruth's peril.

The old man, with shaking limbs, had watched the rescue. When he saw that his daughter was safe he also perceived the solution of his problem. Here was a quick mind needed to protect Ruth's property. Somewhere in that hill was the richest of California gold. Once more he said to himself, "John Dorr can find 'the master key.'"

Feeling himself too weak to meet the girl who was now clinging limply to her rescuer and also discerning in his own slowing pulse that his time was short, he went down the hill, crossed the gulch without a word to the wondering miners and entered the bungalow.

A moment later John Dorr entered with Ruth in his arms. The old man merely looked up. "Always look after her, John," he said slowly, "and if Wilkerson comes back"—

Dorr looked at the old man with pity in his eyes. "She isn't hurt," he said, gently putting her down on the couch. Then he straightened up. "I'll always look after her," he promised.

Gallon stared over at the white face of his daughter as she lay unconscious on the couch. "Humph"— thus expressing to himself his own comprehension of the fact that there was coming such a period in his own life. He went out without a look backward. When he returned the room was empty.

"Father, father, what is the matter?"

He fingered the books on the table and fell into a state of profound thought. He did not hear the door open behind him.

Ruth, freshly clad and wholly recovered from her experience, wondered at her father's attitude. She stepped softly toward him. He did not turn. She went nearer. She laid her soft hands on his shoulder and then, as if the fingers of life long fear were touching the very nerves of his being, Thomas Gallon slowly twisted his head by a supreme effort of will to see the sight which of all things in the world he did not want to see—the face of his enemy.

By the magic of the strange phantasmagoria which represents our mental processes if we look at them carefully he did see the face of Harry Wilkerson.

"A-a-a-h!" he breathed. His eyes closed, compelled to by his troubled conscience, but he was recalled by a loved and familiar voice; it was Ruth bending over him, saying, "Father, father, what is the matter?"

The old man suddenly looked up, still fearful that he was to see that feared and hated face. "Ruth!" he said, and it struck him that on her face was a look almost of terror.

He must reassure her. Dread and fear and terror do not belong in the hearts of maidens. By a tremendous effort he nerved himself together and smiled.

But there was something in his tone that made Ruth draw back. In her innocence she had not learned to discern the difference between the various made passions that govern this world. She was still afraid. She crept out the door.

As Ruth closed the door softly behind her she saw a light burning in John Dorr's cabin, and there flooded over her a sense of relief that there was some one to whom she could go. Careless of maiden modesty, western girl as she was, obsessed by the fear of that strange scene she had just left in the bungalow, she fled up the hill toward that one beacon that held out hope of life and—did she know it?—love.

Once at the door she knocked hard because it seemed to her that she had been pursued up the hill by some strange and miserable demon.

"John, John!" she cried.

The door was flung open, and he appeared, his bulk filling the yellow opening from jamb to jamb.

The moment he appeared it came over her that she had done an unconventional thing, yet there was that demon of fear creeping up the hill after her, and she turned her eyes to the kind, brave face of the engineer and held out her slender arms and whispered: "John, I don't understand. Something has happened. I am scared."

John Dorr looked down at her fair face for a moment and shut his eyelids. Was it true that she had finally come to him? He, too, felt the presage of dread. Way down the hill, across the gulch drenched in moonlight and shadows, it seemed to him that he saw one of those grotesque and impossible figures, mirages of the desert night. Then he took Ruth into his strong arms.

Thus it is in this world that those whose arms are empty feel the fingers of fear at their throats, and only those whose arms are filled can look boldly into the night and defy the fiends of darkness.

And the man whose arms held nothing, whose hands were clinched in an agony of culminating fear, saw through the window a figure of a man on horseback on the crest of the hill.

* * * * * * * *

A tall, dark, stern man, who did not tip the porter, got off the Overland express at Silent Valley. The little hamlet lay there like a mirage of some man's dream. There was but one familiar building in the place, and Harry Wilkerson gazed at it and smiled.

It seems that in that clear dusk which marks the border line between life and death we see things more clearly than at any other time, and Harry Wilkerson, as he looked over the familiar valley, remembered that long night when almost mortally wounded by Thomas Gallon's bullet he had crept to safety. Every peak, gully and gulch was as plain to him as it was on that night, but this time it conveyed a different meaning. During those long hours of agony and thirst years ago this scene had meant to him simply a hell from which he must struggle out. Now it was a paradise he was going to regain.

He had heard a great deal about Gallon's mediocre success, and he did not fully understand why it was that "The Master Key" mine did not pay better. Was it possible that his former partner had not been able to find that rich vein of gold after all? He smiled again. He would find it.

Then there was that girl whose vivacity and beauty he had heard so much about.

Some instinct told him that Gallon must be ever thinking of him, and with the dramatic impulse of a man who has long nursed the hope of bitter vengeance, he planned his reappearance. He would find his old partner alone, and there and then they would once more have it out. This was the reason that he had not taken the motor stage, but had come on horseback, silently watching for his opportunity. His keen eyes scanned the scene below him and easily picked out the bungalow.

Those whom we most want to forget reappear at strange times. Thomas Gallon saw the ghost of the partner he had murdered on the crest of the hill above the mine they had discovered years ago together.

How shall he still save for his daughter Ruth the property for which he gave his happiness?

Gave Wife and Two Children to Man She Loved

NEW YORK, April 23.—John W. Wilson, head of the Empire Towel Supply Company, in the Supreme Court before Justice Shearn and a jury revealed in remarkable testimony that he had given his wife and two children to another because she had told him she loved the "other man."

The testimony came out in Wilson's suit for divorce against his wife, Anna. William Eichenhauer, a well-to-do apartment owner, of No. 2504 Hughes Avenue, Brooklyn, is the "other man."

For more than a year, it was developed from witnesses, Wilson and Eichenhauer have contested for the love of Mrs. Wilson. Wilson finally gave up the fight. He said his wife and her two children are living now in Eichenhauer's home.

Mrs. Wilson did not appear, and upon this silent avowal of a cast die Justice Shearn directed the jury to award a decree of divorce to Wilson.

"OTHER MAN" OWNED HOUSE.

On the stand Mr. Wilson said his marital troubles began in the Hughes avenue house, which is owned by Eichenhauer. The latter and his two children lived in the apartment directly under that occupied by the Wilsons. Soon he began to notice the apparent close friendship of his wife and the landlord.

"I just can't get that man Eichenhauer out of my mind," Wilson quoted his wife as saying to him.

"I began an investigation and learned that Eichenhauer carried a photograph of Mrs. Wilson about with him," asserted the husband. "On the back of the photograph he had written, 'The woman I love.' Once I heard him refer to my wife as a 'tired little kid,' although she weighs more than 180 pounds.

One day, Mr. Wilson swore, he went to his wife's charmer and told him he intended to move.

"Why," he said Eichenhauer asked.

"Because my wife loves you too much," was the alleged answer.

"Yes, and I love her, too," Wilson says Eichenhauer confessed.

MOVED TO ESCAPE CHARMER.

Wilson then moved to the Bronx, and finally to No. 321 Dill Place, Ridgewood, N.J., but his wife refused to leave Brooklyn. He sued for a separation, but withdrew his complaint when his wife decided to return to him. A short time later he again sued for a separation, alleging she had returned to Eichenhauer. Later he changed the action to absolute divorce.

During her application for alimony in the present suit, Mrs. Wilson alleged that her husband was in love with Mrs. Hulda Halvers, an actress, and Mrs. Halvers denied this.

Mrs. Mary Banks, of No. 611 East One Hundred and Seventy-eighth Street, a distant relative of Wilson testified that Mrs. Wilson had told her she loved "the other man."

"She told me Eichenhauer objected to her remaining with Mr. Wilson," said the witness, a youthful matron. "She said she had left Mr. Wilson four times for Mr. Eichenhauer, and she had finally discovered that the latter was the man for her. Once she even told her husband in my presence that she loved Eichenhauer."

TWO SETS OF HAPPY CHILDREN.

Mrs. Anna Ranaweiller, a neighbour of Eichenhauer and Mrs. Wilson, painted a picture of the apparently ideal conditions under which the couple are living.

"Mrs. Wilson is always standing in the doorway waiting for him to come home," said Mrs. Ranaweiller. "On warm evenings they sit on the stoop with their arms about each other, while the two sets of children romp around them.

"The Wilson children call the man 'father,' and his children call Mrs. Wilson 'mother.' I have seen them kiss and act as giddy as two young lovers."

Cost of Paving Hunter Street

Will be Met on the Usual Basis of 40 per cent. to the City and 60 per cent. to Property Owners

The paving of Hunter street under section nine of the Local Improvement Act, provides that forty per cent. of the cost of the work is chargeable to the city, and the remaining sixty per cent. to the property along the street to be benefitted. That is to say, each side of the street will have to contribute thirty per cent. towards the cost of the work, spread over a period of twenty or thirty years, as the case may be. The cost of the work is estimated at $27,700. Of this amount the city will have to pay about $17,000.

At that rate the city will pay a good deal more than forty per cent. of the total cost due to the fact that the total cost of paving the intersections is directly chargeable to the city and also the cost of providing for surface drainage. Ald. Evans is inclined to favour a scheme whereby the whole cost is levied on the property along the street to be paved. To this the Council is not inclined to agree, as the city has established a precedent by adopting the sixty and forty per cent. basis for paving already constructed or under course of construction, and such a change would mean a hardship.

SICKLY CHILDREN PROMPTLY CURED

Baby's Own Tablets are an ideal medicine for little ones. They regulate the bowels and stomach and promptly cure constipation, indigestion, cold and simple fevers, expel worms, cure colic and give baby health and happiness. Concerning them Mrs. Fred VanGorder, Dunnville, Ont., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for my four children and find they always give perfect satisfaction." ## EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

ROMPERS FOR TINY TOTS.

By Anabel Worthington.

Rompers are among the practical garments for children which mothers declare they cannot get along without. Inexpensive themselves, they save the better clothes from wear and too frequent laundering. The rompers illustrated have the front and trousers portion in one piece, with separate back over which the trousers back buttons. The band which does the buttoning continues around the front in the form of a belt. The standing collar and long sleeve may be used, or for summer wear the short sleeve and collarless neck if one prefers that style.

Ginghams costing from five to ten cents a yard are plenty good enough for these practical garments, with perhaps a contrasting piping or some plain color for belt and bands. For four year size, 2⅛ yards of 27 inch gingham, with ⅝ yard of 36 inch contrasting material would be needed. The pattern, No. 7,097 can be obtained in sizes 2, 4 and 6 years.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Life Insurance In a Crisis

Every time a great Crisis occurs LIFE INSURANCE has an opportunity to show what a giant of trength it is. Tremendous burdens are placed upon its shoulders, but it never shirks, never hesitates or groans.

When the Titanic took its awful plunge, carrying 1500 human souls into the deep, thousands of widows and orphans were left throughout the world. LIFE INSURANCE accepted the burden without the quiver of a muscle, and spread its protection around the Globe.

When seven years ago the financial world was labouring under an attack of indigestion due to undigested securities, and people could not get even their own money out of the Savings Banks, LIFE INSURANCE furnished spot cash to its policy holders upon application.

To-day when a gigantic struggle wages across the Seas and it is difficult to get loans from banks or money lenders, they find the solution again in LIFE INSURANCE.

It is to-day saving thousands of men all over the world, not only embarrassment but actual failure.

LIFE INSURANCE protects your wife and family.
" " will meet their needs when you are gone.
" " is always a resource.
" " contributes to your estate.
" " increases your savings.

Every dollar invested in LIFE INSURANCE is sure to come back to your wife and family.

Your credit is made better by the amount of LIFE INSURANCE you carry.

The need for LIFE INSURANCE to every man with a family is as fixed as the daily need for bread, and that need is well met by a policy in THE SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA.

Real Work of War is Done At Night, While Soldiers Spend Days Mostly in Rest and Play

Paris, April 23—To continue the story of my trip along the French battle front, the first instalment of which was cabled yesterday:

Daytime in the trenches is usually quiet beyond an occasional artillery bombardment. The real work is at night. So men during the day sleep in dugouts, or lay about, playing cards and writing letters, all except sentinels on duty.

It is queer to see cigar boxes nailed up as letter boxes, with inscription giving the name of the division and section.

It is strange, where the trenches pass through the woods, to see men perched aloft in the tops as in a ship's crow's nest, watching patiently, guns in hand, for the slightest movement in the enemy's line.

Back of the trenches we visited was a target where sharpshooters practice daily. The target is so arranged that if a man misses the bullets pass on to to the Germans.

We got views of German "frightfulness" during the trip. We were in Amiens when the German aeroplanes made their demonstration against the cathedral. It was early morning, and we were just getting ready to go to the lines, thirty miles distant. Bombs fell only a few hundred yards from us, and killed several women and children. None touched the cathedral.

The major of artillery I have referred to told us of a German attack on his position shortly before our arrival, which was communicated to the French outposts by the screams of women. A French company advanced, but a German officer cried out:

"Don't fire. We have women with us."

The Germans had taken all the women of the village and driven them ahead with a small detachment. The French charged suddenly in the flank and rescued the women, and killed the German drivers, who had got too far ahead of their column. The French artillery then smashed the advance.

At another point we visited was a Russian who had been a prisoner of the Germans and escaped to the French lines. He said that over 300 Russians were in a little village near by, and that the Germans treated them like slaves, and made them do all the work, including looting everything from the houses, all of which was sent to Germany. He said that everything of the slightest value was taken, especially linen and copper.

A Toast in a Cave.

In this section we paid special attention to what went on behind the trenches We viewed the field hospital stations, maid kitchens, officers' quarters—all the dugouts. We even looked at a dugout cowbarn where the colonel's cow peacefully chewed her cud and supplied fresh milk to the officers' mess. Every day she was taken through a trench to a pasture, and brought back at night for milking.

At the end of this portion of the tour we were taken to the officer's dining-room for a glass of wine.

We descended the narrow earth steps below ground, into a cavern 4 feet by 12. A rough pine table ran lengthwise, with benches on either side. There was a small tunnel in the centre of the roof running to the outer world, in which was fixed a pane of window glass.

I noticed that the usual bouquet of wild flowers in a pot made from a German shell occupied the centre of the table.

At one end of the table was our escort's colonel in corduroys and a dozen officers, several in the bright uniforms of the headquarters' staff. The colonel solemnly poured out the wine, and then stood as near straight as possible under the low earth roof.

I knew a toast was coming. I knew it would not be an idle one. This man had been talking of his son and relatives lost in this war, but he deplored all thought of a present peace. His tone was solemn, but with all the grace of the banquet hall, he said: "Gentlemen, to the victory of the forces of civilization I raise my glass."

We drained our cups to the bottom in silence.

An Aviator's Real Grouch.

I only saw one disgruntled man in the French Army. He was an aeroplanist with what I called an honest grouch. We had just arrived at the aero station when this flier appeared from the clouds. As his machine touched the ground he stood in his seat, took off his helmet, and banged it angrily on the ground. His leather coat followed. Then he flung himself over the side and stamped about the field.

He was very young. As we approached him he was investigating a hole in his shoe heel, from which he extracted a shrapnel ball. He then lingered several hours in the wings of the aeroplane, gently breathing curses.

He was asked to explain his trouble. It appears that he had been over the German lines with bombs. Just when he had picked out for destruction a nice place of military value the lever controlling the bombs refused to work, so he was forced to return with the bombs still under the seat of the machine. He pointed at them with loathing. Wile returning he was chased by a German aeroplane. When it got within fifty yards he emptied his revolver at it and saw it creening earthward. He pulled out the weapon and extracted the empty shells, but again pointed to the shells and refused to be comforted.

While we were there, several machines received equipment of bombs. The engines were started, the pilots appeared, got into their leather clothes and climbed aboard.

They did not even bother to speak to those remaining behind. Perhaps this might be their turn never to return, but they simply gave the signal to let go and disappeared into the sky. It is all in the day's work.

I talked with several of these men. All say the French aero fleet is now showing superiority to the German in every way, and that only occasionally is battle offered, and then only when the Germans know the the Frenchman has not a mitrailleuse aboard.

Like all others in the French army these aeronauts, who see more of what is happening than others, pay high tributes to the Germans as a brave, strong enemy, who must be beaten thoroughly in order to be beaten at all. One of them said:

"We fly over them and see almost nothing. There is scarcely a single motor on the roads back of their lines All their transports move at night. If organization were everything they would be invincible."

Last Glimpse of Spring's Glory.

On our last afternoon we were taken to another mountain top, crowned with a dense pine forest. Impenetrable thickets concealed the batteries, painted the same colour as the foliage. Our captain called attention to the barrels of the seventy-fives pointing skyward, cleverly concealed by trees. These guns are specially mounted to bring down aeroplanes. They can swing at any angle and in any direction and be fired as rapidly as revolvers.

We penetrated deeper into the forest to the searchlight station, so cleverly hidden, under pine boughs as to be impossible to discover in the daytime. We climbed up to the platform.

Below we could see for miles down the valley. Near us was a little orchard planted with peach and plum trees in full blossom. At our feet a soldier was playing a violin made from a cigar box. The man played beautifully. Before the war he was first violinist at the opera in Bordeaux. He played, "The Star Spangled Banner," and then broke into an air from Mesenet's "Therese."

Our captain signalled that it was time to leave. We went through the pines toward the peach orchard, the stirring strains of the "Marseillaise" following us.

The odour of peach blossoms filled the air. All the earth was green and fresh.

I realized that springtime had come to France, and with it a greater confidence in the future than ever before in her entire history.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

The Council has hopes of providing sufficient work for the unemployed of the city. This will take the form of street paving and other local improvements.

Satisfied With Paving.

This morning City Engineer Parsons, together with Mr. Gleason of Foley and Gleason, paving contractors, inspected the paving that was laid down last year. They expressed satisfaction with the result.

Appointed Special Officers

The Brantford Hospital Board has recommended that the township and city each appoint a special officer to collect from patients able to pay fees, complaints having been made that many avoid. The new hospital will be opened on April 15th.

Liquor Licenses Renewed

All the liquor licenses in Hamilton—58 hotel, sixteen shop and three club licenses—have been renewed by the Commissioners.

Decided Against Investigation

The Police Commissioners of Windsor have decided against an investigation of the Department unless specific charges are preferred by the Council.

For Soldiers' Wives

A New Magistrate

Mr. Charles F. Maxwell, the new police magistrate of St. Thomas, will assume office on May 1st.

Police Action Deferred

Police action against the jitney traffic in Hamilton has been deferred but the cars will be inspected and prevented from carrying more passengers than specified by the inspector.

London Alderman Dies

Alderman Neil Cooper, who had occupied a seat in London Council almost continually since 1896, died yesterday. He was an auctioneer, and was born in England 60 years ago.

Women Suffrage

Women have been given the privilege of voting in all civic elections in Edmonton.

A Street Carnival

Hamilton Police Commissioners have given the Order of the Moose permission to have a street carnival in the city this summer. Five per cent. of the receipts will go to the Soldiers' Comfort Fund.

A New By-Law

The London city council has ordered the preparation of a by-law to start and close business an hour earlier than at present. The project is being endorsed by the citizens.

Hydro Radial Project

The Hamilton Board of Control has fixed May 12 as the date of the meeting to promote the project of building a Hydro-Radial line from Hamilton to Port Dover.

Spring Skin Troubles are Cured by Zam-Buk

Are you suffering from pimples, blackheads, an irritating rash, any form of eczema, or any other skin trouble? If so, remember that Zam-Buk is the best skin tonic. The rich herbal essences of which Zam-Buk is composed penetrate right to the root of the skin troubles, kill disease germs, and so stimulate the tissues that new healthy skin is quickly formed.

Mr. O. M. Smith, of Edmonton, Alta., was troubled with a blotchy, irritable skin. He tried Zam-Buk, and now says: 'My skin was very blotchy and irritable. I used various remedies, but nothing gave relief until I tried Zam-Buk. It quickly stopped the irritation, and after perseverance with Zam-Buk, I am pleased to say, my skin is again perfectly clear and smooth."

In addition to the ordinary spring skin troubles, Zam-Buk is without equal for serious cases of ulcers, eczema, etc., which have defied all ordinary remedies. Many people have been cured of such, after suffering for years and experimenting in vain with numerous so-called remedies. If you are a victim to any of the more serious forms of skin disease, profit by such experiences, and instead of wasting time and money on useless preparations, try Zam-Buk first.

Zam-Buk is also best for cuts, burns, bruises, piles, etc., or as an embrocation. All druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk. Refuse substitutes; see name on box when buying.

For free trial box, send 1c. stamp, this article, and name of paper, to Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

WOMEN LEAD RIOTS.

Troubles In Trieste Assume a Revolutionary Character.

ROME, April 23.—The Trieste (in Austria) riots are assuming a revolutionary character. Efforts to suppress the revolt have proved useless since the half-starved citizens, especially women whose children are condemned to a lingering death owing to lack of food, have been driven to despair and are practically fighting for their existence. Crowds of women, accompanied by their children, stoned the police, smashed the windows of Government buildings, clubs and hotels wrecked and looted shops and openly shouted, "Long live Italy!"

France Will Care For Orphans

PARIS, April 23.—It was decided yesterday by the Cabinet that children made orphans by the death in the war of their fathers should be cared for by the state The Cabinet considered this matter at length yesterday and determined in principle that these orphans should be made public wards, to be maintained and educated according to a plan to be decided upon later.

The FOUR that STANDS UP in day-by-day service

No matter how handsome a car may be, performance is the thing that counts. And performance is the thing that Studebaker engineers have sought in every little detail of this Studebaker FOUR. For while they have made it as handsome a car as you ever laid eyes on, they have made it, first of all, a car that you can DEPEND ON. A car that STANDS UP in day-by-day service—on hills or on the roads—in any kind of weather.

For into this FOUR at $985 they have built SERVICE-giving quality, stamina, long life, that only Studebaker's long manufacturing experience and unrivaled resources make possible in a car at such a price.

You find over-abundance of POWER—and a FULL-Floating Rear Axle such as only the highest priced cars use—and a COMPLETE equipment of Timken Bearings—127 drop forgings and a delt balance and alignment of the chassis that makes it EASY-riding and EASY-driving, and, above all, LOW in upkeep cost.

See it at your local Studebaker Dealer's and KNOW the quality that Studebaker has built into this FOUR at $1250. It's a "built-in-Canada" car, too. And it's the ideal car for any man.

Horse Was Said To Be Unsound

Allan Payne of Warsaw Mixed Up in a Horse Deal—Case Was Remanded

A case in which the ethics of horse-dealing were expounded was that in which Allan Payne, of Warsaw, alleged that he lost $75 over the purchase of an animal from Thomas Beard, which did not come up to warranty. The case has heard yesterday in the Toronto Police Court.

Michael Patrick Kennedy, V.S., described the animal as a "blocky" mare, fourteen hands high, unsound on the off hind leg and eighteen years old.

"It is only for the purpose of selling them to the Dominion Government that animals of that age are any good," said Crown Attorney Corley.

"I object to my friend geting in evidence of that kind," said Mr. T. C. Robinette, K.C. who defended.

The warranty stated that the mare was a good worker, cost $175, and was seven years old, but the witness said $80 was the limit of her worth. "You could not well drive that horse any place," he stated.

"I would like the case to go to a jury," said counsel for defendant. "There may be points in the case that twelve men would appreciate and which might be overlooked here."

"If there is any man understands horse-thieving under the head of trading it is myself," said the magistrate. "They are generally as crooked as can be and it should be stopped."

"This is a case I do not want passed over lightly," said Mr. Corley. "This man carries on business under two names and I have numerous complaints."

The case was remanded.

Was Unable to Resist Plea of Sick Daughter

NEW YORK, April 23.—Unable to resist a plea in a decoy letter to come back to his sixteen-year-old daughter, who was dying, Anton Hehn, a rich provision dealer of Brooklyn, who on January 18 eloped to California with Mrs. Alfred Graham, was arrested last evening as he was about to enter his home, at Clarendon road and East Twenty-first street, Brooklyn.

Despite the fact that no criminal charge was made against him, Hehn was hurried to the Raymond street jail, in default of $5,000 bail, to insure his appearance in an alienation suit for $50,000, brought by Alfred Graham, who lives at No. 1012 Flatbush avenue. He spent the night in jail.

The decoy letter was written by Graham's lawyer. On Monday Miss Grace Maxwell, a friend of Mrs. Graham, received a letter from her, dated Oakland, Cal., in which she wrote:

"I did go away with Mr. H., and he has been a jewel to me—more than a husband. He has been terribly worried by the news of Catherine's illness. Being a Catholic, he feels he must go back. He has been pleading with me all day to go back before they put the girl in her grave. We will arrive on Tuesday."

Hehn was greatly upset when he discovered that the letter was a decoy and that his daughter was in her usual health. Mrs. Graham accompanied Mr. Hehn back, but he refused to divulge her stopping place.

The Grahams were married in 1905, and lived very happily until they met Hehn. The latter had one of the most extensive provision establishments in Brooklyn, with branches all over Greater New York.

For military purposes a United States army officer has designed an automobile that will carry 14 men, with full equipment and three days' rations, 800 miles on one filling of its fuel tanks.

Devastation in Poland Put at $2,588,500,000

PARIS, April 23 — The following statistics of the devastation of Poland have been communicated to me by a trustworthy source.

More than half of Russian Poland has been overrun by the armies, and partly or entirely destroyed. Of 27,000 villages in the invaded districts 5,500 were devastated and pillaged, and 1,000 utterly destroyed by fire. Of 10,000 farms, 900 were completely destroyed, and 100 towns partly or entirely destroyed.

Agriculture lost most heavily. Small farmers lost more than $36,000,000 and larger proprietors $16,500,000. The total agrarian loss is computed at $2,311,250,000 and the individual loss $142,500,000.

The urban population suffered to the extent of $23,500,000; public property, such as churches, roads and railways, $68,500,000, and other general losses amount to $72,750,000. The number of persons out of work and starving grows daily. The misery is greater than can possibly be relieved by official methods.

CANADIANS' CONDUCT MAGNIFICENT SAYS WAR OFFICE

"Gallantry and Determination Saved The Situation"

RECAPTURED LOST GUNS FROM THE ENEMY

CANADIAN TROOPS IN THICK OF FIGHTING COME THROUGH WITH FLYING COLOURS

Casualties Among the First Contingent Were Heavy Announces London War Office in Official Statement, But the Determination and Gallantry of Canadians Saved the Situation When French Troops Fell Back and Left Their Flank Exposed.

"THEIR CONDUCT MAGNIFICENT THROUGHOUT"

Special Cable to The Examiner:

The fighting for the ground into which the Germans penetrated between Steenstraate and Langemarck still continues. The loss of this part of the line laid bare the left of the Canadian Division, which was forced to fall back in order to keep in touch with the right of the neighbouring troops.

In the rear of the latter had been 4 Canadian 4.7 inch Guns which thus passed into the hands of the enemy. But some hours later the Canadians made a most brilliant and successful advance, recapturing these guns.

The Canadians had many casualties, but their gallantry and determination undoubtedly saved the situation. Their conduct has been magnificent throughout.

The official despatches do not say what Brigades of the Canadian Contingent were engaged. That will not likely be known definitely until the casualty lists are published from Ottawa.

It will be noticed it was the 4.7 guns of the Canadians that figured in the British official statement as having been captured by the Germans, then retaken by the Canadians. These were the Canadian "heavy" artillery—all in fact which were with the contingent. The British despatches say nothing about the Canadian field artillery, the 18-pounders, with the Canadian contingent.

In the official statement from Berlin yesterday the Germans claimed the capture of four heavy guns, and other guns. These were evidently the four guns referred to in the above despatch, but Berlin did not mention their recapture by the Canadians.

TO-DAY'S GERMAN STATEMENT

BERLIN, April 24.---The German official report was as follows:

"The attempts of the enemy to recapture the lost territory north and north east of Ypres have failed. The French and British attacks have been broken down by the accuracy of the German fire. The number of English and French prisoners has been increased to 2470. We have taken 35 cannon, besides a large number of machine guns, rifles, much ammunition and war materials.

NO TIME NOW TO WASTE ON TALK OF PEACE

Prominent Leaders in Many Walks of Life in Great Britain are Agreed That This is Not Proper Time For Discussion

INTERESTING OPINIONS

(Copyright, 1915, Central News, by T. P. O'Connor.)

LONDON, April 24.—The opinion of all England is in hearty agreement with the opinion expressed by President Emeritus Elliott of Harvard that peace at the present time can not be considered.

Seeing in the cabled extracts from newspapers of the United States the discussion that is going on there, I have sought expressions from leading and typical figures of the different political parties of England. I found, in the first place, some disinclination to discuss the question of peace terms, not because of any doubt or indecision existing in the minds of those interviewed, but because we have all felt that the futile proposals of Germany's mouthpieces in America have already been justly appraised and rejected by the sound political instinct of the American people.

The most representative and the most respected spokesmen of American opinion have said what all here feel, in much the same words that would be employed by Great Britain's political leaders.

Should Be No Doubt.

All of those whom I have interviewed have felt that it would be unfair to America and even unfair to Germany if there were left the least doubt as to Great Britain's feeling on the question of peace terms.

I deliberately refrained from interviewing the members of the ministry, in order that what expressions I procured might be those of men independent of official ties. Asquith's speech in the Guild Hall last November sufficiently indicated the views which he yet holds. Sir Edward Grey, Secretary of Foreign Affairs, has indicated in his speeches virtually the same opinion.

The Rt. Hon. Bonar Law, the Unionist leader, writes me, "In my opinion any discussion of terms of peace is not only premature at the present time, but is futile so far as the British Empire is concerned. The only advantage we can gain in this war is security as to the future. No terms of peace conceivable at present would give that security."

Austen Chamberlain, who has inherited all of his father's political sagacity, writes me, "I agree with President Elliot that it is worse than useless to talk of peace while the forces which provoked the war, and which would provoke another war at their own time remain unchecked. Germany is still in occupation of territory which she has occupied in defiance of the laws of nations and of her own pledged word."

The Labour Party.

I pass to the Labour Party. Arthur Henderson, who has virtually acted as leader since Ramsay MacDonald took up his somewhat hostile attitude in regard to the war, gives me this expression:

"I can only repeat that I am opposed to any proposals or any terms on the part of the government at present."

Stephen Walsh is one of the most prominent and most eloquent members of the Labour Party. Of Irish descent, the son had advantages which were denied his father, for he received the highest degree which ever an Irishman obtained from an English university. His son has joined the army and will soon be at the front. Despite this, Stephen dismissed the idea of peace contemptuously, almost angrily.

"I can not imagine anything more visionary, more ill-timed or more evil

THE CRITICAL MOMENT HAS NOW ARRIVED

Latest German Effort to Break Through British Line is the Capture of Ypres—Regarded as Key to Calais

POURING IN TROOPS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 24.—Discussing the latest German effort to break through the British lines at Ypres the military correspondent of The Daily Mail to-day says:

"The critical moment has arrived. The immediate object of the Germans is the capture of Ypres, which they regard as the key to Calais. For this movement picked troops have been transported to the Flanders front, as evidenced by the repeated reports from Belgium. The British blow at hill No. 60 was an effort to strike first. If the German report of the capture of four heavy guns is true the enemy must have made an advance of two or three miles, as the heavy guns are never placed near the front and often are four and five miles behind the advanced trenches. The Germans are still bringing up large reinforcements, throwing every available man into the gap. They have probably half a million men available without depleting the eastern front, and many men might be spared from Poland where the roads render military operations impossible for the present."

An Interesting Book

The little book, "Glimpses of South America and Experiences There" is having a phenominally rapid sale. Over 20,000 copies are exhausted. This little work came out of Mr. McEwan's own experiences in the heart of Brazil. He also had close contact with the Governors and leaders in the Coast Cities.

"Very, very interesting" — Ralph Connor.

"Full of valuable information" — Rev. Thos. Bennett.

"A Literary Gem" — An Ottawa Friend.

"You will not read it through with out tears"—Rev. Mr. Sutherland.

"The intention of the book is, of course, missionary, but it contains much secular information"—Edw. H. Tiffany, K.C.

"It's sure to be read" — Dr. F. Munroe.

"Everybody wants it".—Dr. A. McMillan.

"An excellent resume of conditions as they are in Brazil to-day" — Dr. Alguire, M.P.

"I wish all Canada would read it, for we know little about a country, the knowledge of which would be of mutual benefit to us both."—Hon. Sir G. E. Foster.

"I can recommend it to my friends" —Dr. D. McIntyre, Supt. Schools, Winnipeg.

"Exceedingly interesting and supplies much information of a country of which, generally speaking, Canadians know very little."—The Presbyterian Witness.

"Mr. McEwan is a writer of much lucidity, showing in his little book (Glimpses of South America) a pronounced ability of collecting facts, and presenting them in a very interesting and concise form"—The Halifax Daily Chronicle.

"It has this advantage, that you can read it through at a sitting. It is not burdened with tiresome details" —The Canadian Commonwealth.

CITY IS STIRRED BY NEWS

Reports of Canadian Troops Part in Fierce Fighting in Belgium Causes Excitement, Many Inquiries Made

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The news of the participation of the Canadian forces in the fierce fighting which marked the German advance north of Ypres, quickly spread around after it was bulletined by the Examiner, this morning, and caused great excitement. "Heavy casualties among the Canadians" was a message that has stirred the people of Peterborough more than anything that has happened since the early days of the war. The Examiner has had many inquiries as to what units were engaged, and if the Peterborough boys were in the fighting. So far it is impossible to state what Canadian froces were involved, but the War Office statemnt that the "left flank of the Canadian division" was turned seems certain proof that the whole Canadian contingent had been brought together as a complete division, and in this case a large part of the Canadians must have taken part. Probably not until the casualty lists are announced will there be definite news on this point. Casualty among the officers will be given out first, and this list will give an indication of the forces engaged.

The Peterborough infantrymen are in A Company of the 2nd Battalion, First Brigade, and the local artillerymen with the 4th Battery, 3rd Brigade. In addition, there are Peterborough men in many other units of the Canadian contingent, and there will be great anxiety until definite news of the engagement is received.

Belleville Notes.

Belleville, April 24—Little is happening in military circles here which would warrant the expenditure of valuable space and printeds' ink.

The daily routine is adhered to, even to the point of monotony and one is inclined to parady a quotation from "Colonel Burnaby's ride to Kheva," and ask: "Was it yesterday, this day week, or a month ago, that I left Peterborough?"

Days and dates are certainly jumbled together, and each succeeding one is so like the other that it might be either of the above mentioned periods, or even, as it seems, a much longer one.

Still "Hope springs eternal in the human breast," and we are all earnestly hoping we may not be cooped for many more weeks in this bewitching city.

Rumour hos it that we are to go into camp at Barriefield about May 15th. Let us pray for once". Rumour may prove true. A change is as good as a rest, and any good uncontaminated act would be welcome to the canned variety we are getting here. We know that the sanitary experts have dubbed it O.K., yet I think we would rather be minus the experts and plus the fresh air.

It is a good soldier's privilege to "grouch," and now I have registered mine, let me see if I can find any bright spots upon the horizon?

Well, the Y.M.C.A. tent is, perhaps, the greatest boon imaginable. It is a sort of oasis in the desert of monotony, and every praise is due to the management. And no scant praise is due to the ladies of Belleville, who have almost nightly, under its auspices, given of their talents, to enliven our evenings and make them sociable.

Then, of course, there is the canteen, where you can get apple and raisen tarts at 5c apiece, and for another 5c. a soft, soft drink to wash it down, and molasses candy, too, to make you want more soft drink, and, joy of joys, if you have no money, you may have a book of coupons, ex-

CANUCKS THREATENED WITH ANNIHILATION

Sudden Retirement of the French Force Left Canadians Left Flank Dangling in the Air and They Had to Retreat or Be Annihilated

WITH FLYING COLOURS

Special Wire to The Examiner:

TORONTO, April 24.—The Toronto Star's war review in explaining yesterday's fight, says:

"The fact is that the Germans suddenly overwhelmed the French force between Langemarck and Bixschoote on Thursday night and outflanked the first Canadian division, threatening it with wholesale capture. This compelled the Canadian contingent to retire precipitately abandoning all of its four 60 pounders, or 4.7 inch guns, and probably many of the forty-eight 18 pounders. The Germans claim to have captured thirty guiguns beside the sixty pounders, and as the heavier guns, know legally as garrison artillery, were well in the rear of the lighter field guns, it is probable that a number of these were taken. It was no fault of the Canadians that they yielded ground. They composed the extreme north wing of the entire British line in France and Belgium, and when the French force holding a few miles of the line between them and the Belgians on the north, retired to the west of the canal, three miles away, they left the Canadians' left wing dangling in the air, with the enemy swarming to the rear of our force. Annihilation or immediate retreat was the only option given them, and they did well to extricate themselves without more serious losses. A situation of that kind is the severest test of discipline any troops can endure and it is no idle boast to say that the Canadians came through with flying colours."

Major General Sam Hughes Says Re-taking of Canadian Guns Will Sound Good to All Canada

MUST EXPECT CASUALTIES

SPECIAL WIRE TO THE EXAMINER:

OTTAWA, Ont., April 24.— "They would never leave these guns in the hands of the Germans," said Major-General Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia to the Examiner this morning when shown the British war office statement.

"They have done what was expected of them, what we all know they could do, and that was their duty. Yes, this despatch makes us proud more than ever of them. I am sorry that the despatch says there were many casualties, but we must be prepared for these. However, the news of the retaking of the guns will sound good to all Canada. They could never have left them in the hands of the Germans."

The 4.7 guns which are mentioned in the despatch from the British war office this morning as having been captured by the Germans and brilliantly regained by the Canadian forces, were attached to the heavy artillery battery recruited in Montreal. Major F. C. Magee was in command of this battery when it left Canada, his officers being Captain G. E. Hall and Lieuts. A. Irving, J. A. Dyan, W. H. Robb and G. H. D. Reed. The latter, a former Peterborough man, is now in Canada, having been invalided home.

At the militia department this morning it was stated that there may have been a change in the personnel of officers of this battery since it has been in France, but no official information to this effect is in possession of the department.

Donations Will Still Be Received

Young Ladies Have Not Sent Sheets and Towels Yet in Order to Give Others Opportunity to Assist.

CASH ACCEPTED

The members of the Business Girls' Club have not sent their sheets and towels which they received in the "shower" on Thursday evening last, to the hospital, which they propose to endow, as yet, and anyone who would like to help can do so by sending their contribution to the music store of Mr. J. M. Greene or give them to any members of the Club whom they happen to know.

The response on Thursday evening was gratifying, but many more towels and sheets are needed for our wounded soldiers and it is up to the citizens of this city to do their share. The young ladies are particularly anxious to get a large number of sheets. Many readers of the Examiner have responded nobly to the appeals. Every reader is urged to have a part in the work. Will you help?

If you cannot conveniently make a purchase yourself just send along some money and the ladies in charge will be able to buy what is most needed. There have been quite a few donations in cash from one dollar up. One gentleman brought a five dollar bill, apologizing at the same time for the smallness of his gift. He was surprised to learn what five dollars actually represented when expressed in terms of sheets and towels.

No great sacrifice of time or money is asked. For those who have little of the latter to spare, this shower gives an opportunity to do something for the soldiers at an expenditure of only a few cents. Those who can afford to give generously could ask no better returns for their money, and many must give generously, as always, to make up for those who do not give at all.

Nor will the purchasing take up much time. The clerks in the stores know what is wanted and it is only for you to choose the number and the price.

The contributions already received by the Business Girls' Club will be held for a few days in order to give others an opportunity to send along whatever they can spare.

WORK ON NEW BUILDINGS

The two new Sunday school buildings being erected by the Salvation Army at Byersville and near Bradley's school house are going on apace.

The excavation for the Byersville building has been completed, and the walls will be put in next week.

The building at Bradley's is boarded in and will be finished in about two weeks.

To-night at the Temple special music is being provided for one hour by the band and special services prior to the great world-wide self denial effort of the Army will take place to-morrow and the following week. All are invited.

HOUSE CLEANING AND DUST.

The civic powers-that-be are not ladies' men, apparently. The head of civic authority "got himself in wrong" by failure, as is alleged, to keep his promise regarding some things the ladies wanted. And now the civic authorities are evidently not lying awake nights to please the ladies of the household, the bone and sinew of home and home happiness. This is the season of spring-cleaning; and the house-cleaning that has been done might as well not have been done at all—all on account of the dust. The city never had at this time of year such a universal and iniquitous scourge as it has had this year. The dust has been bad the past eight or ten days. The public seems to have come to the ground—and very dusty ground it is—between the two stools of street watering and oiling. The city fathers will give us neither oil nor water. There may be difficulties in the way; but it is the work of capable men to conquer difficulties. Any pincompoop could rule a country or a city, or command an army, if there were no difficulties in the way—if these things ran themselves. It is the capable man that overcomes difficulties. Anyway, we all know that the dust is a most annoying nuisance. We have a little breathing spell now in which the dust does not play the principal part, thanks to a little trickle of rain; but if the sun comes out hot, in a few hours the dust will resume its sway. The dust in our streets is not only a foe to health, but a temporary cause of unemployment. Housekeepers send their charwomen home because it is no use to "housechan" while the dust is unconquered; painters stand idly by their work of house-painting because the owner won't allow paint to be put on that will be obliterated by dust before it dries. In the matter of dealing with the street dust the city fathers might well adopt the sentiment of Macbeth, when he was screwing up his courage to knife King Duncan—

"If t'were done when 'tis done, it were well
It were done quickly."

They should give us either oil or water "quickly." They owe the citizens something in this regard—let them down with the dust.

KILL THE CATERPILLARS.

As "eternal vigilance is said to be the price of liberty," so timely vigilance and prompt action are the price of immunity from the ravages and annoyance of the tent caterpillar. It is necessary to keep on the watch. This morning a gentleman left with The Examiner a twig containing a cluster of fully hatched caterpillars, about one-quarter of an inch in length. There are only two things, presently available and practicable, that will destroy or minimize the scourge of caterpillars this summer. One is a killing frost, that will destroy, not only the caterpillars, but a good deal of tender, early vegetation. But we might as well have this vegetation killed by frost as devoured by caterpillars. Another thing is to make diligent search—at once—to discover the little tents, nearly always located in the crotch of a twig. If the twig is small cut it off and burn it with fire; if too large, the cluster of worms can be easily crushed. As was to be expected our sample of early caterpillars was hatched in a choke cherry (Prunus Virginiana or demisea of the botanists). This tree is above all trees and shrubs the favourite nesting place of the tent caterpillar. On that account alone it should not be permitted to grow. Yet we see in numerous places these trees allowed to grow and become a shelter for our worst insect pest. It should be ruthlessly destroyed wherever found. And this is no easy matter; for it has the vitality of all evil weeds. It can only be destroyed by rooting it out thoroughly—this means literally rooting it out, for if one root is left it is likely to throw up shoots and grow. The city has an opportunity to pass a by-law enforcing the destruction of choke cherry trees — the very most dangerous nesting places of the caterpillars, the only fruit it grows worth attention. If, in addition to having been smothered with dust, we are to be eaten of caterpillars, the joy of living will become a minus quantity. If the city won't act, and it probably won't, individual citizens should, without a moment's delay, organize a caterpillar-hunt. Search out the infant tents and destroy the caterpillars, before the leaves come out to give them food, and before they emerge from their tents and spread over our premises and persons. Killing them outright is the only way, and now, now is the only proper time to do the work, or to begin to do the work. And the work to be effective must become general. It won't do much good to the individual citizen, to destroy the caterpillars on his premises, if his neighbours neglect the work, and virtually by neglect foster the caterpillars, to invade the premises of their good neighbour who has done his duty to himself and the public, by his work of caterpillar destruction.

MAKING JACK A DULL BOY.

"All work and no play," we are proverbially and truthfully assured, "make Jack a dull boy." Play for children is part of the divine plan of development. As lambs and kittens frisk and frolic to develop their muscle, so in children is implanted the instinct of play and the activity it involves; to aid their physical development, and keep their active little minds away from mischief. Pedestrians complain of the nuisance of children running go-carts in the streets, and boys and youths pitching balls at the risk of passers-by. Of course these things are nuisances, but what would you do? The young must play; and if there is no other place provided, they will use the streets and sidewalks. Last year there was considerable spasmodic fuss over the question of providing playgrounds; nothing has been done.

The attempt to revive the spirit of lacrosse in the city this season has demonstrated the dearth of suitable convenient and adequate free recreation grounds Riverside Park is something worth while; but juvenile sporting clubs can't pay the rental demanded. Riverside Park should be made a play park, and if it were acquired by the city might be converted into a useful and beautiful spot. It can be greatly enlarged, so as to have its area doubled or trebled. At Hunter street the ground now occupied by buildings could be added to the park; and to the south the river flats composed of unsightly marsh and miasmatic mud, and useless for any purpose, could be added. The expense of this need not be great.. By building a retaining wall from the Hunter Street Bridge south to the C.P.R. bridge, and east of the channel of the river, and filling the space thus enclosed with dredgings from the river, the cost of filling would be reduced to a negligible minimum; and, in time we should have the foundation for acres and acres of ground space that could be used as recreation grounds. The dredging would improve the navigation channel, and the Department of Railways and Canals might be induced to financially assist. The idea seems to be worth considering. If it were carried into effect we should in a few years have adequate recreation grounds reclaimed from waste, right in the heart of the city. We have enough parks for the use of the elders, and we should have in Riverside Park a magnificent stretch of recreation area; and a presently acute want would be partially filled.

We should pay greater attention to the question of playgrounds, and it is hoped that as a measure of partial and temporary, but important relief, the city and the public will give countenance and support to the efforts of the Local Council of Women aimed at providing supervised playgrounds, especially during the recess from school days. At present, though the schools close for the long summer days, the education of the children still continues. They are forced to attend the devil's school, which is the streets. This is especially true of the streets at night; but it is to a large extent true of day play in the streets, where no supervision is possible; and where good children stand a splendid chance of being made as bad as the inevitable proportion of bad children to be found in the streets every day. At present there is no other place for the great majority of our children to play in, except the streets. And there will be no other place for them to play so long as the grown-up-children of our city—in authority and out of authority—play with the question of providing playgrounds.

OFFICERS ELECTED

At a meeting of the Morning Musical Society held on Thursday, April 23rd, the following officers were elected for the season of 1915-16:

President—Mrs. R. Glidden.

Vice-Presidents, Mrs. John Allan, Mrs. E. V. Frederick, and Mrs. N. D. Buchanan.

Treasurer, Mrs. C. Fessenden.

Secretary, Mrs. G. E. Porter.

Mrs. Holden, Miss Hurley, Miss Dean and Mrs. Renwick were added to the executive committee, and Miss Hurley to the programme committee.

The Society will resume its meetings in October.

Details of the Work Done For Wounded Soldiers at the Front

One of the most interesting accounts of the work that is being done for the wounded and sick at the front is sent in a letter from Mrs. Chauncey Depew to her sister. Since the outbreak of hostilities Mr. and Mrs. Depew have generously converted their chateau, fourteen miles north of Compiegne, on the main railroad from Brussels to Paris, into a hospital, which is only three miles from the firing line and is in close proximity to the German trenches that the strains of the 'Watch Am Rhine" can be clearly heard in the chateau.

Mrs. Depew gives the following graphic description of the work that is being carried on in her chateau: "We are getting better organized every day and the hospital and the ambulance service is really very good now. The latter, they say, is the best at the front. We are now in direct telephone communication with the trenches. As soon as the men are hurt someone 'phones for ambulances and sometimes they arrive at the poste de secours before the wounded cases are brought out of the trenches. They send us only the very worst cases and lately they have seemed more horrible as the Germans are using bombs now filled with nails and bits of old iron. Last Thursday we heard there were ten wounded, and two died before they could be put into the ambulances and four almost immediately after they arrived here. They were fairly torn to bits.

"We are so grateful to all the kind friends who have helped us, and, thanks to them, we have been able to buy one ambulance wonderfully fitted up. The others belong to the British Red Cross or to private persons who have joined our staff. We have also been able to buy a radiograph, which saves so much suffering, and many of the instruments and stores for the operating room. Beyond that, I have been able to distribute blankets, flannel night shirts and bed socks to the poor little field [illegible] for the most part are so wretched I would not believe their condition had I not seen it.

(These hospitals have now been closed down by the French Government and only the hospitals under the authority of the Army Medical Corps or Red Cross Society are permitted to be used.)

"The other day I was in a room. It was heated—that was the only good quality I saw that existed—mattresses made of straw covered with sacking and placed on three boards and a boelter made like the mattress. On these sacks of straw, covered with a blanket, were men sick with pneumonia, typhoid, bronchitis, etc., and they could not even be undressed. The extent of their undressing was taking off their boots. They had nothing but a wagon with no springs to take them to the nearest hospital, miles away, and also they were very far from the railway. The doctor in charge asked if I could get them a thermometer. Thanks to friends, we have been able to better these conditions in several similar places.

Mrs. Depew continues: "The administration confines its efforts to the large hospitals so you must know that we are absolutely at the front, so much so that last week the British Red Cross, who have sent us several nurses, thought they would have to take them away as we are so near the firing line. It was only on my signing a paper saying we would discharge them in time if danger arose, and their signing a paper saying they would take all responsibility of danger upon themselves that they were allowed to stay. If we found we should be in the firing lines we would have to leave, but that does not seem probable at present.

"I personally have seen to their distribution of blankets, sweaters, mufflers, shirts and waistcoats. I gave them only where the officer in charge says they are really needed. Th other day I gave eleven dozen socks knitted in Nova Scotia to the Moroccans, who, poor things, suffer most horribly with cold. They, and in fact, all said: "How kind of people in far-away countries to think of us."

Mrs. Depew says that she was able to give some of the tetanus serum that was sent and that it was deeply appreciated. Also a good supply of chloroform has lately arrived, so that it can now be given to various postes de secours. (Note. A large supply of tetanus serum has been ordered by the British Government from Toronto University and will be sent out at once).

Mrs. Depew continues: "We have only two of our own servants with us and have to depend on people around here for work. The laundry work is colossal; peasants do that supervised by our old coachman and his wife. We can have only two candles to burn as the electricity must be kept for the radiograph and operating room, so it is not always the height of comfort. The things that have to be constantly renewed in the wards and operating room and the accessories of the motor ambulances are what we need money for, and we should be grateful for any sums, large or small.

"We now have arranged with the British Red Cross to send our convalescent men straight through to the Paris Hospital as soon as they can be moved, even lying down, to give place to others and when you think of the others waiting in cold stations for a train to carry them you can see the difference. I could tell you some very interesting things but my lips are sealed. It is a hard life but a most thrilling and interesting one. Our surgeons may well be proud of their record—no tetanus, only two cases of gangrene. One man who had his arm amputated and who we thought could not live, is now convalescent and has gone to Paris. Best of all, not one case that has gone from this hospital, but has done well, and 22 men already back at the front.

"We have had terribly cold weather lately and the suffering has been great. A comparative calm has existed for a few days, but they say it is the lull before the storm. (This letter was written before the offensive attempted by the Germans at La Bassee and Soissons). I must tell you that General Castleman, in whose army corps we are, after a thorough inspection, gave us a high recommendation to the British Red Cross, and we are very content. Do you realize, however, that no one from here [illegible] out a military permit? One feels a real prisoner, but they are quite right."

This is the letter from a lady who, situated a short distance from the firing lines, is seeing the real and true realities of war. It cannot fail to very deeply impress all who read it and will, perhaps, be the means of inspiring many in this country to do their share on behalf of the brave men who are doing their work so nobly and suffering so greatly. We cannot begin to realize the horrors of this terrible war until we are near the zone of fighting and see day and night the constant stream of wounded and maimed men, many of them in the prime of life, being brought in from the trenches after a hard fight.

These men are fighting to keep inviolate our homes and liberty, and our very national existence. It will not be enough to thank them and cheer them when they return but the time to assist is NOW, when they are bearing the privations and misery of this dreadful conflict without a murmur, and always with a smile. They are doing much for us; they are giving all they have, their very lives, that we may rest secure and emerge from this world war greater than ever. What are we doing for them? Can we do too much?

This country has risen splendidly to the occasion, and in every part of the Dominion our women are making great sacrifices for the soldier men, in high positions and with great responsibilities, are devoting their time to the work of the Red Cross and patriotic associations as well as giving of their wealth that the work may be carried on with greater energy as the war continues and as our Canadian troops take their places in the battle line. He that gives now, gives twice.

(It may be asked by our readers how the socks from Nova Scotia reached the Moroccans? Probably in this way. The Nova Scotia branch sent them to the Canadian Red Cross in London. From there they were sent to the British Red Cross, and from there to the Paris depot. From the Paris depot they probably went to the Chateau d'Annel hospital, which is recognized under the British Red Cross.)

Medical and surgical supplies, warm clothing of all kinds, tobacco, in all forms, are badly needed. These may be sent to the different provincial headquarters or to main headquarters at 77 King Sreet, East, Toronto.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, April 24.— Bulges in some of the leading issues was a feature of to-day's market. For a short session the market was unusually active and inclined to be bullish towards the close. U. S. opened at 56 3-4 and closed at 59 1-8. Bethlehem Steel gained a point, while Mexican petroleum opened at 93 and closed at 95 1-4. The last named stock is getting near the high water market and is considered by many in the light of a sale.

Total sales amounted to 455,000.

KING DRINKS BARLEY WATER SINCE ROYAL TABLE WENT DRY

LONDON, April 24.—Pleas for cider, small beer and drinks of low percentages of alcohol are filling the open forum columns of the newspapers. The rector of Exeter College advocates the cause of cider. He says: "If the government determines that total prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcohol is possible and is the only means of dealing with the drink trouble that diminishes our war efficiency every patriotic citizen will support it. But such a measure, which would bar Devonshire, for instance, from its innocent and immemorial habit of drinking cider, might produce grave discontent and law breaking."

Another writer in the Times says: "My friends in Scotland have often told me that there was little or no drunkenness in Scotland in the eighteenth century, before the taxation of the Napoleonic wars had extinguished the custom of drinking small beer. There is surely no reason why the blunder should be repeated as regards this country in these days.'

"Have the teetotalers," asks a correspondent, "never heard of extract of malt as a tonic for invalids? Or of stout to restore health and vigour? Malt and hops are a god tonic for the stomach, taken in moderation in the shape of beer, and have been used by our workingmen for 600 years ore more. Let Mr. Lloyd George reduce the tax on beer to reasonable limits and then call the brewers together and put them on their honour to brew good beer with only malt and hops, and also appoint trustworthy men to see that it is done—any brewer breaking his word to be heavily fined."

All sorts of temperance drinks are being served on the tables at Windsor Castle, now that King George has put into effect his decision that no wines, spirits or beer shall be consumed in any of his houses. The King's favourite drink, it is said, is barley water, amde in the ordinary way by pouring boiling water on the barley, letting it boil for a short time and then straining it and adding a little leman. The King also is found of homemade lemonade.

Many applications have been received at Lloyds for insurance to cover the risk of the total prohibition of spirituous liquors, but as a rule the applicants have been unwilling to pay the high rates asked. Such insurance as has been written has been at rates of from thirty to thirty-five per cent.

Fifty per cent. has been paid to cover the risk of an increase in the duty on spirits in the forthcoming budget, and insurance also has been taken against the risk of increased duties on a number of other commodities, including tobacco, cocoa, tea and sugar.

Members of British Flying Corps Unrivalled as Aerial Fighters

LONDON, April 23.— After six months of war the members of the royal flying corps stand unrivaled as aerial fighters, and the man who has done more than any one else to make them the eyes and ears of the British army is Lieut. Gen. Sir David Henderson. Last August Sir David went to France with great responsibilities resting on his shoulders. He was the first man in the army to command a corps of air fighters. Being a pioneer of a new form of military tactics, he had to plan his campaign entirely on his own initiation, as air craft in any force had never before worked in conjunction with an army in action.

The extent to which he succeeded can be gauged from the words of Sir John French, who recently said in a despatch to Lord Kitchener: "I wish particularly to bring to your lordship's notice the admirable work done by the royal flying corps under Sir David Henderson. Their skill, energy and perseverance have been beyond all praise."

Because he carries on his work so unobtrusively few people know that for over two years Sir David Henderson quietly trained his royal flying corps on Salisbury plain and at other military aviation bases under conditions as near as possible to those of actual warfare.

The British aviators learned to carry out their military duties 2,000 feet above the earth with the same precision that a foot soldier manoeuvres in the safer precincts of the drill ground. This meant months of continual flying, under the supervision of Sir David Henderson. On account of this, when Sir David took his men to France six months ago they proved such capable aerial fighters and scouts that in the first weeks of the campaign they rendered invaluable aid to the British army during the memorable retreat from Mons. Since then their deeds—or those not hidden by the censor—are famous.

The head of the flying corps is himself a fearless aviator. He learned to pilot an aeroplane at the age of 50, thus rivalling Prince Henry of Prussia, the Kaiser's brother, who became an aviator in his forty-ninth year.

Before taking up aviation—he first became interested in the science as a hobby—Sir David earned a high reputation as a military chief. He entered the army in 1883 when he went from Sandhurst to the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. He served in the Sudan and in South Africa. In the latter campaign he was wounded, twice mentioned in despatches, and awarded the D.S.O. His enthusiasm for aviation—he was one of the first men in the army to see the possibilities of air craft as fighting machines—earned for him the position of director general of military aeronautics three years ago.

EMBROIDERED MUSLIN CITY RUINED BY WAR

"Among the innumerable cities and towns which have been ruined by the war, is St. Gall, in neutral Switzerland, whence has come so much of the embroidered muslin used in America," says a statement prepared by the National Geographic Society at Washington. "It has seen its trade of centuries' growth swept away by a struggle in which its people have no interest. St. Gall is a town of one industry and that for the export trade. It is a world-famous centre for the manufacture of machine-embroidered white goods, but its wares have found sales over the whole earth. It has done an annual trade in these articles with America of between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000 a year. It, also, had heavy business with the countries of Europe, South America, and those of the Orient. Since the out break of the war, its export routes have been closed, while some of its largest customers have been forced by their war expenditures to stop all purchase of foreign-made luxuries.

"The town has grown wealthy through the centuries, and it has continually developed its one industry, built many factories, large and small, where an important percentage of the embroidered white goods of the world are worked, and through all the neighbourhood around the city, the same industry has found development as a home industry, in which hand machines are used.

"St. Gall perches high up on a mountain shoulder considerably back from the Lake of Constance. It grew up around the mountain cell of a learned Irish monk, St. Gallen, who, taken sick here in the seventh century while on a pilgrimage to Rome, built him a cell 1,000 feet up the mountain side, and, upon his recovery, vowed to devote his life to the conversion of the mountain tribes. Around his cell there has grown up a city of more than 30,000, which bears his name, and which is known to the drygoods buyers of all countries.

"An abbey was built, and its Irish monks, distinguished throughout Europe for their devotion to learning, here made a safe retreat for their studies. Centuries before the Renaissance, the monks of St. Gallen studied both Greek and Latin, and painstakingly copied many of the ancient texts. These manuscripts are still preserved in the library of St. Gall, and they form a priceless nucleus of its collections.

"Considerable American capital has been attracted to this energetic little manufacturing city. Some of the great factories, with their scores of highly intricate, almost-intelligent machines, are entirely owned by American manufacturers, who regularly visit their plants, and make provisions for New York's seasonal supplies. The American consulate at St. Gall is a very busy office, and it has to do almost solely with the embroideries and the machine-embroidered laces of St. Gall and of the surrounding villages for American consumption."

Maxwell

"The Wonder Car"

38,000 owners have given the "acid test" to 38,000 Maxwells in the last 18 months

Every car made in the gigantic Maxwell factories is just as finely finished, just as handsome an automobile as if it were especially made to be exhibited at the New York Automobile Show, or some dealer's fancy Showrooms.

BUT—and here is a great big BUT—38,000 of these Maxwell Cars have actually been turned out and have actually been driven thousands of miles by 38,000 Maxwell owners.

These owners have driven their Maxwells up hill and down hill—over all kinds of country roads and over city streets, everywhere that four wheels will go.

Most of these 38,000 Maxwells have been rained on, snowed on, and put to every kind of a rough and tumble test that time and use can give a car—and that's what we mean by the "Acid Test."

If you have any neighbors among these 38,000 happy owners, ask them to tell you all about their experience with their Maxwells.

If you don't happen to know any neighbors who own Maxwells, here are a few facts to think about—things to consider—then you can come in and see this "Wonder Car" and add up these facts for yourself.

But don't forget this—the Maxwell we will show you is an exact duplicate of these 38,000 tried and true Maxwells that have stood the rough and tumble "Acid Test."

And Here Are Some Vital Points to Think Of

Satisfaction and Service in a Nutshell

To the automobile owner satisfaction and service means a car of beauty, refinement and comfort combined. One that possesses the many conveniences, is easy and simple to operate, properly designed and constructed of the best materials and whose operative cost is very low. He wants motor car efficiency and maximum service.

All This Has Been Accomplished in the Maxwell

Through the high ideals and standards, wonderful engineering genius, remarkable resources and the accumulated experiences gleaned from years of automobile experience, the Maxwell organization have accomplished what a few years ago many said was impossible.

The Maxwell is Not the Result of an Experiment

It was not luck or the result of an experiment on the public, but good hard business judgment that made the Maxwell of to-day possible.

Able engineers spent months designing this powerful, efficient, light-weight car. The best metallurgists in the world's famous laboratory (the Maxwell's own plant) tested materials and formulated new heat treatment that gave this car a remarkable light weight and yet the great strength which it possesses and which stands all the abuse heaped upon owner-driven cars.

It was real genius that gave to the Maxwell the powerful motor that enables Maxwell owners to go wherever four wheels will travel, over all roads, up all grades, through any sand, any mud.

Beauty and Comfort as well as Strength

And Maxwell builders added to this "wonder car," not only all the conveniences, power and durability, but also the refinements and beautiful lines of the much higher priced cars. Pure stream lines, crown fenders, fine upholstering and all the little details that make Maxwell owners proud of their car.

Every Feature of Mechanical Construction

Every feature of mechanical construction that is to be found in cars selling at many time its price will be found in the Maxwell. And in addition there are many mechanical features that are strictly of Maxwell design. We have improved the lamps, made them rattle-proof by using extra braces and eliminating the hinges, dust-proof, easy to clean and adaptable to use in any position. We have protected one of the best radiators that money can buy from the many twists and strains of the car. In fact, we have constructed a full floating radiator. Thorough lubrication and proper cooling of the motor has been given. One square inch of braking surface has been provided for every 100 pounds of weight. Our engineers have equipped the Maxwell with a spring tension fan that adjusts itself to any pressure on the belt. These are but a few of the scores of features that make the 1915 Maxwell "THE WONDER CAR."

The Maxwell Company's Guarantee of Service to Maxwell Owners

No other automobile is backed by a more reliable service than that guaranteed every Maxwell owner. Scores of Maxwell dealers in every part of this country are always ready to give expert advice—to make adjustments and to supply new parts at reasonable prices.

This splendid Maxwell Dealers' Service Organization is perfected and completed by the great Maxwell Service Station in Windsor, Ont. The main offices and factories of the Maxwell Motor Company in Detroit, U. S. A., are within comparatively short distance of many points in Canada. This in itself means rapid delivery of replacement parts to Canadian Maxwell dealers and owners. Maxwell Service is one of the great advantages enjoyed by Maxwell owners.

Order a Maxwell from us now, and when you want it delivered, we will give you your car—not an excuse on delivery day

History of Jewels Full of Thrillers

Battle, murder and sudden death are three awe-inspiring facts, and probably nothing in the world's history of inanimate objects has contributed so often to these dread events as the precious stone. To read the story of some precious stone of fame is to be hurried from one thrilling adventure to another, and it must be a singularly unimaginative person who can resist the feeling that in some mysterious manner these glittering objects, the materials of which the scientist can tell us in detail, have not some occult power, some obscure but potent influence, over the destinies of men.

Few stones have had a more checkered career than the famous "Hope" diamond, which is said to have found a watery bed when the Titanic sank; a statement to this effect appeared in a well known weekly paper and has never been contradicted. That it should go down in the most tragic shipwreck on record would seem peculiarly appropriate to a stone which rarely brought aught but ill-luck to its possessor, be they whom they may.

It was brought to Europe by Jean Baptiste Tavernier, the famous traveller, who sold it to Louis the Fourteenth, by whom it was placed among the crown jewels. Tavernier died a ruined man in his old age. The gem adorned the beautiful Madame de Montespan, who was supplanted in the king's favour by Madame de Maintenon; it was borrowed by Nicholas Fouquet —who was made procureur general to the parliament of Paris in 1658 by Mazarin, and superintendent of finance in 1653 —for one of the costly fetes which he was fond of giving, and which are supposed to have aroused the king's jealousy. Fouquet was arrested and imprisoned and finally died in disgrace.

The famous blue diamond aroused Marie Antinette's admiration and it was given to her by Louis the Sixteenth; and it was occasionally worn by the ill-fated Princess de Lamballe. The horrible fate of all three is, of course, history. During the French revolution it was stolen and its fate during the next 40 years is unknown. It is stated that an Amsterdam diamond cutter, Wilhelm Fals, had been commissioned to cut it; but that his son stole it from him with the result that the elder Fals was ruined and the son committed suicide.

Young Fals is supposed to have passed the diamond on to a Frenchman, Farcioé Beaulieu, and from him it passed into the hands of a dealer, who about the year 1830 sold it to the late Mr. Henry Thomas Hope for £18,000. The curious part of its history is that so long as it remained in the possession of the Hope family its malign influence—or, let us say, the curious train of ill-luck which accompanied it,—seemed dormant. But at the death of Mr. Hope it was purchased by a merchant, who took it to New York and sold it to an American jeweler.

The jeweller fell into financial difficulties; and after passing through the hands of a French broker the diamond was bought by a Russian prince who either gave or lent it to a beautiful actress at the Folies Bergeres. The first night she wore it the prince shot her from a box while she was on the stage, only himself to meet with a violent death at the hands of revolutionaries within a few days. The broker who had sold the stone committed suicide.

It then passed into the hands of a Greek jeweller named Simon Montharides, who was thrown over a precipice and killed after he had disposed of the stone to the ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid, whose favourite, Salma Subayba, was wearing the jewel on her breast when the Young Turks broke into the palace, and she was shot dead by her master. The stone is said to have then passed into the hands of Habib Effendi, who possessed a marvellous collection of gems, the price paid being, it is said, £40,000. Habib Effendi was drowned in the sinking of the Messageries steamer La Seyne in collision off Singapore.

His collection of jewels was sold in 1909, and the last known owner of the "Hope" was Mrs. McLean of Washington, whose husband is reported to have bought the stone in ignorance of its tragic history.

GIRL WINS RELEASE OF BOY WHO SHOT HER AND HIMSELF

NEW YORK, April 23.—A plea for clemency by Miss Ethel Odell, eighteen, before Judge Wadhams in General Sessions yesterday, brought about the paroling of Frederick Ulmer, a medical student who lives at No. 454 Ft. Washington avenue. Ulmer, in a fit of jealousy, shot the girl and then himself, on the One Hundred and Eighty-first street station of the subway on February 18.

"It was all my fault. I hold myself entirely responsible for what he did," Miss Odell pleaded with the court. "I spurned his love and drove him half crazy.

"I will marry him, Judge, if you will let him go," she continued, sobbing. "While we were together in the hospital I learned how much he loved me, and for the first time I began to see things in their true light."

Henry W. Unger, who defended Ulmer, said that the young man would marry the girl as soon as he was able, but that he had no financial prospects at the present time.

"I am going to suspend sentence on you," said Judge Wadhams; "but you owe your liberty to this young woman. It's up to you to make good now for her sake."

WAR CANNOT LAST---GERMAN BUSINESS MEN FIRST TO GIVE IN

Sir George Paish Says That Even if Military Element in Germany Does Not Realize Size of Disaster, Commercial Interests Will Bring Pressure to Bear—Already Alive to Future

LONDON, April 24. — Sir George Paish, who recently returned to his duties as editor of The Statist after a brief rest, necessitated by his exacting labors at the Treasury, discussed the financial conditions in Germany, of which Dr. Karl Helfferich recently spoke optimistically. While Sir George Paish's statements had no direct reference to Helfferich's declarations, they form a valuable presentation of the view of German finance taken by a representative British expert.

Sir George Paish said: I cannot think that if the business men of Germany have any weight in the councils of the Empire the war will continue indefinitely. If the military element in Germany does not realize the economic disadvantage to the country arising from a long war, the business men of Germany will realize them clearly and unmistakably. No one is better able to gauge the advantage or disadvantage of a policy pursued by any country than the business men, and it is evident that the business men of Germany is already alive to the consequences to themselves and to their country of war. Moreover, they will realize that the longer the war continued the more disastrous will be the results for Germany.

"Moreover, it will be evident to the business men in Germany as well as everyone outside that the longer the war lasts and the greater the sacrifices of the allies the more onerous must be the terms of peace and the more serious the permanent consequences to the German nation. So far as Britain is concerned, her great imports show not only that she has not reduced her consumption, but increased it. It was pointed out in The Statist on April 10 that British imports in March were at the rate of nearly £900,000,000 a year, and that, including the Government purchases abroad of all kinds, the rate of imports is now over £1,000,000,000 a year. This Great Britain is accomplishing mainly by means of her exports and the sums she is receiving from the interest on her capital abroad and the earnings of her shipping. To make these huge purchases she has, in fact, to call in a very small amount of the great fund capital she possesses abroad."

North Russian Port Will Soon Be Open Again

Archangel Closed by Ice Will Soon be Loosened for Russian Shipping

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 22. — "Archangel, the oldest port of the Russian empire, in a few weeks more will awaken to vital war importance; for, when the Arctic ice clears from the White Sea, Russia will be able to communicate with her allies through a western port and to receive much needed war supplies and other manufactures over a route thousands of miles shorter than that via Vladivostock. Archangel is situated at the head of the Dvina delta, as far north as the northernmost shores of Hudson Bay. It is the largest and most important city in the world placed so near the Arctic Circle.

"The harbour of Archangel is optimistically said to be open from May to October. However, it is only entirely free from ice during the months of July and August, although, in the average year, it is free for navigating purposes for a period some weeks longer. The city lies on the Dvina River, 26 miles from the White Sea. It is 740 miles northeast of St. Petersburg, and is concected with the distributing centres of the interior by railway and canal.

"Not only is Archangel interesting as a city in the extreme far north, but it is still more interesting as one of the most ancient cities built upon the fringe of eternal arctic whiteness. Before the year 900, the Norsemen came here and traded. They laid the foundations of the present city, a city that has grown slowly but almost without halt, preserved in peace by its isolated position in the north. The city has achieved its present-day importance as an outlet for the products of the far northern and western parts of the Russian empire.

"During its short season for navigation, Archangel is the busiest point in all the north. Between 80 and 1,000 vessels call here through the brief season. The total value of imports and exports of Archangel amounts to about $5,000,000, and, this year under war conditions, should amount to much more. The chief articles of traffic in peace times are fish, skins, furs, timber, wax, iron, tallow, bristles and caviar"

SMITH MAN WAS ARRESTED IN WEST

For the Local Police—To be Brought Here on Serious Charge

Harold Williamson has been arrested for the local police in Moose Jaw, and will be brought here to answer to a charge of seduction of a girl under 16 years of age. The offense is alleged to have been committed in Smith Township. Williamson will be tried before Magistrate Langley in the County Police Court.

The word of the arrest came to Chief Thompson this morning from J. W. Spalding, Inspector of the R. N. W. M. P. at Moose Jaw. The telegram states that the prisoner will be taken to Moose Jaw to wait for an officer to be sent from here for him.

Scout News

All Scouts are requested to meet at the Armouries on Friday, April 30, at 7.30 p.m. sharp, in full uniform, and all staves are requested to be carried.

After the three Scouts had disembarked and after emptying the canoe of their provisions, they made their bivouac for the night and they prepared their fire.

"I say, Joe, said Wallace, you had better ransack your pockets and find us a match, for I can tell you I am pretty hungry, whether you two are or not." Joe ransacked one pocket after another, but in vain, and when he reported the result of his search he smiled, as if at the expression on Harold Jackson's face.

After sticking his hatchet in the tree-trunk he had been chopping, he broke the silence by saying: "Well, fellows, it's just my luck. Why, sure when I went to school in North Dakota, old Skitters Wilkins, the school master, would lick me a dozen times a day for lighting matches and burning the shavings off my pencils."

Wallace broke the silence again by saying: "Just to think of us nearly out of civilization altogether without a single lucifer match in the whole camp."

All the Scouts laughed at this speech despite their situation which was interrupted by an ejaculation from Joe Watson, by saying:

"I say, you two Scouts, why didn't we think of the bow stunt." All the Scouts hurried to the near-by wood and Joe Watson returned with a cedar bough about as thick as a man's thumb, which he proceeded to bend at the bow. They each took a turn at the sawing till Jackson detected a small smouldering flame. They applied their flame to the pile of wood and then they cooked their supper, which consisted of fish, eggs, "murphys," bread and coffee, which tasted like the coffee their mother used to make.

After satisfying their appetite they lay down in their blankets before the camp-fire to talk, with only the music of the night owl, the wind among the trees and the roaring of the camp-fire.

HAIR COMING OUT

Dandruff causes a feverish irritation of the scalp, the hair roots shrink, loosen and then the hair comes out fast. To stop falling haid at once and rid the scalp of every particle of dandruff, get a 25-cent bottle of Danderine at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub it into the scalp. After a few applications the hair stops coming out and you can't find any dandruff.

Honours For Mr. McIlroy

Is Made An Honourary Member of the Hamilton Board of Trade

TORONTO, April 24.—Yesterday at the meeting of the Hamilton Board of Trade, special honour was conferred upon Mr. William McIlroy, the newly appointed city passenger agent for the C.P.R. at Toronto, who tendered his resignation as a member of the executive and chairman of the "entertainment committee." As a result of his good work Mr. McIlroy will have the distinction of being the only honorary member connected with the organization. H. L. Frost in moving the resolution, eulogized the valuable services rendered to the board by Mr. McIlroy, and while they were sorry to lose him as city passenger agent at Hamilton of so great an organization as the Canadian Pacific Railyway, they wished him every success in his new field of labor.

BOY KILLS CHUM WHEELS BODY IN BARROW FOR AID

NEW YORK, April 24.—Promenaders along Knickerbocker street, Paterson, N.J., smiled indulgently yesterday afternoon when a bareheaded boy, pushing a wheelbarrow in which lay another boy, hurried past them. One of the promenaders, Mrs. Samuel J. Ross, glanced curiously at the vehicle as she stepped to the edge of the sidewalk. Then she screamed.

For the wheelbarrow and its burden were streaked with crimson stains, and each jolt of the clumsy vehicle left a ragged trail of red in its wake. At the woman's scream the boy, who was George Everett, nine years old, of No. 439 Knickerbocker street, dropped the wheelbarrow and fell across it with loud sobs.

"I shot 'Mike' Quant, my chum, and I'm taking him to the hospital."

Then, before she could ask another question, young Everett turned and ran up the street. Mrs. Ross summoned an ambulance, which carried the boy's body to St. Joseph's Hospital, where surgeons declared the boy dead.

Police Sergeant Lord found Everett, trembling with terror, hiding under a bed in his home, and after he had been induced to come out he told the story of the tragedy in broken tones.

With his chum, "Mike" Quant, who was eight years old, Everett had returned from school and gone into the attic to fill some salt boxes from a large bag of salt. He had been told to do this earlier in the day.

The boys quickly filled the salt boxes; then they opened the attic windows and hung out, waving and hallooing to friends below. Finally they began to rummage about. In a corner, under a pile of debris, young Everett found a battered valise. There were many objects of interest in it, but greatest treasure was an old rusty revolver, which Everett flourished over his head.

Swinging it about in the most approved cowboy fashion, he pressed the trigger. There was an explosion and little Mike fell with a bullet in his brain.

"They wasn't anybody home," Everett sobbed, "and I knowed that Mike was hurt, but I didn't think he was killed. I picked him up over my shoulder, 'cause he wasn't very big, and went down stairs with him. In the back yard there was a wheelbarrow, and I got him into it and started to the hospital with him when the lady stopped me."

The boy, still crying bitterly, was held for an examination before Recorder Terrell in police court this morning. The dead boy was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Quant, of No. 108 Buffalo avenue.

TO JOIN THE ALLIED FLEET

Italian Warships Await Couriers With Sealed Orders

ROME, April 24.—Commanders of all Italian squadrons have been notified to sail immediately on receiving sealed orders from special couriers. The news is regarded as foreshadowing the participation almost immediately in the European conflict on the side of the allies. It is believed that the Italian fleet will join the operations in the Dardanelles.

Sailors on all warships have been notified that hereafter they must not mention in their letters the ports at which they touch.

Rome newspapers say that Col. Giuseppe Garibaldi, grandson of the Italian patriot, who is now in Paris, before leaving this city, saw King Victor Emmanuel and Premier Salandra, with the object of interesting them in the formation of a body of Garibaldi volunteers in case of war with Austria. It is understood that the Italian General Staff did not approve the project, believing that such a body of troops might not respond to the exigencies of modern warfare.

BELLIGENCY PREFERRED.

Austria In War Is Better for Russia Than Austria Out.

LONDON, April 24. — The Daily Mail's Warsaw correspondent sends to his newspaper a long statement from "a high authoritative source in which the possibility is discussed of an early conclusion of a seprate peace with Austria.

"Although the air is full of such stories, and the indications shows that Austria is desirous of an instant and lasting peace," the statement says: "It must be understood that if Austria ceased to be a belligerent her position as a neutral would mean that she would be able to offer as great if not a greater obstacle to the success of Russian arms than if she remained a belligerent.

German Staff Has Lost Hope of Victory Says Arnold Bennett

LONDON, April 21.—The wisest men and the great German general staff must by this time have given up hope of victory. They must have noticed that in numbers, guns, munitions and brains they are slowly being surpassed. Their eternal boasting and reiteration of the lie that they did not want war must inevitably be disintegrating their fortitude.

The political conduct of the real rulers, who are the heads of the army, has for years past proved they at once fear and despise the proletariat. What the proletariat thinks of the rulers we know by the full printed records of German parliamentary life, and the secret intrigue of the great general staff has nothing to fall back upon when its armies turn ever so little back toward Berlin.

Its armies must and will so turn. Even if they should not, the British navy is slowly stifling the commercial life of the nation and nothing German can relieve that pressure. What then, will the great general staff do?

Its programme can be predicted with certainty. It will intrique for peace. Tremendous efforts will be made to bring about a peace which excludes the restoration and compensation of martyrized lands; which exclude heavy financial punishment of Geramny for her stupid outrages and which excludes drawing the fangs of the German military caste by means

It is a War of Principle And a War For The Defence Of International Treaties

(Bishop Sweeney)

Intercessory Service Held in St. John's Church Last Evening—Bishop of Toronto Deals With Some of the Outstanding Phases of the War During the Course of an Eloquent Address—57th Regiment Was Represented.

ST. George's Day was fittingly observed in St. John's Church last evening, when a representative gathering of people met together in a special service of intercession. An able and eloquent address was delivered by the Right Rev. Bishop Sweeny of Toronto. In his prefatory remarks, His Lordship expressed regret at the absence, through illness, of Rev. Canon Davidson, Rector of St. John's Church, and Rev. James Price, of St. George's Church. The latter was responsible for the promotion of the service, which was brought to a successful issue with the aid of Bishop Sweeny, Rev. W. H. White, Rector of St. Luke's Church, and Mr. C. A. G. Spence, of St. Alban's Mission. The service was a shortened form of Evensong, according to the Anglican Liturgy. Rev. W. H. White intoned the office and the lesson was read by Mr. Spence.

Kipling's Recessional.

The well-known German hymn, which is practically their national hymn, "Nun danket alle Gott" (Now thank we all our God), written by the Rev. Martin Rinhart and translated into English by Catherine winkworth, was sung as a recessional, while Rudyard Kipling's famous hymn, "Lest We Forget," was sung during the collection of the offertory.

The special Psalms for the occasion were the 115th and 150th. The former was sung to the Gregorian chant, Tonus Perigrinus, and the latter to "Purcells" Grand Chant. Prior to the commencement of the service, a [illegible] National airs were played on the chimes.

The presence of a fairly big representation of the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers, added a significant dash of colour to the service. A magnificent Union Jack, combining the crosses of St. George, St. Patrick and Et. Andrew, hung across the Cancel arch.

The Bishop's Address.

The keynote of the Bishop's address was based on that portion of the Scriptures found in Isaiah 2, v. 4:.

"And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

"There is nothing great but God." These words, said Bishop Sweeny, were uttered at the funeral of the great Louis of France. Generations have passed, and to-day we meet in the parish church of Peterborough and reiterate the unalterable fact—"There is nothing great but God." Because of this fact, we take the words of the text and turn them into a invocation, believing that we live in the last days, and that the time is near when nation shall not lift up sword against nation.

The Vista of Ages.

On this great day of intercession, said His Lordship, we ask God to speedily fulfill this promise. We look back over the vista of ages that have gone and recall the lands that have been soaked with blood of the slain. War is a word of three letters. There is one other word also of three letters, and that is woe. Someone has taken the trauble to classify war under three headings, namely, wars of principle, wars of personal ambition, like the wars of Alexander the Great and Napoleon, and wars of commerce. It is when we consider the three classes that we are able to localize the awful war from which we now suffer. It is a war of principle and a war for the defence of international rights of treaties and international law. Someone has said that Britain cannot be Christian because of her entry into this war. We make bold to say, because she is Christian she has participated in this war.

The Majesty of War.

We are thrilled with the majesty and pomp of war as represented by dashing regiments and great forests of steel moving onward, glittering, gleaming in the sunset, but do not forget, admonished the speaker, that in its wake there stalks the ghastly spectres of death ,destruction, destitution, and famine." We are so far away from the battlefields that it is difficult for us to grasp some of the portentous facts connected with this awful conflict. Forty-five years ago Germany was victorious over France. Flushed with pictory, she left her foes upon the battlefield maimed and wounded. Then began the realization of Bismarck's dream of world conquest. In 1904 Britain stretched out her hands to France and formed the "Entente Cordiale," as a result of which an old foe of Britain became a strong, new friend. A similar and successful move was made in 1907 towards Russia. Time and again has Britain attempted to extend the hand of friendship to Germany, but without success.

Germany Refused.

In 1908 the Tsar of Russia proposed a conference of world Powers with a view of reducing the enormous expenditures for armament. Britain and France were ready, but Germany refused. A similar move was made in 1906, and as an evidence of good faith, Britain modified her naval programme of that year. Germany answered by increasing her naval programme by six cruisers. During the past forty-five years Germany has prepared for war, bringing it on at a time when she thought her foes would be the least prepared. But she calculated without knowledge. She has made an awful blunder. The assassination of the Archduke and Duchess of Austria in Servia was [illegible] tating influence. Twelve articles were then submitted to Servia to be responded to in forty-eight hours. If they had been agreed to, it would have meant the blotting out of Servia.

The Cost of War.

Dealing wih the statistical side of war, Bishop Sweeny said one-half of the fifteen hundred millions that comprise the human family is involved in this war. Twenty million soldiers are under arms or will be within the next few months, to say nothing of the five hundred thousand sailors who are on the high seas. A well-known French statistician has estimated the present cost of the war at fifty-four million dollars a day. If it lasts as long as the Franco-Prussian War, which lasted four hundred and five days, it will cost, exclusive of indemnity and wastage, five thousand million pounds. What shall we say of the cities that have been devastated and ruined? What tongue can estimate the calamity of such a war? Everyone agrees that so far as Germany is concerned the game is up. It cannot be long before peace is declared. First must come the utter destruction and elimination of militarism. For years that has kept nations in seething throes of anxiety. One thing we may look for in this country after the war is over, and that is a flood of immigration from the devastated centres of the war zone. Such a movement is already on foot. There shall come within the bounds of this Dominion such a flood of immigration as was never experienced before. The conclusion of the war will serve to elevate the Hague Tribunal to the position that it should occupy in the eyes of nations as a place to bring their international complications, and the launching of a universal peace amongst all who call themselves Christians.

A Splendid Ideal.

In conclusion, Bishop Sweeny said: "I am glad to have had the privilege of speaking to you as citizens of Peterborough and members of St. George's Society in this old historic church. I am glad to be here in an effort to hold up the splendid ideal of the St. George's Society, which is a society of Englishmen and Welshmen combined for mutual good fellowship. As a parting thought, I would say, do not let us wait until this war is over to adjust our communal relations with God. Why not now, when the chastening hand of God is with us? Let us remember the moral contained in the parable of the rich fool: 'He that layeth up treasure for himself is not right before God.'"

St. Andrew's Concert

Combining their own talent, including Miss Helen MacLaren and Mr. H. C. Treneer, with the vocal proficiency of Mr. Albert Downing of Toronto, St. Andrew's choir presented a thoroughly delightful concert last night. Although the audience was not encouragingly large, it quickly responded to the appealing merit of the numbers and with generous appreciation of the programme neutralized the effect that might have been expected from a light attendance. The concert season has so far advanced into spring that regular events are now presented with considerable hazzard. The lap of spring is not the safest place for concerts, although they may be one of the compensations of winter. However, St. Andrew's choir achieved quite a success last night when their concert is regarded in its entertaining features. The programme seemed to have been arranged with the idea of pleasing without demanding responsive effort. In other words the musical ideas were easily apparent without deep delving on the part of the audience.

When the concert was commenced there was a slightly depressive atmosphere natural to a fifty per cent. capacity gathering. By the third number, however, whatever feeling of this nature existed had been completely dispelled. The choir's anthem, "O Sing to God" by Gounod was a beautiful number, effectively rendered and quite the most satisfying of the choral selections. Miss MacLaren took the solo part, sweetly and easily and in complete sympathy with the ensemble setting. The choir seemed at its best in this anthem, which was not too exacting but was none the less a testing vehicle for choral esprit and ability.

Mr. Albert Downing was in fine voice and inclined to be generous. He assumed a large share in the programme and his solos were uniformly gratifying. His solo from Maritana was sung with vigour and finish, the latter quality appearing in all his numbers. "There's a Land" and "Mary of Argyle" were two other numbers the audience fully enjoyed.

Miss MacLaren was most satisfying in the Gounod solo and in "Annie Laurie," the latter sung in a low key in which her voice is liquid, round and very appealing. Her phrasing is easy, her voice is voluminous and has a wide range, especially in the contralto direction, she sings with nice appreciation and is making steady progress in the ranks of Peterborough's first vocalists. There are not a few who would like to hear Miss MacLaren in a concert outside of St. Andrew's, the acoustics of which do not apparently enhance musical effects.

Mr. Treneer's Bach number displayed his musicianly abilities to advantage. His other numbers were enjoyed, and his accompaniments were played with a true sense of that demand. He gave as an encore a military patrol with clever realism produced by the manipulation of stops and a pipe effect which was a striking reproduction of the measured paces of passing troops. The concert was concluded at ten o'clock.

East City R. C. Church Grounds

Mr. James O'Keefe, the Landscape Gardener, Engaged on the Work

Mr. James O'Keefe of 79 Lansdowne Street, has the contract for grading, sodding and terracing the grounds surrounding the new Roman Catholic Church in East City. He employs a gang of workmen and teams in delivering the sod and soil which is brought in from a distance. The work under Mr. O'Keefe's supervision will occupy some weeks before completion, as the grounds are quite extensive and a lot of special sodding, pruning and terracing has to be done. Mr. O'Keefe is an experienced landscape beautifier and the Church authorities are fortunate in securing his services.

Contention Was Proven by Chicks

Brood Got Home With Reversible Corn and Some Messages

Frank M. Sackett, after a great deal of difficulty, has convinced H. K. West, of Stevens Point, Wis., that his chickens are a lot of bandits at heart. He told them about it long ago, and now Mr. West, blushing, admits it.

Mr. Sackett complained that his seeds were being dug up faster than he could plant them. Mr. West spoke about Missouri and Mr. Sackett agreed to "show him." Mr. Sackett scattered corn in his garden, but first ran a thread through each kernel, and on the far end he tied little cards

Hanging from each chicken's beak when they went home were the evidences of guilt. No jury's verdict was ever more damning.

Here are a few of the inscriptions on the cards:

"I am a naughty chicken."
"I have been trespassing."
"I am a feathered bandit."

Looking For Owner of Land

Chief Thompson has received a communication, asking him to try and locate a man by the name of George Armshaw, who was a Fenian Raid veteran and for whom a grant of land was obtained about ten years ago.

The time is expiring for the patent and the Department has written the enquirer with an application to be signed.

The Chief of Police at Belleville has ascertained that he came to Peterborough from there some years ago, to stay, he believed, with a son, and the rumour is that George Armshaw is dead, but that his son is alive.

There is 160 acres of land involved which it would seem a pity to lose Any one with information may communicate with the Chief of Police.

THE WEATHER

The temperature yesterday was up to 71 degrees in the shade and to-day is also quite warm. An early spring with warm weather and little rain appears to be the chief characteristic this season.

In Holland a food syrup is being made from potato flour.

The oil wells of the United States, now in operation, number almost 150,000.

Two Cobourg Soldiers Are Invalided Home

A. D. Bowie and S. Holt Are Both Eager to Return to the Front.

COBOURG, April 24. — Two soldiers who left with the first contingent for service at the front have been invalided home. Andrew Duncan Bowie went with Major Bolster's company of the 40th Northumberland Regiment. In England he was transferred to the Army Service Corps and went to Flanders before the contingent. He was with a convoy that got lost and strayed at night into the French lines. The French sentry challenged, and not understanding him, fired, shooting Bowie through the ankle. He was sent to a hospital in England. His present intention is to join another corps and return to the front. S. Holt, who went from here with the 14th Field Battery, had an attack of pneumonia at Salisbur Plain, which developed into pleurisy. He was a patient in Shorncliffe Hospital for a time, and speaks highly of the treatment given him. He also wishes to return to the front.

Trades and Labour Notes

By The Official Scribe

It happened to be on a very fine night that the usual meeting of labour men was scheduled this week, but in spite of that fact there was a good attendance of delegates. There only lacked representatives of the machinists, tailors, carpenters and bar tenders.

The Fair Wage Clause.

There was a communication from the Minister of Labour's office, asking that the different rates of wages of the organized trades be sent the department, so that in future the recognized rate could be inserted in all contracts. This matter will be left to the various organizations of the city to answer personally.

The London Trades Council sent along its amendment to the Colonization Act. A committee was appointed to look into the rather lengthy, though well thought out, proposition.

The Hydro-Electric Association of Ontario are actively on the look-out for the popular support of radial lines. Its communication was also referred to a committee.

Co-Operators Speak.

Permission to address the Council was granted to Mr. Stazicker, secretary of the local Co-operative Stores. Mr. Stazicker had chiefly a request to make which was that permission to use the hall be granted the convention of Co-operators, which was being held in Peterborough on May 24th. Mr. George Keene, editor of the Canadian Co-operator, is to be one of the chief speakers, and the public will be admitted to hear the business though naturally only members will be allowed the vote.

Mr. Johnston's Dilemna.

A committee had been appointed to see Mr. Johnston of the Little Windsor, and ask why he patronized a non-union barber shop. Brother Johnston informed the delegation (with a smile as broad as another of the same name once possessed) that he was landlord of the specified non-union shop, but as the place was to be vacated by the present tenant at an early date, he would see that the union card was held by the next tonsorial artist.

Municipal Committee Busy.

The Municipal Committee have troubles of their own. They find that the city officials residing in the adjoining Townships, come under different spheres of influence, as it were. The police officers are controlled by the police commissioners, the school teachers, by the Board of Education, and the only one "higher up" for whom the same treatment as the day labourer is asked, viz., that residence within the city entitles to a city job, seems to be the Sanitary Inspector, whose salary will not permit a residence on Broadway or Fifth Avenue.

Mention was also made of 'dodgeds' from the income tax. High salaried men had no hesitation in declaring their incomes to be of modest dimensions, thereby evading the law. The Secretary was instructed to write the City Clerk, asking for a list of those who paid income tax.

When are the public works in Peterborough likely to be started?" asks the builders and their allies. Toronto has started. There are many local men idle; why the delay?

A committee will wait on Mr. Burnham to this effect.

President Hammacott adjourned the meeting shortly before 10 o'clock. Next meeting May 5th.

AUTO COLLIDED WITH MILK CART

A badly bent mud-guard, a damaged headlight, and a number of shattered milk bottles, were the net results of a rear-end collision between an automobile driven by Dr. J. M. McCullough, and a milk waggon owned by W. L. White, on George street this morning, provided a little excitement for the Saturday shoppers. It appears that in turning around, Dr. McCullough's car bumped into the rear of the milk cart. The crash of broken bottles sounded like the explosion of a Zeppelin bomb and a crowd hurriedly collected.

South America Presents Trade Opportunities For Canadians

Immense German Trade Has Been Throttled by War and United States Manufacturers Are Making a Bid For It

Taking advantage of the cessation of German trade with South America, the commercial interests in the United States are directing attention to the advantages they hope to secure in this great field. Rev. Mr. McEwen recently returned from missionary work in Brazil is a guest at the Oriental to-day, and in an interview with The Examiner, remarked that Canada should not overlook this opportunity of establishing stronger trading relations with the South American countries. He stated that with Brazil alone German trade last year totalled $10,000,000.00, of which $1,700,000 represented cement business. That country's principal imports are fish, flour, farm implements, fruit, especially apples, and manufactured articles. The United States lacks an adequate merchant marine, and their efforts to supply this deficiency are observed in the recent purchases of German vessels for South American trade. Brazil imported from Germany large supplies of hardware, musical implements, farm implements and small wares. Mr. McEwen said he had met the Hon. Geo. E. Foster, who stated that Canada has no regular steamship service with South America. Return cargoes from Brazil would include rubber, cocoa, coffee and tobacco, all of these products being largely used in this country. Americans admit finding some prejudice against them beneath the southern cross. It may be due to the paternalistic character of the Munroe Doctrine. For the people of Brazil, Argentine and Chili feel an independence that is inclined to resent the big brother idea. Englishmen are highly regarded, and Canadians find themselves looked upon as the Britishers they really are.

Mr. McEwen says there is a good opening for young Canadians, who are physically, mentally and morally strong. They require to know the language which is not very difficult to learn. In the United States many high schools are making Spanish an optional subject for the purpose of equipping young men for South American work.

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

IS COMMITTED FOR TRIAL ON CHARGE OF LIBEL

Case of Proprietor of the Review Will be Heard at Next Court—Defendant Being Allowed Out on $500 Bail

PRELIMINARY HEARING

Mr. T. W. Whalley, managing director and proprietor of the Daily Review was yesterday committed for trial by Magistrate Dumble at the next Court of Competent Jurisdiction on a charge of defamatory libel, and was admitted to bail of $500.

The Magistrate, in ordering commitment after Mr. Ruddy and Crown Attorney Hatton had been heard, said that the Chief of Police occupied a public position. The Chief Constable virtually meant the keeper of the city's morals. There was an implication here that there was an immorality in connection with the Roller Rink. The implication was that the management of the Roller Rink was bad, and that the police were cognizant, which was an important matter in connection with the name of the Chief of Police. His good name was everything. Certainly if he went outside to look for a position as Chief Constable it would mean everything.

The Magistrate knew there had been complaints made about the noise about the rink, principally from an organ once in use there. He knew there was a diligent effort made to get evidence about anything else.

The proprietor of this newspaper got this letter anonymously from some coward who was probably afraid to sign his name.

The Examination

The Chief Constable was on the stand when the court resumed at 3 p.m., an adjournment being ordered before his cross-examination was finished.

It was brought out that Chief Thompson had received a call from Rev. Father McColl and Rev. Robert Pogue at some time with reference to alleged immorality in connection with the Brock street rink, but they had no proof to offer whereby he could get evidence to prosecute. Rev. James Rollins had probably also spoken to him about the rink on the same subject. One objection was that young children were allowed there.

The Chief positively did not think that the rink was an immoral place or a place where immoral conduct had been permitted. He also did not believe Mr. Whalley had any malice towards him or the department of which he was head.

"Do you allow institutions, required to take out a license, to operate without one?" was asked by Mr. Ruddy.

"No."

"If you did allow this institution to operate without a license, this was an exception?"

"This is not operating without a license."

"That is not the question."

The Chief said that the Royal Theatre and the Tiv-It, for instance, were given a week to operate before actually paying for a license. He did not consider it an act of friendship in any of these cases but an act of accommodation to a ratepayer.

"Is there a good deal of complaint about immorality in this city"

"Yes; I think there is, mostly without foundation—from a lot of gossipers mostly."

Gave Him Time

To Mr. Hatton, the witness said that Meharry was given a little time to try and dispose of his stock in the Brock street rink before he was asked to sever his connection with the police force. Meharry found it impossible at the time to do so, and was consequently asked for his resignation.

The Chief said that he had never neglected or refused to take any complaints brought to him. He did not commence to report on licenses until the beginning of the year 1914. To his knowledge no complaints had been made during the year 1914 or 1915 until the articles appeared in the Review.

To prove the publication of the paper and the letter, Mr. C. E. Curtis, the City Editor, and Mr. J. F. C. Whalley, the Editor, were called. P. C. Blade testified to receiving the publication from a man whom he delegated to purchase a copy. Mr. Tighe was the man and he said he purchased it at the Review office.

As I have said, a soldier must grouch and there are some who think there might be a little more pie for a nickel, but they should consider the profits, "if any," go towards the Regimental fund. If it only supplied something just a wee bittie more exhiliariting, on the same terms, it would be the most popular institution in Belleville. But even "two per cent." and "Cobalt" seems banned. Possibly it is thought the flavour might prove a temptation. Who wouldn't be a soldier?

The outbreak of spinal meningitis seems now to be pretty well in hand and leave of absence are now obtained by those who have a clean bill of health.

Several members of the 39th have been granted their discharge during the past week. Some are medically unfit and some have reconsidered the advantages and glories of soldiering, and decided to pay over $15 and return to the comforts of carpet slippers and the old arm-chair.

Claims Cannot Be Sued Upon

Berlin, via London, April 24.— The Federal Council has extended until July 31 the operation of the order which provides that claims held by foreign persons or corporations which accrued before July 31, 1914, cannot be sued upon in German courts. This order is a counter-measure to the moratoria existing in most of the other countries at war. The chancellor is authorized to make exceptions to the rule in special cases.

The council also has ordered all holders of rice and rice flour in quantities exceeding 200 kilograms (440 pounds) to report to the so-called purchasing agency which is authorized to buy any or all of these commodities reported.

The military commander of the province of Brandenburg has forbidden the sale of detail maps and of guidebooks of literature describing the northern, eastern, or western boundary districts of Germany.

To Put On Flesh And Increase Weight

A Physician's Advice

Most thin people eat from four to six pounds of good solid fat-making food every day and still do not increase in weight one ounce, while on the other hand many of the plump, chunky folks eat very lightly and keep gaining all the time. It's all bosh to say that this is the nature of the individual. It isn't Nature's way at all.

Thin folks stay thin because their powers of assimilation are defective. They absorb just enough of the food they eat to maintain life and a semblance of health and strength. Stuffing won't help them. A dozen meals a day won't make them gain a single "stay there" pound. All the fat-producing elements of their food just stay in the intestines until they pass from the body as waste. What such people need is something that will prepare these fatty food elements so that their blood can absorb them and deposit them all about the body—something, too, that will multiply their red blood corpuscles and increase their blood's carrying power.

For such a condition I always recommend eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is not, as some believe, a patented drug, but is a scientific combination of six of the most effective and powerful flesh building elements known to chemistry. It is absolutely harmless, yet wonderfully effective and a single tablet eaten with each meal often has the effect of increasing the weight of a thin man or woman from three to five pounds a week. Sargol is sold by all good druggists everywhere on a positive guarantee of weight increase or money back.

TO-MORROW AT ST. JOHN'S CHURCH

Rev. R. L. Brydges, M.A., of Toronto, will officiate both morning and evening at St. John's to-morrow. Mr. Brydges was for many years in charge of a leading New York parish which he resigned on the strong invitation of the Bishop of Toronto to accept the newly-formed position of Diocesan Secretary and Organiser for Moral and Social Reform, in which he has been busily engaged for the past year.

Mr. Brydges was formerly associated in work with Rev. Dr. Rainsford as senior curate of St. George's, New York City, where much of his experience in social work was acquired.

BUTTER DOWN TO THIRTY CENTS ON THE MARKET TO-DAY

Butter reduced to a price of from 30 to 32 cents on the market to-day reflected the first influence of spring. Farmers have been turning their cattle out to grass during the past week or two, although it is considered rather early. But with feed costing real money most farmers turn out the cattle and take a chance against them going back. Butter declined to-day in the face of the bear influence of spring-work, which usually tends to diminished attendances. For the next month, therefore, prices should show a weakness.

Potatoes retailed at from 50 to 60 cents a bag. Citizens have a reasonable grievance against farmers who tried to boost prices to $1.00 and more last fall and winter, although they knew they had a very big crop. It is stated on good authority that they are now feeding potatoes to pigs. They frequently complain of the high cost of feed and other alleged high prices, but they are not strengthening their position by recent operations. However, winter is gone and new potatoes will soon be in again.

"West of the Ypres canal we have taken the town of Lizerne, which we stormed.

"In the forest of Pretre, the Germans have made progress.

FREIGHTER SUNK

LONDON, April 24.—The freighter Ruth was sunk by a German submarine in the North Sea on Wednesday. The crew was rescued and landed at Leith, Scotland.

ONLY A LOCAL EFFECT

TORONTO, April 24.—Although the German advance at Langmarke is very important to Canada because of the presence in the fighting of Canadians, it is comforting to observe that in the opinion of the independent war critics the effect of the engagement on the war as a whole is merely incidental. J. W. T. Mason, of New York, the military expert of the United Press, says:

"The whole effect of the German victory is entirely local. It will compel the British to use more troops to defend the outskirts of Ypres but will have no influence on the battle line as a whole. Like all the other engagements in France and Belgium since the present battle line was formed, the German advance across the Ypres canal is a minor skirmish as far as its general effect is concerned.

"It is not at all probable that the German advance signifies the commencement of a new effort to reach Calais. It might as well have been assumed that the British offensive at Neuve Chapelle marked the beginning of an attempt to reach the Rhine. The Germans have doubtless been waiting since their Neuve Chappelle defeat to even up matters."

THE FRENCH REPORT

PARIS, April 24.—The French official communique says:

"Supplementary reports furnish fuller particulars of the way the Germans succeeded in forcing our lines back during Thursday evening, to the north of Ypres between the Yser canal and the Boelcapelle Road. Thick yellow smoke emitted from the German trenches and driven by the northerly winds produced an effect of complete asphyxiation among our troops which was felt even in our second line of trenches.

"Counter attacks made yesterday already have enabled us to regain part of the ground lost. Our situation has been completely consolidated and our action is being carried out under good conditins with the support of the British and the Belgian troops.

"The enemy made an attack at Les Eparges and another at Loweshead, on the forest of Apremont, both of which were repulsed.

"A German attack to the south of the forest of Parray and further attacsk on Reichachkerkopf were stopped by our fire. The enemy suffered heavy losses."

MEN AND SHELLS ARE NEED OF HOUR

Say British Military Expert and Member of Parliament Now at Front

LONDON, April 24.—Colonel Arthur Hamilton Lee, M.P., who was the British military attache with the United States army during the Spanish-American war, and who married Miss Ruth Moore of New York, is at present serving on the continent. He has written a letter home from the British headquarters in France, in which he says:

"The allies have it in their power to win. But this does not mean that victory is close at hand or that the hardest fighting and the heaviest losses are not yet to come.

"The vast German armies occupying and devastating a great part of France and the most of Belgium, are held in check, it is true, but is no sense are they defeated. Our men at the front are keen, skilled and determined, and our victory at Neuve Chapelle has filled them with enthusiasm and confidence. Their one desire now is to advance but this they cannot do without better support from their mates and rulers at home. They fully realize that the casualties already incurred must be doubled and trebled before the victory finally is won. They cannot understand why the greatest manufacturing country in the world cannot supply them with sufficient shells eight months after the outbreak of the war, and they express themselves freely on the subject.

"In the meantime we must all make up for lost time, not counting the cost. Men and shells in an increasing stream is the need of the hour."

Colonel Lee retired from the army in 1900, but rejoined in 1914, and was appointed special service officer with the expeditionary force to the Continent. He was the British Military Attache at Washington in 1898-1900.

BASEBALL

Local fans will be interested in learning that Curly Blount's Youngstown team won their first game in the Central League, beating Wheeling, West Virginia, 6 to 2. Schettler pitched for Youngstown and Rooney played first base, with Blount in centre field.

culated to be destructive to accept able and lasting peace than the formulation of peace terms at this moment," he said.

George Barnes, a leading trades union official who has for many years represented a Glasgow constituency largely by the Irish vote, with whom he is popular, replied to my query, "Tommy rot." He apologized for the unparliamentary phrase and proceeded, "Such proposals are calculated to do more harm than good. They may give the world the idea that England is getting tired. England is not getting tired. There is one way of ending the war. That is by putting down German militarism forever. Anything less than that will not be enduring peace but merely a respite."

John Ward's Views.

The picturesque figure of John Ward, tall, robust and bearing traces of the two occupations to which he has devoted his life, "navvying" and soldiering (he fought in Africa when Kitchener was making his early fame, and he has recently helped in forming a battalion of "navvies"), appeared in the House of Commons the other day resplendent in the uniform of a captain. He was more emphatic than the rest.

"The time to talk of peace is when we are in Berlin, not before," he declared

I then interviewed two members who have lost sons. William Pearce, member from Limehouse, was one. "I should be glad indeed to help toward peace, but I can see no terms at this moment which we could offer Germany which Germany could accept. The Germans will not be ready for peace until they are thoroughly beaten," he said.

Sir Frederick Banbury was the other. A member from the City of London and a Conservative, strongly opposed to the present government and especially to Lloyd George and his finance policy, he declared, "I think all discussion of peace is premature until we have driven the Germans out of Belgium and France."

A Liberal's Opinion.

R. G. Thorne, a typical Liberal, from Wolverhampton, who belonged to the peace and economical party before the war, said, "I hate the war. I have been against the war until now, but this is no time to talk of stopping it. 'I am entirely opposed to a 'drawn battle.' I have sent my son into the trenches and I have not sent him there to obtain a drawn battle. I am perfectly sure the government would not accept such terms and if they did they would have to reckon with the peace men more than with any other group in the House of Commons."

Harry Lawson, the controlling editor of the "Daily Telegraph" wrote me, "To talk of peace at this moment is to play with words and to forget the realities. The Germans are not seeking peace but an armistice which would last as long as the Krupps please. When they use the word 'peace' the Germans mean a peace to cover up their dishonour with actual profit; they mean peace with Antwerp. Such a peace is incredible to men of any English-speaking nation."

Finally John Redmond, who is represented in the fighting ranks by his brother and by his son, who is the apple of his eye, for he is the last male representative of the younger generation of the Redmond family, stated emphatically, "I hope we shall have no peace talk so long as there is a single German soldier left on the soil of Belgium, France, Alsace or Lorraine."

PHILLIES AND TIGERS ARE STILL WINNING

Eight Straight Victories for the Philadelphia Team—Detroit Doubled the Score on Cleveland—White Sox Beat Browns.

NATIONAL LEAGUE.

Philadelphia, April 23 — Philadelphia continued its victorious streak by defeating Boston, to-day, 2 to 1. The home team scored its runs in the second inning on Whited's single and doubles by Niehoff and Luderus. With two out in the ninth, Boston rallied and scored a run, but with two bases occupied Luque ended the game with a grounder to Luderus. Score:

| | R | H | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Boston | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Philadelphia | 2 | 7 | 3 |

Batteries—Rudolph and Whaling; Rixey and Killifer.

Reds Won from Pirates.

Pittsburg, April 23. — Cincinnati pitchers were effective to-day, and the visitors defeated Pittsburg 2 to 1. Two singles and an out gave Cincinnati its first run, and errors by Viox and Cooper in the third inning resulted in the second and winning run. A single and an error by Groh in the eighth inning gave the locals their run. Score:

| | R | H | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cincinnati | 2 | 6 | 4 |
| Pittsburg | 1 | 5 | 2 |

Cubs Trimmed St. Louis.

St. Louis, April 23—A forced run and a grounder by Williams that scored Schulte and Zimmerman gave Chicago three runs in the third inning of the game with St. Louis to-day. Chicago won 3 to 4. Two scores were made for the local team in the third inning on a single to left by Long. Score:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| St Louis | 3 | 9 | 3 |

Batteries — Pierce, Vaughan and Bresnahan; Nieuhaus, Griner and Snyder

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

Cleveland, April 23—Detroit defeated Cleveland 8 to 4 to-day. Cumbe's own wildness caused his retirement, Steen, who replaced him, was effective, but retired to allow the substitution of a pinch hitter. Harstad, who finished, was hit hard. Cleveland drove Covaleski from the box in the sixth, but Dauss proved a mystery. Second Baseman Young of Detroit, sprained a knee sliding into third base in the first inning. Score:

| | R | H | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cleveland | 4 | 11 | 3 |
| Detroit | 8 | 10 | 0 |

Batteries—Coumbe, Harstad, Steen, and Egan; Covaleski, Dauss and Baker

White Son Beat Browns.

Chicago, April 23—Eddie Collins, Fournier and J. Collins proved too much for Lowdermilk to-day, and Chicago made it two straight from St. Louis, 4 to 3. With the locals one run behind in the seventh E. Collins drew his second base on balls and scored on Fournier's triple, which in the initial inning. J. Collins doubled and Fournier scored. Two sacrifices followed and J. Collins scored. Score:

| | R | H | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| St. Louis | 3 | 8 | 0 |
| Chicago | 4 | 5 | 2 |

Batteries—Lowdermilk and Leary; Cicotte, Wolfgang and Schalk.

LACROSSE TO FLOURISH IN LOCAL Y. M. C. A.

That lacrosse is going to be a real-it among the activities promoted by the "Y" was assured last night, when an enthusiastic group of the lovers of the national game met at the Association Hall and elected their executive The Y.M.C.A. is putting its efforts into getting out the young fellows and developing them. This is the only way in which the game can be revived. In doing this we have the support of such men as Messrs. Rollie Glover, George Robertson, Ray Best and several others who know the game from A to Z, and will give their best to developing the game among the youngsters.

The first practice is called for Wednesday, April 28th, at 6.30, and we want a big turnout at that time. All men wishing to come out should be at the Y.M.C.A. at 6.30, ready for work

Among the boys who have signified their intentions of turning out for the team are: Dunsford, Waters, Knapman, Long, E Brown, K. Brown, Horsfield, Darling, Suart, Smythe, Stevens, Eastwood, - Cavanagh, Palmer, Wolf, Halpin, Best, Frank, Galley, Flemming and others. With a bunch of material like this the coaches should develop a first class team.

The Executive Committee are:
Hon. Pres.—R. Glover.
President—Geo. Robertson.
Vice Pres.—Ray Best.
Sec.-Treas.—L. Waters.

"Hans" Lobert Seems a Find at Third Base For McGraw

NEW YORK, April 30—At the end of last season several managers interviewed themselves on the reasons they failed to win the pennant, and the universal excuse was "Federals." The independent organization was blamed by major and minor league pilots for disrupting their teams, for taking their players and for many other things, all of which summed up made perfectly good alibis for not finishing at or near the top.

At the end of this season John McGraw probably will be quietly thanking the Federal League for helping to win him another pennant, if this accomplishment should occur, and the reason for this is "Hans" Lobert, the peppery third baseman who already had won the hearts of Polo Ground patrons.

During the winter just passed, and after Ed. Dooin had been dethroned as manager of the Phillies and "Pat" Moran elevated to the position, John B. Lobert known familiarly as 'Hans' stated firmly he would not play with the Phillies again. He also declared loudly that the Federal League was opening the coffers and showing him so much money he could hardly resist grabbing.

McGraw heard of this and immediately made overtures to Lobert. The Teutonic speed merchant admitted that playing with the Giants was a job to his liking provided the necessary wherewithal was forthcoming. McGraw dickered, begged, entreated and then met Lobert's price, or rather the price offered Lobert by the Baltimore Federal League owners, and Lobert joined the Giants.

That McGraw judged wisely in paying over a goodly sum of money for Lobert has been proved by the playing of the star since the season opened. He has filled the gap at third base as no other man has done since Arthur Devlin wakened and lost his efficiency. Lobert is an aggressive player, a power in the field and at bat, and his acquisition undoubtedly has made the Giants at least 25 per cent. stronger defensively as well as offensively.

In the first three games of the season Lobert shone brilliantly. He was at bat thirteen times and collected eight hits, one a double, for a batting average of .615. In the first game he got to first base every time he came to bat, getting safe drives three times and landing on the initial sack once by error and another time on a fielder's choice. In the second game he was on first the first three times up, or eight times in succession. Friday he hit safely three times out of four and got half of the hits accredited to the team off "Ed" Appleton.

He is a speedy man on the bases, wise in the lore of stealing, and a dangerous man always to the opposition. Already he had stolen bases to his credit, and possibly would have had more if he had not been called upon to wait for another slower footed runner to get off the paths. He hits when such a drive is needed, as was proved Friday when he connected safely twice with a runner in scoring distance and sent across the only two runs earned by the Giants.

In fielding Lobert is sensational. Time after time he has scooped up a slow roller or snapped a speedy bounder and nailed the runner easily at first. He makes errors, of course, but he is trying for everything and usually gets closer to the ball than most third base men.

Decidedly Lobert is a great addition to the Giants, and his presence will go further in helping to bring the lead of the league back to McGraw than any other one factor.

H. COMPANY BEAT BUGLERS

H. Company of the 57th Regiment practically won the championship of the left half of the battalion last night when they defeated the Bugle Band by 18 to 11 in an exciting game which was a see-saw affair until the last couple of innings. Both teams showed lots of pepper and a big crowd enjoyed the battle. The battery work of Hardill and Darling for the winners, and Stewart's drive into the gallery were features. The standing is as follows:

Right Half Battalion.

| Name | Won | Lost | To Play |
|---|---|---|---|
| B. Co. | 2 | 0 | 2 |
| A. Co. | 3 | 1 | 0 |
| Brass Band | 1 | 1 | 2 |
| C. Co. | 1 | 2 | 1 |
| D. Co. | 0 | 3 | 1 |

| Name | Won | Lost | To Play |
|---|---|---|---|
| H. Co. | 2 | 0 | 2 |
| G. Co. | 2 | 1 | 1 |
| F. Co. | 1 | 1 | 2 |

Thought Only of Wife and Kiddies

New Heavyweight Champion Says He Thought Only of Spouse and Family During Fight

LOS ANGELES, Cal., April 20. — Jess Willard undoubtedly has a clear claim to the title of world's champion, but just the same he must share the title with another, for he did not do that great fight in Havana alone.

Mrs. Jess Willard made her husband champion of the world. In a letter she received from him he told her that during every minute of that terrific battle he was thinking of her and the plans they had made for the future of their children. He gave her credit for having prepared him for the triumph.

"Jess gives me too much credit for his success but I am glad to share the championship with him if he wants it that way," said Mrs. Willard. "I am glad that I have been able to help him, but just remember that Jess is naturally a good, clean living man and it has not taken any effort on my part to keep him in the right path.

Thoughts Were of Wife.

"He says I was with him in his thoughts every minute during the battle; well, I was with him in spirit, too, and I am a mighty happy woman to think he has worked his way to the championship of the world.

"There is never any danger of Jess going the way so many champions have gone. He will not be led into fast company just because he has to associate with a lot of sporting men. Jess has a good sturdy stock in him, has lived a simple, honest life, but best of all, he loves his wife and children and will keep his name clean on their account.

"I do not object to Jess being a fighter. I always have been confident that he would one day win the championship and he says it was my confidence in him that has helped him attain the object of his ambition.

Sure He Would Win.

"Both Jess and I were sure he would win when he left here to make arrangements for the fight with the promoters in New York. He never made any plans in the event of his losing. All of our plans were made with a view to his winning that fight.

"You see, we have four children, three girls and a baby boy, Jess, junior, sixteen months old, and Jess not only wanted to win the championship but he wanted to earn money with which to give our children an education. We plan to buy a stock farm in the Middle West. I shall live there if Jess continues fighting and we shall send the children to good schools and later to college.

"Love him? Why, I just idolize Jess. He is no more than a big, clean hearted boy. He delights in getting out here in the yard with the youngsters and rolling and tumbling about in the grass with them. They think he is the greatest man in the world and I am sure they are right."

SHEFFIELD UNITED TO MEET CHELSEA IN THE CUP FINAL

Classic Event of the Football World Will be Played To-day at Manchester—Immense Crowd Expected—Forecast of Result.

Even as the shells burst over them in the trenches thousands of soldiers at the front will turn their mind's eye towards Old Trafford, Manchester, to-day, for there the greatest football event of the year will be fought out between Sheffield United and Chelsea. Thousands at home in the old country will also forget for the time being that there is such a thing as war going on, so obsessed will they be in the struggle which will determine the football champions of England for the season.

This will be the 44th final for the cup of which Burnley are the present holders and it is the first time that Chelsea have had the honour of appearing in this greatest contest of the football season. Strange to say when last a London club appeared in the final they had the same opponents as Chelsea will have to-day and if the "Pensioners" succeed as Tottenham did on that occasion the greatest metropolis in the world will go mad with joy. It will be a splendid night for the German aeroplanes making their much boasted raid on the city as many folks will be so much intoxicated with victory that they will forget to turn their lights out (of course the censor will see that Kaiser Bill is not apprised of the result.

Sheffield's Fourth.

This will be the fourth time that Sheffield United have appeared in the final, the last occasion being in 1902, when they won the trophy by beating Southampton. They have held the cup on two occasions, the year they failed after reaching the final being in 1901 when as already stated Tottenham were their victors.

A Forecast.

Having had previous experience of final ties, the Sheffield United will likely have the balance of favour in tomorrow's battle, as the players are not so likely to get excited as those of Chelsea, but I am not disposed to place too much strength on this, as from long experience I know that there is usually much excitement on both sides on an occasion like this, and neither may be expected to show their best form. On League form the "Blades" undoubtedly are due the greater support, although it is anything but encouraging. Chelsea have done very badly in the League competition; indeed, it will take them all their time to escape relegation, and the fact that two clubs are so far down on the League table should occupy such a high position as cup finalists is another instance of how great are the vagaries of football. I should like very much to see Chelsea win, and thus cause a new name to be inscribed on the cup, but somehow I cannot get over the feeling that the "Blades" will prove too sharp for them, especially in defence. For the United are credited with having one of the best defences in England. I will, therefore, take Sheffield to win by a close majority. Should the result be drawn the replay will take palce on Goodison Park, Liverpool, the ground of Everton.

The Venue.

On a fine day in spring it is doubtful if there be a more suitable club arena in England than the home of Manchester United, and for a wet day there is no rendezvous with such accommodation as Everton can offer. Under the circumstances it is not surprising that Old Trafford and Everton have provided the scene of action for four out of the eight final ties allotted to the provinces.

Generally speaking this, the most interesting match of the season, has been decided either at Kennington Oval or the Crystal Palace. But there came a day when the Surrey Cricket Club vetoed football on their cricket sward, and when the grounds of the Palace, built in connection with the international peace movement, were commandeered for training of troops. Only thrice has the final been given to the provinces in the first instance, and on each occasion Lancashire has been chosen.

Catcher Ainsmith Gets Thirty Days

Fined for Assaulting Street Car Conductor in Washington.

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 23.—Judge Pugh, in the Police Court on Wednesday, sentenced Edward Ainsmith, catcher of the Washington American League team, to thirty days in the workhouse at Occoquan, and Joseph Engel, a pitcher, was fined $50 for alleged assault upon Douglas C. Edwards, a street car motorman. The incident occurred Tuesday night. The ball players were in an automobile owned by Ainsmith. They say that the motorman insulted them. All accounts of the affair seem to be that the ball players left the automobile and followed the motorman into a car barn. There a fracas occurred, in which the motorman was badly beaten. The motorman told the court that they attacked him without warning.

Benjamin S. Minor, president of the ball club, who is an attorney, defended them, and took an appeal in behalf of Ainsmith. Engel paid his fine.

Judge Pugh said the trouble was due to the "hot headedness" of the ball players, and said they needed to be disciplined.

Ireland sent out 20,314 emigrants last year, a decrease of 10,653 from the previous year and the smallest number in any year since 1890.

The Men Of The City And Supervised Playgrounds

On Friday afternoon, April 23rd, a number of the men of the city met the sub-committee of the Local Council of Women, to discuss the matter of supervised play-grounds.

Mrs. Neal, President of the Local Council of Women, spoke for a few minutes, then called upon Mr. Carson, physical director of the Y.M.C.A., to explain the details of the supervised play-ground, the equipment required, and the necessary supervision.

Much interest was shown by the men present in the plans outlined by the members of the Local Council of Women, and the movement to establish a supervised play-ground is assured of hearty sympathy from the men of the city.

A small committee, to assist the supervised play-grounds committee in any way possible, was at once formed. Its members are: Mayor Buller, ex-Ald. Johnson, Mr. Crane, Mr. Sheehy, Mr. Downie, Dr. Cameron. This committee assured the play-grounds committee of their hearty desire to be of use in any capacity.

The co-operation of the men of the city in making Mother's Day a success for the sake of the mothers and children, is earnestly requested.

THE MATTER IS OUT OF THE CITY'S HANDS

New Act Will Render It Unnecessary For Peterboro' to Appoint a Local Electrical Inspector

The Provincial Hydro office has appointed 70 or 80 inspectors in the Province to take over all the work of electric inspection. Municipal inspection and the inspection of the Board of Underwriters is thus rendered unnecessary. The headquarters of the Hydro Inspection Department are on the ground floor of the Continental Life building, 53 Richmond Street West, Toronto, and all inspectors and electric firms in the city are being notified of the change, and instructed to get a copy of the book of regulations. The new arrangement for inspection was authorized last session by the Legislature by section 12 of the amended Power Commission Act.

MATTER WAS DEFERRED.

With the above arrangement in force, Peterborough will not be required to appoint a local electrical inspector. When the city first adopted the Hydro system it was pointed out that an electrical inspector would have to be appointed in accordance with the then existing rules of the Hydro Commission. The matter was discussed in Council several times, and finally it was decided to create the combined office of plumbering and electrical inspector as an alternative building and electrical inspector. A number of applications were received and filed. Action was deferred as the city was, for economical reasons, desirous of delaying the appointment as long as possible. The matter was revived a few weeks ago, when the name of Mr. H. Fife was mentioned in connection with the position.

The new arrangement will render the appointment of a local inspector unnecessary.

BEAUTIFUL BUILDING LOTS.

Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald is offering for sale some beautiful building lots on Benson, Geraldine and O'Carroll Avenues. This property lies within two minutes' walk of the Street Railway and ten minutes' walk of the heart of the City. The City water, gas, light and sewer services are installed, the property being already completely surrounded by beautiful homes. The site is an ideal one, with a gentle south-easterly slope, and being considerably elevated above the city, and not in the immediate vicinity of any manufacturing industries. The air is always pure, healthy and invigorating. Nearly all the lots are already beautifully wooded with foreign and domestic shade trees. Two handsome residences are already under construction on this property and several more will be erected this season and for anyone contemplating the erection of a home there are certainly no lots in the city that offer equal advantages. Copies of registered plan No. 140, which covers this property, may be seen, and all other information may be had at the offices of Mr. R. J. Kidd, J. T. O'Connell & Co., O. J. ## Dr. Amy's May Be Appointed

Medical Officer of Health in Event of Dr. McPherson Leaving For the Front.

Now that Dr. McPherson's services have been accepted for overseas service, there is a likelihood of him being called away at any time, in which case it would be necessary for the city to appoint a medical officer of health during his absence. The name of Dr. Amys has been frequently mentioned in civic circles in connection with the position. Whether he would accept is another matter. At present Dr. Amys occupies the position of chairman of the Board of Health, and is thoroughly conversant with matters concerning that department.

Attempt to Impose On Garbage Collectors

Householders Expect Them to Remove Winter's Accumulation.

That the garbage collectors are not suffering from lack of work is the opinion of Sanitary Inspector Spence. He claims that a number of householders are attempting to impose on the contractors by asking them to remove an accumulation of garbage and refuse. This is contrary to the by law. Then there are others who fail to put their garbage out before seven o'clock in the morning, with the result that it is not removed. The garbage collectors start sharp at seven o'clock.

TO GET SANITY TRIAL.

Thaw Succeeds In Bringing His Case Before a Jury.

NEW YORK, April 24.—Harry K. Thaw, slayer of Stanford White, after many efforts, has finally succeeded in bringing the question of his sanity before a jury. The application for a jury trial made by his attorneys in a writ of habeas corpus was granted yesterday by Supreme Court Justice Hendrick, who upon consultation with counsel set the trial for May 17.

In announcing his decision Justice Hendrick made it clear that the jury was called in "to aid the court by their advice," and that the finding of the jury would not be binding if the court was satisfied that it was not in accord with the evidence and with justice. The court, he said, could disregard the jury's verdict and render his own decision.

Thaw was radiant when he heard the verdict. Many of his friends were in the crowded court-room, and they and his counsel were quick to congratulate him on this successful step in the fight for liberty.

Fair Parisian Honors Gen. Pau.

PARIS, April 24.—An incident in Paris yesterday illustrates the popular regard for Gen. Pau, who has been spending some time in this city since returning from his political mission to Petrograd and the Balkan capitals. Persons who saw the general enter the Red Cross branch in Place Madeleine waited in the street to see him come out. A crowd soon collected. A young girl borrowed a hat and quickly collected enough money in the crowd to buy for the general a huge bouquet of red, white and blue flowers.

Gen. Pau appeared to be deeply moved on receiving the flowers, and kissed the girl. The crowd cheered him, and as he drove off in his motor car he responded by shouting "Vive le France!"

CODDLING THE STOMACH

The So-Called "Scientific" Feeding.

In this 20th century of advancement, people are too apt to listen to new theories and put into practice new-fangled notions of feeding. Not only do adults follow so-called "scientific systems," but they cram down the mouths of their children such scientific soft foods that require no exercise of the digestive organs, and the children are apt to become fragile and their stomachs too weak to take in strength-giving food and be able to assimilate it. This is a hothouse condition that no man, woman or child should permit. The muscles of the stomach require exercise just as any other muscles of the body; neglect them with too much ease and inaction and you raise a dyspeptic. Use a tonic made of medicinal herbs which will stimulate the stomach into greater activity—a remedy which will do this one which has stood the test of public approval for over forty years, containing no alcohol or narcotic. We refer to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

It arouses the little muscular fibres into activity and causes the gastric juices to thoroughly mix with the food you eat, simply because it supplies the stomach with pure, rich blood. It's weak, impure blood that causes stomach weakness. Get good blood through the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and you will have no more indigestion.

Sick people are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. All correspondence is held as strictly private and sacredly confidential.

GERMANS AT SEVERAL PLACES HURLED BACK ADVANCE IS CHECKED

Canadian Troops Saved the Line at the Opening of the Ypres Battle---The Glory of the Combat Belongs to the Canadians.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, April 26.—The sudden German assault north of Ypres, which won for the Germans an advance of a mile and a half and threw their first troops on to the west bank of the Yser Canal, has been blocked—at several places hurled back. But it was not until Sunday morning, after the enemy had stormed and taken the village of Lizerne only to be driven out of it by a series of desperate counter-attacks, that an effective check seemed to have been administered. To-night advice from the front tell of most sanguinary fighting still in progress, with the Germans launching every ounce of force into the violence of their forward rush, and the allies, contesting the issue with equal hardiness, standing fast in the face of their furious offensive.

The glory of the combat has gone to the Canadian troops. After the schck and surprise of the unexpected German onslaught was over they were, from all indications, the first to regain their balance and to rush back upon the positions they had been forced to abandon, driving the Germans to retreat, taking a considerable number of prisoners, including a colonel, and recapturing four 4.7 inch guns which had been left behind. The Canadains are especially mentioned by General French in a report received from him to-day, and are highly commended for their determination and gallantry in the engagement.

CANADIANS SAVED SITUATION.

The War Office report says:

"The fight for the ground into which the Germans penetrated between Steenstraate and Langemarck still continues. The loss of this part of the line laid bare the left of the Canadian division, which was forced to fall back in order to keep in touch with the right of the neighbouring troops.

"In the rear of the latter had been four Canadian 4.7-inch guns, which thus passed into the hands of the enemy. But some hours later the Canadians made a most brilliant and successful advance, resapturing these guns and taking a considerable number of German prisoners, including a colonel.

"The Canadians had many casualties, but their gallantry and determination undoubtedly saved the situation. Their conduct has been magnificent throughout."

But while the Canadian troops were quick in assuming the offensive, they apparently were not much before the Belgians and the French, both of whom were equally affected by the suddenness of the German assault, for, according to to-night's news from Paris, important inroads have been made into the new territory acquired by the Germans, while all of the allies forces are consolidated.

The German success seems to have been wholly dependent upon their use of bombs filled with asphyxiating gases, and the first advantage they were able to gain from this effect upon the allied soldiers. The bases which spread from these bombs were felt as far back as the second line defences. They caused a severe smararting of the eyes, which made it practically impossible for the gunners to work with any degree of accuracy. The first line trenches were made wholly untenable, the atmosphere being so laden with gas that the troops had to fall back or drop in their tracks.

ENEMY DROVE WEDGE.

The space that was thus opened—this was the west and south of Langemarck—served as a breach through which the Germans drove a forward wedge that gained such impetus over the unprotected ground that the advance troops were able to cross to the west bank of the Yser Canal before they were stopped. Meantime, to the north and to the south of Langemarck the entire German front over a distance of seven miles pressed forward with a violence that has scarcely been equalled since the notable drives made last October. Their forces had been heavily augmented by the massing of troops for this very occasion, so that the allied forces found themselves outnumbered from one end to the other.

Along this front the Belgians were at the north, the British, including Canadians, at the south, and the French at the centre. To-day's news tells of the British line bent back last night, having pressed forward again, and of an equal advance by the French and Belgians. There is nothing to indicate, however, that the Germans have yet been driven from the towns of Langemarck, Steenstraate, Hetsas and Pilkelm.

While much of the brilliant fighting seems to have been done by the Canadian troops, it remained for the French zouaves and the Belgian carbineers to drive the Germans from the village of Lizerne, a few minutes after they had occupied it Saturday morning. These fighters did not, how ever, stop at having regained the last village, but pressed on, and also recaptured some of the ground beyond it.

Canadian Casualty List

OTTAWA, April 26—Canada has received her first great casualty list from the fighting at the front. It records the death in action of twenty-two officers, including three Lieutenant-Colonels. In addition, fifty-eight officers have shed their blood, and are on the list of wounded. This, it is to be noted, is not a complete list, and there is no record so far of non-commissioned officers killed or wounded in the heavy fighting of Thursday, Friday and Saturday, which is still going on. The British estimate is ten men to every officer. This would bring the total of Canadian casualties up to 800.

Judging by the lists, the whole Canadian division was engaged in the great battle, though no mention is made of the 15th, commanded by Colonel J. J. Currie. All the others have their toll of dead and wounded to announce. But there is no mention of the artillery, with the exception of the Montreal Heavy Battery, which the Canadians were said to have lost and then recaptured. There are no officers connected with the battery mentioned in the casualty lists. The Germans report the capture of guns and prisoners, and some anxiety is therefore felt here as to the Canadian light artillery, which must have been placed between the heavy battery and the trenches.

The fight was a terrible one, and though Canadians suffered heavily, there is every indication that the division covered itself with glory and acquitted itself in a gallant manner. All day long messages of congratulations have been coming into the Prime Minister and the Minister of Militia testifying in unqualified terms to the splendid part which the Canadian troops played n the action.

Three Majors, eight Captains and seven Lieutenants are dead on the field of honour.

The list of officers killed and wounded is yet incomplete, and the list of non-commissioned officers and men has so far not been received regarding the desperate fighting around Ypres.

Commanding Officers Killed.

CASUALTIES WILL BE AT LEAST 1000

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

TORONTO, April 26. — Canada must steel itself to receive casualty lists of at least one thousand names, killed, wounded and missing, in the general engagements at Langemarck last week. This is the general opinion here. It will possibly be a week or more before full lists are in. The fact that relatives of some officers wounded, have received word to that effect, and their names are not yet in official lists, indicates that the honour roll even of officers is not yet complete. Between eighty and one hundred officers are already named. All precedents in casualty lists prove this means more than one thousand when those of non-commissioned officers and men are added.

"Canada Is Very Proud of Her Sons"

OTTAWA, April 26.—News of the glorious and successful charge of the Canadians in the great battle north of Ypres, reached the Government on Saturday, and was communicated to Sir Robert Borden at his residence to which he is still confined by illness. The Premier at once cabled his congratulations to General Alderson, commanding the Canadian division, in the following terms: "Report of splendid gallantry and efficiency of division under your command has thrilled all Canada with pride. Warmest congratulations."

Premier Borden during the afternoon received the following cable from Earl Grey, former Governor-General of Canada: "Reports gallant conduct Canadians have made me more proud, happy, delighted, than I can tell. Ten thousand congratulations. Long live Canada."

Sir Robert answered this message with the following: "Deeply appreciate your message. Canada is very proud that her sons have upheld so worthily the splendid traditions of our great pioneer races."

Another congratulatory cablegram reached the Minister of Militia from Col. Lord Brooke, who inspected the last annual training camp at Petawawa, and is now with Gen. Sir John French as a staff officer. Lord Brooke telegraphed: "Heartiest congratulations on magnificent behaviour of Canadian troops."

Entire Allied Fleet Bombards Dardanelles

ATHENS, April 26.—The entire allied fleet is to-day bombarding the forts of the Dardanelles and forts all along the line are replying with vigor. The bombardment commenced early Sunday at long range, and no account of the damage has as yet been received.

Hung For Hours In Well Before Help Came

HARRISON, Ark., April 23.— Her baby dead despite the frightful ordeal she experienced in an effort to save him, Mrs. Mary Austin, of this town, is at her home under restraint and apparently hopelessly deranged. For two hours the woman hung from a rope in a well containing fourteen feet of water to-day, her child in her arms and powerless to get back to the surface. When rescued and told that her child was crushed to death she became violent.

The well into which the child had fallen had not been used in years and was located in the centre of a shaded plot of grass near the woman's home. Apparently, the child in some way dislodged the rusty cover of the well and tumbled in. The mother to save him must have jumped immediately into the well. A rope dangled from the well's cover, and although muddy and ragged it held her weight.

Screams were heard faintly nearly two hours before the woman was found, but no one of those who heard them thought of the well.

A boy passing directly over it heard groans and gave the alarm.

REINFORCEMENTS ARE BEING THROWN INTO BATTLE LINE AT EVERY POINT

Fighting Continues With Utmost Intensity and Fury---Canadians Are Still Gallantly Holding Their New Positions --Canadians Supremely Confident.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

(By Wm. G. Shepherd.)

(Copyright 1915, by United Press; Copyright in Great Britain.)

At Headquarters of British Overseas Army, Northern France, Sunday, April 25, via London, April 26.—"The further they come the harder they'll get whipped." The above phrase was the sharp comment of Field Marshall Sir John French, Commander-in-Chief of the British forces when apprised that the Germans had hacked their way through to the Ypres Canals, is to-day the slogan of the entire British army.

It expresses the supreme confidence of the entire force of the Canadian regulars and volunteers, and is being followed up by an onslaught all along the line to try and recover the lost ground, that for fierceness has never been equalled in any previous war.

The fighting continues of the utmost intensity, and reinforcements are being thrown into the battle line at every point where reports of airmen indicate, the Germans have massed for a renewed assault. Standing on the hill five miles from Ypres to-day, I saw reflected all along the fifteen miles panamera filled with smoke, the gigantic opposition which Gen. French's army is making against the weight of the reinforced German war machine. Through smoke and tumult of the horizon, dotted with white clouds from the bursting shrapnel, the British still hold all of their positions in the vicinity of Hill 60. Over the hill itself a dense smoke cloud hangs, placed there by the enormous shells from the German guns which constantly burst over every portion of the British and Canadian positions. Six miles north-east of Ypres, positions where the Canadians still are gallantly holding their new positions, the line can just be distinguished through a whitish smoke. Ypres itself is being subjected to an almost continuous bombardment from the German heavy artillery and has been set on fire in many places. The great tower of beautiful Cloth Hall glistens in the sunlight above a sea of smoke which fills the city, offering a great target to hostile guns. Smoke from six burning Belgian villages is easily discernable on the horizon, while above it all can be picked up, British aeroplanes reconnoitring the enemy's positions and watching as the eyes of the army, for a new massing of troops that forecasts another attempted advance. The quantity of the German poisoneous gases which shewered over the allied lines was so great that the ground for a wide area has turned a deep yellow, which, viewed from the distance, seems as though it were covered with powder. Although the allied soldiers were effected for an area half a mile behind their trenches, the German soldiers rushed into the fumes unharmed. This was explained when on prisoners were found wads of cotton, and they said that they had received instructions to plug their nostrils when charging after gas guns had been fired. From Gen. French down the British believe that the present drive is the supreme attempt of the German General Staff to hack through to Calais and every precaution has been taken to meet the movement.

Story of the Capture by the British of Hill No. 60---Enemy Was in Panic---Those in Rear Drove Their Bayonets Into Bodies of Comrades---Attempts to Drive Off British Fail.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, April 26.—"Trenches, parapets and sandbags disappeared," says the British official "eye-witness" in describing the effect of the explosions of the British mines which preceded the attack and capture by the British of Hill No. 60 to the southeast of Ypres recently.

"The whole surface of the ground," the narrative continues, "assumed strange shapes. Here is was torn into huge craters; there large mounds of fallen debris were to be seen.

"As the reports of the explosions died away, and while dense columns of smoke and dust still hung in the air, our men, led by their officers, sprang from the trenches and rushed across the intervening space of some 40 to 60 yards lying between our line and the gaping craters before them, the front covered by the attack being only some 250 yards in length.

"Where the mines had actually exploded nothing was left of the occupants of the hostile line, but in the neighbouring trenches our assaulting infantry witnessed extraordinary scenes. Many German soldiers, possibly owing to the fact that they were working, were surprised while in their shirt sleeves and without equipment. Stunned by the violence of the explosions, bewildered and suddenly subjected to a rain of hand grenades thrown by our bombing parties, they gave way to panic.

"Cursing and shouting, they were falling over one another and fighting in their hurry to gain the exits leading into the communication trenches. Some of those in the rear, maddened by terror, were driving their bayonets into the bodies of their comrades in front of them.

BURST THROUGH TRENCHES.

"Of all this our infantry had but a momentary glimpse before they fell

FOR THE KIDNEYS

A Guaranteed Treatment, Money Back If It Fails

Kidney diseases are more prevalent than is generally supposed, and are not always recognized as such. What was at first but a slight derangement of the kidneys often results in indigestion, rheumatism, anaemia, chronic and very painful headache, neuralgia, eye weakness, and other diseases of a most aggravating type. Therefore it is highly important and absolutely necessary that the kidneys and the urinary system be kept in an active and healthy condition.

After a thorough experience with the most successful forms of kidney treatment, we are confident that the one remedy which embraces the most desirable, safe and efficacious curative qualities, so necessary to the successful treatment and positive eradication of kidney diseases in general, is Rexall Kidney Pills.

We are so positive that Rexall Kidney Pills are unexcelled, and that they will do all we claim, that we sell them with our own personal guarantee that they shall not cost the user a cent if they should fail to give entire satisfaction.

We particularly recommend Rexall Kidney Pills, for kidney ailments that resist ordinary treatment. We believe, if taken according to directions with regularity and persistency for a reasonable length of time, they will positively remove all symptoms and effect permanent relief.

Surely we could not more strongly demonstrate our faith in Rexall Kidney Pils, and our generous guarantee should convince the most sceptical that we would not dare make such a statement except we know what we are talking about. We urge you to buy Rexall Kidney Pills at once. Price 50c. Sold in this community only at our store.—The Rexall Store.

War Zone Must Be Disinfected

PARIS, April 24—"Seven months after the beginning of the retreat of the Germans," says Dr. Doizy, deputy for the department of the Ardennes "unburied dead are being discovered on the battlefield of the Marne. In the centre of a village on the banks of the Marne, where the sanitary department was clearing away the debris, they brought to light a body that was beyond identification either as a German or French.

"Hundreds, if not thousands, of bodies are supposed to be lying more or less submerged in the Saint Gond marshes where the Prussian Guard was thrown back; they had neither the time nor the means to save those who fell there."

To Avoid Pestilence.

In order to avoid the pestilential effects of warm weather on these unburied corpses, Dr. Doizy thinks it will be necessary to explore the entire swamp region with the aid of dogs.

Bodies are also being found constantly under brush in ditches and abandoned trenches. They are found not only in ditches, trenches, and excavations made by shells, but in wells, springs, and all the little streams of the region. In many places where it was possible for them to bury their dead they were insufficiently covered with earth, and were frequently buried in too close proximity to sources of water supply.

Over 5,000 Square Miles.

These conditions exist over a zone 250 miles long, and from 10 to 40 miles wide, with a total of from 5,000 to 6,000 square miles of ground, a considerable part of which required thorough disinfection to prevent the outbreak of epidemics. Besides the bodies of men there were in this zone thousands of bodies of animals, part of them killed by shell fire and many of them dead from starvation, having been abandoned by the fleeing population.

WORTH REMEMBERING

Silk shirts and stockings should never be ironed, as it cracks and rots the silk.

If a cake sticks to the pan, turn the pan upside down and lay a cloth wet in cold water over it. After three or four minutes the cake can usually be removed.

To remove grease spots from delicate coloured silk, take a lump of magnesia and rub it wet on the spot. Let it dry, then brush off and the spot will be gone.

A crack in the range can often be repaired by using a filling made of wood ashes and common salt moistened with water. This will prove hard and lasting.

An acre of bananas will produce one and a third times as much food as an acre of wheat or potatoes, and four times as much as an acre of rye.

To protect baggage as it is unloaded from the cars an eastern railroad has equipped several stations with movable platforms made of pieces of old air brake hose fastened across resilient wooden strips.

"THE GRELL MYSTERY"

By Frank Frocst

"That's curious," he said slowly, "very curious. You are the third person to confess to the murder. Really, I don't believe you can all be guilty."

She stared at him in dumb amazement. Her tortured mind was slow to accept a new idea. "The third!" she echoed mechanically.

"Yes, the third. The others are Mr. Robert Grell and the woman you know as the Princess Petrovska, who in our police jargon would be described as alias Lola Dachael alias Lola Goldenburg." He smiled down at her as she turned her bewildered face towards him. "So you see, there is no gerat need to alarm yourself. The mystery is all but cleared up. If you will permit me, my dear young lady, I should like to congratulate you."

"But—but——" She struggled for words.

Foyle seated himself, and picking up a pen beat a regular tattoo on his blotting-pad. He went on, unheeding the girl's interruption.

"I won't deny that if you had told me you killed Harry Goldenburg a day or two ago, I might have believed you, and it might have made things awkward. But there is now no question of that. We know now that it was neither you nor Mr. Grell. If you had told us the real facts at first so far as you were concerned, it would have simplified matters." However, there is no reason why you shouldn't do so now."

The warm blood had suffused her cheeks. She had risen from her seat, unable at first to comprehend the full meaning of it all. "I cannot understand," she exclaimed.

"You will presently. Now, if you don't mind, sit down quietly, and tell me in your own way exactly what happened on the night this man was killed. Take your own time. I shall not interrupt."

A lurking fear at the back of the girl's mind that he was trying by some subtle means to entrap her into an admission that would implicate Grell disappeared. He dropped his pen. She searched the square face, but coul see nothing behind the mask of smiling good-nature. Her own curiosity was alight, but she sternly suppressed it.

"You know about the letter?" she asked. "The letter I got from Goldenburg."

"Well, that was the beginning. I did not know it was from Goldenburg then, for it was unsigned, and both the address and the note itself were in typewriting. It was delivered by an express messenger. It said that the writer had something of importance affecting my future happiness to say to me, and that I could learn what it was by calling at Mr. Grell's house about ten. The writer advised me to keep my visit as secret as possible."

"Ah! What time did you get the note?"

"I am not quite sure. It was about half-past nine or quarter to ten."

"Very neatly timed to prevent you making inquiries beforehand. Go on."

"I was perhaps a little frightened and the note piqued my curiosity. The quickest way to learn what was wrong seemed to me to follow the writer's instructions. I went to Grosvenor Gardens, where I was apparently expected, for a man-servant let me in and took me to Mr. Grell's study. I walked in by myself, not permitting him to announce me. The room was in semi-darkness, but I could make out a figure on a couch at the other end of the room. I walked over to it. The face was in shadow, and not until I was quite close could I see the stain on the shirt front. It took me a few moments to realise that the man was dead.

"Then I wanted to scream, to call out for help, but I could not. It was all too terrible—horrible—like a ghastly dream. Gradually my wits and my senses returned to me. It came into my mind like a flash that the letter I had received invited a blackmail. I could not see the dead man's face."

Her voice died away and she looked a little hesitatingly at the superintendent. He nodded encouragement.

"Don't be afraid, Lady Eileen. You had found a dead man in Mr. Grell's house—a man whom you suspected of blackmailing your fiancee. You not unnaturally thought that he had been killed by Mr. Grell."

"Yes." She was speaking in a lower key now. "I feared that Mr. Grell in an excess of passion had killed him. What was I to think?" She made a gesture of helplessness with her hands. "My brain was in a whirl, but I seemed to see things clearly enough. I dared not raise an alarm, for I recognised that my evidence as far as it went would be deadly against the man I loved. I laid my hand on the dagger to withdraw it, but at that moment I heard the door behind me open and close quickly. I turned, but not sharply enough to see who the intruder was.

"Then the idea came to me that I must get quickly out of the place. So far as I knew I was the only person who could guess that Mr. Grell had been blackmailed and so supply a motive for the crime. I slipped downstairs and went home. You will understand my state of mind. At about eleven o'clock I thought of a possible chance of speaking to Mr. Grell. I rang up his club. Sir Ralph Fairfield answered. He assured me that Mr. Grell had been there all the evening, but was too busy to speak to me. I was unspeakably relieved.

"Then in the morning, he, Sir Ralph Fairfield, came to see me. I partly guessed his mission, but the full shock came when he told me that it was Mr. Grell who was murdered. I think I must have been mad at the time. I said nothing about my discovery—if Mr. Grell had been blackmailed, I did not want any details to come out. Besides, it seemed obvious to me that Fairfield had said Grell was at the club in order to shield himself." She flushed slightly. "I knew Sir Ralph loved me. I thought he was guilty and—and denounced him.

"I continued to believe that until the Princess Petrovska came to me with a note from Mr. Grell bidding me trust her. I gave her my jewels, and she told me he could communicate with me by cipher. I returned to my first idea that he had killed Goldenburg—the Princess told me the murdered man's name — rather than submit to blackmail. I determined to do all I could to help him, for, murderer or not, I loved him—I loved him. You know how our attempt to communicate by cipher failed.

"A day or two ago he sent me a note—a mysterious note—saying we were both in danger. I could not understand that part of it, but it was clear he wanted money. I could not get it except by putting my father's name to a cheque. You know all about that. I took a taxicab and arranged to meet him at Putney."

"You went to the General Post Office before that," interposed Foyle.

"Yes. I wanted to order a motor car to meet us at Kingston. I thought it safer to do it from a public-call office so as to leave as little trace as possible. I picked Mr. Grell up at Putney, and gave him the money. Neither of us referred directly to the murder during the journey. He told me that he was making for his place in Sussex, and should there make a plan for getting out of the country. He argued that the less I knew of details the better."

"A reasonable feeling, under the circumstances," murmured Foyle. And then, with a smile, "Your fingerprints on the dagger have been partly responsible for a lot of bother, Lady Eileen. If you had followed my advice at first—but it's no use harping on that. You have believed Mr. Grell to be the murderer, I suppose, and made your confession to shield him. I don't know that I oughtn't to congratulate you both, for he has certainly made enormous sacrifices, and taken enormous risks to shield you."

"To shield me?" Her astonishment was palpable.

"To shield you. He had at least as much reason—if you'll forgive me saying so—to believe you guilty as you had to think he was a murderer. It was he—if my guess is correct—who opened the door while you were stooping over the murdered man. He must have jumped to the conclusion that you had at that moment killed the man, and took his own way of diverting suspicion from you. That is the only explanation that appears plausible to me."

A new light of happiness was in her grey eyes, and she smiled. The direct commonsense of the detective had brought home to her the motive for the portion of the mystery that until that moment had perplexed her. Robert Grell had laid down everything for her sake. And she had never thought—never dreamed. . . . The voice of Foyle, apparently distant and far away, broke in on her thoughts.

"I have sent for Mr. Grell. He will be here shortly. There is still some light that he may be disposed to throw on the affair—now. Meanwhile, if you do not object, I should like to have the statement you have just made put in writing. I will have a shorthand writer in and place this room at your disposal."

She murmured some words of assent and he disappeared. In a few minutes he returned with one of the junior men of the C.I.D., who carried a reporter's notebook in one hand and a pencil in the other.

Heldon Foyle strolled away to Sir Hilary Thornton's room. The Assistant Commissioner was just hanging up his overcoat. He turned quickly and held out his hand to the superintendent.

"Congratulations, Foyle. I hear it's all plain sailing now. Come and tell me all about it."

CHAPTER LV.

For ten minutes the two heads of the detective service of London were in conference. Then there was an interruption. The door was pulled open without any preliminary knock, and Chief-Inspector Green strode swiftly in, with Robert Grell at his heels. Both men were plainly stirred by some suppressed excitement. Green laid a note down in front of Foyle.

"Petrovska has killed herself," he exclaimed. "The matron found her poisoned in her cell, a minute or so after I reached Malchester Row. There was poison in one of her rings. She left this letter addressed to you."

"Ah!" There was no betrayal of astonishment or any other emotion in the superintendent's tone. He fingered the letter carelessly. "Won't you sit down, Mr. Grell? No doubt you'll excuse us for a moment. Sit down, Green."

He tore open the letter and glanced over the neat, delicate handwriting. Thornton was leaning eagerly across the table. "A confession?" he asked.

"Yes—a confession," he replied. "Shall I read it aloud?" His eyes rested for an instant on Robert Grell. "You may care to hear it," he added.

"Go on," said Thornton.

Foyle spread the sheets on the table in front of him and began to read in a steady, expressionless tone.

"Heldon Foyle, Esq., Superintendent, C.I.D., New Scotland Yard, S.W.—Sir,—It would be futile, after what happened this morning, to dispute any longer the correctness of the conclusions you have come to. I killed Harry Goldenburg, and there is no need for any cant about repentance. He deserved all he got. As for myself, I was fool enough to step into a trap, and there is only one way out. I ought to have beaten you, but as I failed, it may interest you to know the bare facts.

"Goldenburg was, as you guessed, my husband, though it was long since we had lived together. Before I met him, however, I had become acquainted with Mr. Grell—I think it was in Vienna. I was on the stage there, and had a circle of admirers, of whom he became one. Whether you believe it or not, I assure you, on the word of a dying woman, there was nothing harmful in our intimacy. But letters passed, and his I kept.

"He disappeared out of my life after a while, and ultimately I met Goldenburg. We were both living on our wits. I, of course, could not fail to be struck by his astonishing likeness to Mr. Grell, and he told me eventually of their relationship. There is no use beating about the bush. Other people than Grell had written to me in the old days, and I had my own methods of forcing them to keep me silent. In plain words, a great part of my living was by blackmail, but I naturally acted very delicately. Harry Goldenburg wormed his way into my confidence, and it occurred to me that such a man would be an invaluable ally.

"We worked together for a while—I forgot to say we had been married—and I entrusted him with all the letters I had—including Grell's. Even the keenest woman will be a fool sometimes. You will guess what happened. He saw no need to share his plunder with me, and he left me. There was no open quarrel, but I determined that some day I would get even. But on the few occasions we met afterwards I preserved a friendly attitude. I even helped him in certain affairs.

"Then there came the time when Mr. Grell sought me out and paid me to attempt to recover his letters. I jumped at the chance, for apart from the money it seemed a fine opportunity to score off Goldenburg. I hadn't much difficulty in getting in touch with him when he reached London. He thought—and I encouraged the thought—that, like himself, I had been attracted here by the prospect of bleeding Grell on the eve of his marriage. I proposed a business partnership, and he, probably laughing in his sleeve, agreed. He had no intention of paying me my share, but he thought I might be useful in case the threat of publishing the letters might not be enough.

"But I never got the letters, although I used every means that occurred to me. I even suggested that he should entrust them to me so that I might try to extort money by their means from Lady Eileen Meredith. He would have none of it. I changed my ground and arranged to accompany him on what was to be the final recisive interview with Grell on his wedding eve.

"I said little during the preliminary talk. Both men were firm. Goldenburg declared that he would not give up the letters entirely. Grell was equally determined not to pay unless they were given to him.

"When I at length broke into the conversation I asked Grell for the letters I had written to him. I wanted to get him out of the room. He must have understood my look, for he at once said he had burnt them, but would make sure. He left the room. As soon as he was gone I played my final card with Goldenburg. I knew that the time had gone by for finesse; I told him that unless he gave up the letters I would suggest to Grell taht he should declare them forgeries, and that I would bear him out.

"I think even Goldenburg was taken aback, for the revelation that I was playing double came as a shock to him. He laughed at me at first, but I could see that he had lost his temper. Then he swort at me for a Jezebel, and half rose as though he would strike me. But I was first. There was a dagger on the mantelpiece. For a moment I saw red. When I was again capable of thought I say Goldenburg lying on the south, motionless, and I knew what I had done.

"I struggled to get a grip on myself. At any moment Grell might return. I could not be sure of what he might do, and my whole idea was to save myself at any cost. Goldenburg had fallen back on the couch. I had taken two steps to the door when there was a sound outside. I drew back behind a curtain, expecting Grell. Instead of that, a woman came in. She was heavily veiled, and though I did not know her then I was positive it was Lady Eileen Meredith, for Goldenburg had hinted at some such dramatic surprise if Grell did not come to terms. I saw her stoop over the murdered man, and then Grell opened the door. He stared for a second, an then closed the door again just as Lady Eileen looked up.

"To him it must have appeared that she had killed the man. I expected her to scream, but she did nothing of the sort. She went out, closing the door softly. I followed her within a minute or so, for I began to have an idea how things might be turned to my advantage. I went straight back to my hotel, and made arrangements to secure a sort of alibi. But I wanted to know how things were going. I had told Grell that if it became necessary to write me under cover, he might do so at the poste restante, Folkestone. There it was I heard before I returned to London. He declared that he had killed Goldenburg, a statement I had the best of reasons for knowing was false. But it left me with an easier mind. I had no wish that he should be questioned by the police, for that might have given rise to questions as to why I was at the house, and how I left.

"That was why I helped him by every means in my power. I think now it would have been perfectly easy for me to have disappeared without raising more than a fleeting suspicion in any one's mind. But we cannot foresee everything. And I believed that my safety lay in keeping Grell at liberty. What he thought of my motives for helping him, I do not know—he may have believed them to be gratitude, or something else. Anyway, he trusted me, and to make sure I more than once hinted that I had an idea that Lady Eileen Meredith was the guilty person.

"It was I who supplied funds for the most part, and it was only when my resources threatened to give out, that we tried other methods. When I left for Liverpool, I was nearly at the bottom of my purse. The arrangement with Mr. Grell was, that I should remain in hiding there until such time as he could obtain money to enable us to get out of the country. Then I was to join him. I got a wire from him at last fixing Dalehurst Grange, and knowing that the stations would be watched, I determined to motor down.

Heldon Foyle finished reading, and there was a moment's silence, broken at last by a gasp from Grell.

"It was she, then, not—not—"

"Not Lady Eileen Meredith," interrupted Foyle. "But do you confirm what she says there, Mr. Grell?"

Grell reached out and took the paper with a hand that shook. He scanned it quickly, and handed it back to the superintendent.

"She is right in everything she says about me," he admitted. "I did think—God forgive me!—that my own eyes were right I believed that Eileen had killed that man. That it was influenced me in everything I did. Till this moment, I had no idea——" He wheeled almost angrily on Green. "Why didn't you say why you brought me here?"

The chief inspector shrugged his shoulders. "My instructions were to bring you here—not to give explanations."

"I thought it best that you should learn all there was to know at your leisure," interjected Foyle. "Of course, we knew nothing of this"—he tapped the confession as he spoke—"before you came in."

Sir Hilary Thornton smoothed his moustache. "It has been an unpleasant business for all of us," he said urbanely, "and particularly for you, Mr. Grell. I can scarcely apologise for the trouble that you have been caused, for, frankly, you have brought it all on yourself, though unofficially, I may say that I have never known a man behave with greater courage than you have in this matter. I am afraid that some of the things your fr——, your associates, have done, will have to be answered for, but anything consistent with our duty will be done for them. Perhaps Mr. Foyle will tell us the story of the case now. You are at least entitled to that."

CHAPTER LVI.

A deprecating smile came to the superintendent's lips. Robert Grell was studying him curiously. He recognised that he owed much to the blue-eyed, square-faced detective.

"Yes, I think I am at least entitled to that," he echoed.

Foyle gave a shrug. "As you like, gentlemen. You once complained, Sir Hilary, that I talked like a detective out of a book. This kind of thing makes me feel like one—except that, in this case, I cannot claim much credit. I only used common sense and perseverance."

"Let us have it," said Grell. He was beginning to be his own masterful self.

"Very well. It has all been a matter of organisation. You will remember, that in dealing with an intricate case no man is at his best working alone. However able or brilliant a detective is, he cannot systematically bring off successful coups single-handed—outside a novel. He is a wheel in a machine. Or perhaps, a better way to put it would be to say, he is a unit in an army. He is almost helpless alone.

"There are many people who believe that a detective's work is a kind of mental sleight of hand. By some means, he picks up a trivial clue which inevitably leads, by some magical process, to the solution of the mystery. I do not say that deductions are not helpful, but they are not all. A great writer once compared the science of detection to a game of cards, and the comparison is very accurate. A good player can judge, with reasonable certainty, the cards in the hands of each of his opponents. But he can never be absolutely certain—especially when he is unacquainted with his opponents' methods of play.

SICK, SOUR STOMACH, GAS, INDIGESTION OR GAS

"Pape's Diapepsin" Makes Upset Stomach Feel Fine in Five Minutes

Wonder what upset your stomach—which portion of the food did the damage—do you? Well, don't bother. If your stomach is in a revolt; if sour, gassy and upset, and what you just ate has fermented into stubborn lumps; head dizzy and aches; belch gases and acids and eructate undigested food; breath foul, tongue coated—just take a little Pape's Diapepsin and in five minutes you wonder what became of the indigestion and distress.

Millions of men and women to-day know that it is needless to have a bad stomach. A little Diapepsin occasionally keeps this delicate organ regulated and they eat their favourite foods without fear.

If your stomach doesn't take care of your liberal limit without rebellion; if your food is a damage instead of a help, remember the quickest, surest, most harmless relief is Pape's Diapepsin which costs only fifty-cents for a large case at drug stores. It's truly wonderful—it digests food and sets things straight, so gently and easily that it is really astonishing. Please, for your sake, don't go on and on with a weak, disordered stomach; it's so unnecessary.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE IS IT REASONABLE?

Come, Let Us Reason Together, Saith the Lord"

Remarkable Growth of This Cult—Its Adherents—Their Realization of a Supernatural Power Outside of Man—An Outgrowth of Present-Day Conditions — Are Its Teachings Logical?—Some Perplexing Problems—Power of the Will In Resisting Disease.

Binghamton, N. Y., April 25.—Pastor Russell's discourse here today was of unusual interest. His text was, "Come now, let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." (Isaiah 1:18.) He said in part:

What a man believes or disbelieves is his own business, and not subject to public criticism. But when a number of people associate themselves, adopt a name, publish their doctrines to the world and invite members, their doctrines are properly subject to public criticism. They still preserve their individual rights, however. Doctrines only may be criticised; and these should be honestly treated, not misrepresented. This applies to every creed, every cult; and all honest people should welcome such investigation and truthful criticism. We assume that Christian Scientists, therefore, will appreciate what we now have to say as much as, or more than, others. We trust that we always have this attitude toward any criticism leveled against our public teachings. We are therefore following the Golden Rule laid down by the Lord, and acknowledged by all.

The growth of Christian Science has astonished the world. Its teachings seem to have appealed to a very intelligent, well-to-do class of people, of considerable mental independence, possessed of considerable "backbone." So far as we have conversed with them we find that physical healing seems to have been more or less associated with their conversion to their cult. Either themselves or their friends have been healed. Their realization of the cure brought them religious conviction as instead of the doubts and wonderments of their previous experiences. The awakening to this conviction that there is a real power outside of man, a supernatural power, aroused a religious sentiment such as they had never known before. It seems to them that they have started a new life.

The reason for this is that nominal Christianity is merely a form of godliness, without power or conviction. This form of godliness has spread to such an extent that the whole world is styled Christendom—Christ's Kingdom. In countries like Great Britain, Germany, Russia and Scandinavia, approximately ninety-five per cent. of the population are rated as Christians, even though some of these are in prison, some in insane asylums, and some too young to think at all or be anything. In Italy, everybody is rated a Christian—although amongst some of the Italians who come to our shores flourish works of the Devil, such as the Black Hand, the Mafia, etc.

Additionally, a sincere class of Christian people have, during the last fifty years, been in great perplexity because of the stupendous nonsense intermingled with Truth which was handed down to us from the Dark Ages. Under the increasing light, thinking people have not been able to swallow some of the monstrous statements of the creeds as readily as did their forefathers. The persecution of Baptists gave place to toleration—that they might baptize as they chose, even though their teaching that immersion is the door into the Church implied that all the unimmersed are outside the true Church, outside the pale of salvation, and hence prospectively subject to eternal torture. Presbyterians and Methodists, unable to down each other on the subject of Election or Free Grace, agreed to "live and let live."

The great churches which formerly persecuted all others as heretics, forbidding any to preach except by their ordinations, gradually found themselves compelled to desist from making their tenets too prominent. Thus people are more or less bewildered as to what are the differences between the various denominations; and many conclude that the only difference is in forms, ceremonies, ordinations, etc.

The doctrine that God had foreordained 999 out of every 1,000 to an eternity of torture in fire was gradually looked at as too horrible to believe. The alternative doctrine, that God did not foreordain the matter thus, but had not the wisdom or power to avoid such a catastrophe for His creatures, was equally repugnant. As a consequence, preachers began to tell that the destiny of the world was not literal fire, but gnawing of conscience, etc.—each manufacturing a Hell in accordance with his own wisdom or ignorance and to suit his congregation.

Under such conditions Christian Science was born, and has grown to its present proportions. Three things especially favored it: (1) its acceptance of the Bible; (2) its rejection of everlasting torment, mental or physical; (3) its teaching respecting Divine healing. Mrs. Eddy, the acknowledged head of Christian Science, had a keen mind and considerable wisdom in its exercise. She would hold to the Bible, even though she needed to pervert its teachings. She would not make her teachings respecting the future life too pronounced or too antagonistic to other theories. She contented herself with vague, ambiguous statements re the future life. She laid principal stress on healing, and settled all doctrinal difficulties with the dictum that there is no evil, there is no sin, there is no death; that what have been called sin, death and evil are merely errors of the mind.

The very absurdity of some of these statements advertised them. People said, What does it mean—There is no death, no sickness, no pain, no sorrow, no evil of any kind? Absurd! Later, they said, We will see how Christian Scientists explain death, sickness, pain, sin. Thus curiosity led them into the metaphysical labyrinth which Mrs. Eddy had skilfully constructed. Having no intelligent knowledge of the Bible, they were just in condition to fall an easy prey to "Mother Eddy's" errors. If some of her definitions were fanciful, far-fetched and unscriptural, they were no more so than the teachings to which people had been accustomed from childhood and which substantially claim that the more unreasonable and illogical a matter is, the more faith is implied by the believing of it.

Christian Scientists feel what might be termed spiritual pride in connection with their healing practices and with the public reading of the Scriptures and Mrs. Eddy's comments—as much spiritual pride perhaps as is sometimes felt in other churches by preachers, elders, deacons, vestrymen, deaconesses, etc. To be lifted from the ordinary walks of life to places of distinction in Christianity, especially in scientific Christianity, would surely appeal to the majority. Once elevated to position as readers or practitioners or healing practitioners, it becomes their duty loyally to support and defend the system which they represent. And so, just as earnestly as with other sects, the establishment and defence of Christian Science goes courageously onward.

Still another class is interested, financially—those in control of the Christian Science literature. It sells at good stiff prices; and anybody questioning the merchandising of the truth is given to understand that he is unappreciative; and with the majority of people the price regulates the value, anyway.

Having, we believe, fairly stated the facts and claims of Christian Scientists, we now inquire whether or not their teachings are logical. We hold that they are not, and will endeavor to show in what respects this is true.

"Mother Eddy," striving after a truth, declared that there is no pain, no sickness, no sorrow, etc. The truth she was feeling after, but did not fully grasp, is that sin, sickness, sorrow, death, are abnormal conditions. There could be none of these, except for the curse that came upon our race at the beginning, because of disloyalty to God. We agree with Mrs. Eddy to the extent that these conditions are not designed by God to be everlasting. He does not recognise them as proper for those in fellowship with Him.

Nothing gives us any reason to suppose that they have prisons, insane asylums, hospitals, doctors or cemeteries in Heaven, where all is perfect and in fullest harmony with God. Messiah's great work of Redemption will obliterate these unsatisfactory conditions from the earth. Jesus Himself tells us that their abolition will be the result of His Kingdom work of a thousand years. — Revelation 20:6; 21:4; 22:3.

But is it wise for us to say in one breath that all these will pass away, and in the next breath that they are non-existent? Surely we all value consistency and logic! Otherwise language would bring us merely confusion, instead of intelligence. Let us then say that, with mankind in proper relationship with God, there would be none of these things; that they exist now because man is out of relationship with God through sin; and that God's provision, according to the Bible, is that mankind shall be delivered from this bondage of sin and death into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. —Romans 8:21.

In this view, too, we see that the perfect earth was represented in Eden, and that eventually Eden will be world-wide. The perfect race was represented in Father Adam before he sinned; and through Christ, eventually the earth will be filled with perfect human beings, such as Adam was. Then whoever will not come into fullest accord with the Lord will die the second death. They will be perishing like natural brute beasts, which St. Peter mentions—the punishing with an everlasting destruction, mentioned by St. Paul. (2 Peter 2:12; 2 Thessalonians 1:9.) But nothing in the Bible implies an everlasting torture of any member of our race or even of Adam himself.

In the Bible presentation there is a special place for the Church of the Gospel Age, called out of the world before the Restitution Times. Her acceptance of the Call implies her attempt to live in fullest harmony with the Lord under present imperfect, unsatisfactory conditions—even to the extent of laying down life for the brethren, for the service of God and His Word. To this Church class, the Bible assures us, will come a still higher blessing than that of Restitution. The Church is to have spirit nature—yea, the highest form of spirit nature, "the Divine."—2 Peter 1:4.

We commend Christian Scientists for their endeavor to hold fast to the Bible, but remind them that not the letter of the Bible merely will enlighten and sanctify, but its spirit, its real meaning. This is obtainable, not by confusing definitions, but by simplicity of mind in accepting the words for what they are and putting them together in logical order.

Let us give Mrs. Eddy credit for desiring to be logical; but let us notice that, whatever she thought, her language was confusing when she said, "There is no death, no sickness, no pain." The most that can be conceded by the most generous logician would be that there should be no death, no sickness, no pain, no sorrow, if things were in right condition. But they are not in right condition, as the Bible declares and as all can see. And they will not be so until the Saviour who redeemed the world by the sacrifice of Himself shall assume His kingly office and right the wrongs which sin has brought us. As a result of His work, there will then be—at the close of the Millennial Age—no sin, no death, no sorrow, no pain.

But since Mrs. Eddy and Christian Science fail to recognise and state these facts clearly, it follows that however attractive some of the teachings may be to some people, they cannot be relied upon, because they are off the true foundation—recognising neither the facts of sin and death nor the necessity for a redemption from those conditions by the sacrifice of Jesus, nor appreciating the necessity for the coming Restitution.

Furthermore, Christian Science does not clearly differentiate between the Church, which has been in process of calling and election for more than eighteen centuries, and the world, which still lies in the Wicked One, and which will not be dealt with until the Church shall be glorified, and with her Lord shall constitute the Kingdom of Righteousness.

Jesus prayed for His Church, "Sanctify them through Thy Truth; Thy Word is Truth." While Christian Scientists and people of other denominations, and some of the heathen as well, are, many of them, moral, exemplary, honorable, nevertheless few of them, surely, claim to be sanctified. Indeed, the sanctifying features of the Truth they ignore or do not see. We are not to think of church attendance or of rejection of profanity, liquors, etc., as sanctification. The putting away of the filth of the flesh is indeed commendable, but is only a primary step in the right direction.

God is now calling a sanctified class—a set-apart people—whom He is testing under the promise, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a Crown of Life." This does not signify faithfulness to a denomination or a cult, but faithfulness to the Lord, to the testimony of His Word, to the principles of righteousness, to self-surrender to God to walk in Jesus' footsteps.

We will not discuss at length the scientific element of Christian Science. To some it seems very unscientific — inharmonious with the Truth. We believe that the only way that anything scientific could be associated with it is by adding to it the thought that sorrow, sin and death are in the world only temporarily, by reason of transgression of Divine Law, and that they are to be rooted out and destroyed as noxious weeds by Messiah's Kingdom.

Christian Scientists tell us that they have received great benefit mentally and physically from following Mrs. Eddy's theory and denying that there is any pain, etc. We quite agree that the will is a powerful factor in resisting disease—that if we breed over nervous difficulties, aches and pains, they are increased by the operation of our minds. We agree, as do all physicians, that the mind should be lifted as much as possible from our diseases and placed upon happifying subjects. This is rational and logical; but it is illogical, irrational and, above all, untruthful, to say that we are without pain when we have pain. The lover of the truth can never consent to this. Honesty must be first with all right-minded people, and surely is pleasing to God. Let us then not go to the extreme of untruthfulness or to the other extreme of exaggerating our ills; but, Let every man think soberly.—Romans 12:3.

There is one doctrine held by Christian Scientists — and for that matter by many of other denominations, who state themselves less positively — that is very pernicious, very injurious, very untrue, very unscientific, very unscriptural. This is the teaching that God is omnipresent—present in everything and in every place. Nothing in the Bible so declares; and when we attempt to be wiser than what is written, we are surely making a mistake.

Whoever thinks of God as omnipresent necessarily thinks of Him as impersonal; and the more he thinks, the more vague his God becomes, until gradually he has no God, but merely (as some Christian Scientists, including Mrs. Eddy, express it) believes in a principle of good, and calls that principle God. Such wish to believe in a supreme Creator, but by this erroneous reasoning they mislead their own intelligence into the denial of a personal God. Whoever believes in a God who is everywhere believes in one who is not a person.

The Bible teaches a personal God—a great Spirit Being. The Bible gives Him a home, or locality, and does not teach that He is everywhere. It was Jesus who taught us to pray, "Our Father, which art in Heaven." Oh, how different this is from saying that God is in everything that has use or value—in the soil, because it is useful for the development of fruits; in the chair, because it is useful to sit upon; and in the table, because it is useful as a convenience! Such teachings are faith-destroying, and surely lead away from the sanctification of heart and life and from the faith which the Bible inculcates.

SUFFERED FROM BILIOUS HEADACHE.

At Times Thought She Would Go Mad.

Headaches are one of the most aggravating troubles a person can have. They are many and varying; but when the headache starts you may be sure that there is some other chief cause of this most painful difficulty. The stomach may go wrong, the bowels become constipated, the blood may not circulate properly, but the presence of the headache clearly shows that there is some other baneful disease which is liable to assert itself unless the cause of the headache is removed. Get rid of the headache and thus perhaps save yourself many years of trial and suffering.

Burdock Blood Bitters has, for the past forty years, been curing all kinds of headaches, and has also proved itself to be a remedy that cures where all others fail. It does this by removing the cause of the trouble.

Miss Mary A. Roberts, Hampton, N.B., writes: "For about two years I have suffered from bilious headache. At times I thought I would really go mad. Not long ago a friend advised me to try Burdock Blood Bitters which I did, and after taking three bottles I have never been troubled with any kind of a headache. I think that B.B.B. is one of the wonders of the world. I can safely recommend it to all who suffer from bilious headache."

Burdock Blood Bitters is the oldest and the best known blood medicine on the market to-day, and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Swiss Says the Allied Prisoners Are Treated Well

Little Chance of Escape—But Barracks Are Well Heated and Lighted, and the Food is Good

BERNE, Switzerland — One great thing that makes Switzerland unique, that sets it apart as a nation by itself, is that as soon as a crying need is felt, is well aired in the papers and discussed in the homes, a committee for its relief springs up, goes about the business of relieving with great deliberation and method, and ends up by wiping the crying need from the face of the earth.

From the first, when the prisoners of war began and write heartrending letters that crept into print and were copied by the Swiss press, about the hardships of prison camp life, I knew that it would be Switzerland's lot to gird up her loins, form a committee, and get the truth of the matter. Sure enough the moment came. We could look on quietly no longer, and a committee was formed. Lieut. Colonel de Marval of Neuchatel was dispatched to France to inspect the prisoners' camps there. Mr. Naville of Geneva went to England, and a member of the Swiss Parliament, Mr. Eugster, went to Germany. The two former have sent home categorical contradictions of all the horrors reported to exist in France and her colonies and in England, and now the third, Mr. Eugster, has returned from Germany with a favourable account of the prison camps there that will make many a French and English mother draw a long breath of relief. It is with his report that I will chiefly concern myself in this article.

The arrangement of the camps is purely Prussian and simply reeks of law and order. In Berlin, where Mr. Eugster and his two companions, a member of the Red Cross, and the Spanish Minister to Germany, began their tour, they were shown a complete list of the 600,000 British, Russian, and French prisoners who were divided among the sixty German camps. Of these 600,000 Mr. Eugster saw but 27,000 French and 17,000 British and Russian.

Says Camps Are Models.

The prisoners' camps, as described by Mr. Eugster, are certainly models. They are usually placed on large parade grounds and take in all the surrounding empty buildings, such as armouries, stables, etc. On the parade grounds themselves wooden barracks are erected, each one calculated to house from 150 to 200 men. The walls of these barracks are double, the space between being filled in with peat rubble, so that they very successfully keep out the cold. Added to this, each barrack has a stove, each man a sack filled with straw that is changed at stated intervals, and every one has the right to two blankets. When I add that Eugster states positively that the barracks are all furnished with electric lights, running water, and sanitary arrangements, you can see that, if one must be a prisoner of war, he should choose Deutschland as his destination.

Each one of the barracks, ranged down both sides of a central street, with side streets branching off right and left, is presided over by a non-commissioned officer, himself a prisoner, and answerable to the military authorities for order among his men. The German soldiers thus interfere as little as possible in the life of the barracks, contenting themselves with a general oversight of the camp. The possibilities of escaping are, so to speak, nil, for where the very vigilant German sentries do not stand guard, the no less vigilant and effective barb wire fence is deadly charged with a high voltage electricity, hold watch and ward.

Every camp has its own canteen and hospital, and it speaks highly for the care received by the prisoners to note Eugster's statement that in no camp hospital have cases of illness amounted to more than 3 per cent. of the inmates.

In the canteen kitchen the food is prepared for the whole camp and divided among the various barracks. The food of the ordinary German soldier costs his Government about fifteen cents a day, and exactly the same amount is expended for the food of the prisoners. In the morning they get milk-coffee. The milk and the coffee are boiled together in great vats, and it is this mixture that the prisoner drinks. At noon every one gets a goodly portion of vegetable soup, with a shank of meat in it. This soup is warmed up and thinned out a little for supper. Nobody has indigestion. Each man has a one-pound loaf of bread and a slice of cheese or a sausage, this last named carefully wrapped in a piece of white paper.

In order that the prisoners will not lose their minds from enforced inactivity, they are told off in gangs for various forms of manual labour, such as working on the railway, grading streets, etc. When one thinks of the class of men who are among the French and English prisoners one must agree that this labour, while welcome, must seem strange to many of them. I know a French Count, belonging to a rich and influential family, who left his ancestral castle to fight for his country, and is now breaking stone for the Germans.

Rooms for Worship.

Not only manual labor is provided to distract the minds of the prisoners. In every camp there are rooms set aside for the various forms of worship of the Allies. There are also ateliers for the painters as well as the sculptors, and in one camp Mr. Eugster came upon a chorus of 200 men practicing French oratorio under the leadership of one of the prisoners, in civil life a professional music director.

There is some international arrangement by which captured officers have the right to private quarters, and do not need to bunk with their men. This rule is carefully observed in all the camps visited by Mr. Eugster, and he was furthermore struck by the fact that a captured officer receives the same pay as officers of the corresponding grade in the German Army, and with this money he keeps himself. The officers are all in separate camps, very comfortably housed but expected out of their microscopic pay to quiet the laundress and tailor and supply themselves with tobacco and soap and the thousand and one little things that a person must have to keep clean. What is left is dedicated to their food, and money to pay for luxuries they get by remittances from home.

All in all, Mr. Eugster's last trip has been thoroughly successful, and he can have the satisfaction of knowing that his report has brought peace to many a tormented relative.

NEW PARIS BLOUSE SHEER AND COOL

NEW YORK, April 22.—Never were blouses cooler looking and more sheer than those which have just arrived from Paris and were exhibited privately yesterday in one of the display salons. Parisian dressmakers have vied with one another to produce dainty effects, and most of these creators have used for their various models French organdie as fine and thin as a cobweb.

There are few without a high collar effect, to be worn outside the tailor coat, but many are cut away from the throat, thus giving the fashionable effect with the greatest degree of comfort to the woman who has become addicted to the low cut neck.

One of the favourite trimmings for the new summer blouses is a fine lace beading, which is inset down the front, across the shoulders and gives a yoke line in the back. Some of the designs have double frills and now and then there are short sleeved blouses. But the very long sleeve with a tucked cuff providing a sleeve frill promises to prove a favourite.

With true Parisian skill the designers have used narrow banding of pink, blue or mauve liñen to finish collar and cuffs. The tucked shirt waist with a high collar is included in this display. The sheerest of all was a blouse dotted net and the lower part of Georgette crepe. The sleeves are of the net. Of course underneath one must have a dainty crepe de Chine or fine lingerie camisole, for the new sheer blouse will display the under-garment to advantage or disadvantage.

Milk Shake.

Put one heaping teaspoon of sugar into a shaker; add one egg and one cup of fresh milk. Cover and shake thoroughly. A deep bowl and an egg beater will do the same work. Add a pinch of sale. Turn into glasses with pieces of ice an inch square. Dust the top with nutmeg, chocolate or cinnamon. Serve with straws.

upon the enemy with the bayonet, burst through the maze of trenches, poured into the craters and pressed until at last they were stopped by barricades defended by bomb-throwers.

"The first line of trenches was captured in a few minutes with little difficulty, and fifteen prisoners fell into our hands; but it was then that the real struggle began, for the Germans quickly recovered from their surprise.

"From our line the hill is a salienat which is exposed to fire from three sides, and it was only a few minutes before the German gunners took advantage of this fact and opened fire. Soon the whole position became obscured in the smoke of bursting shells. Meanwhile our bateries had begun to support the attack, and a terrific artillery fire was matntained far into the night.

GUNFIRE CONTINUOUS.

"From many points along our line to the north and south of Hill No. 60 could be seen the flashes from the shells, while the flashes from the guns were so nearly continuous that they resembled the effect of musketry fire. Under this fire our men had to work, throwing up parapets toward the enemy, blocking their communications and generally rendering the position defensible.

"Nor was the enemy's infantry idle. Advancing up the communicating trenches they threw hand grenades over the barricades and also into the mine craters, on the crumbling sides of which our men were clinging in an endeavour to obtain a foothold.

"Throughout the night the fighting continued, culminating early in the morning of the 18th in two massed attacks by the enemy. These were beaten off, principally by the fire of our machine guns, some of which had been pushed up.

REINFORCEMENTS ARRIVE.

"Nevertheless, in spite of the heavy losses, which left the hillside piled with dead, the enemy continued his pressure during the whole of Sunday until we were gradually driven from the southern edge of the mill. At 6 p.m. help reached our front line in the form of reinforcements, who swept the Germans from the foot hold they had gained.

"Prior to this the close proximity of the contending sides had led to a slackening in the bombardment, but it then broke out afresh, and with almost as great intensity as on the preceding evening. Our position, however, now was more serious, and, although the shelling and bombing never ceased altogether, the night may be said to have passed in comparative quiet."

The narrative says the bombardment was maintained Monday, April 19, and that the Germans extended their shelling to the entire Ypres area, including the town itself, in which, it is asserted, 15 children were killed. Toward evening the Germans made another attack on Hill No. 60, but, the "eye-witness" asserts, "again did our machine guns do tremendous execution, and the attack was beaten off."

"Another attack at 8 o'clock in the evening," the narrative continues, "suffered the same fate. Still the Germans would not admit defeat and all night long parties armed with hand grenades made repeated efforts to drive us off the hill, their attacks alternating with bombardments from artillery of all kinds and also trench mortars."

On Wednesday, the "eye-witness" says, the British had firmly established themselves on the hill.

FINEST EXPLOIT OF THE WAR.

"The attack upon and the defence of Hill No. 60," the narrative declares, "will go down in history as one of the finest exploits of the British troops during the war. Officers who experienced the bombardment, prior to the attack of the Prussian Guard on the 11th of April and also underwent that directed against Hill No. 60, say that the latter was by far the worst of the two.

"What our troops withstood can in some degree be realized if it be remembered that the space fought over during four and one-half days was only about 20 yards in length by about 200 yards in depth.

"Upon that small area the enemy for hours hurled tons of metals and high explosives, and at times the hill top was wreathed in clouds of poisonous fumes, and yet our gallant infantry did not give way. They stood firm under a fire which swept away whole sections at a time, filled the trenches with dead bodies and so cumbered the approach to the front line that reinforcements could not reach it without having to climb over the prostrate forms of their fallen comrades.

Cost the Enemy Dear.

"In these circumstances our losses naturally were heavy. Nevertheless they have not depressed the men, all of whom, including the wounded, are extremely cheerful, for they know that the fight for Hill No. 60 has cost the Germans far more than it has cost us."

The desperate efforts of the Germans to recapture the hill, the "eye-witness" says, "probably were due not only to the intrinsic value of the position, but the fear of personal consequences to the generals concerned if they failed to hold it." He adds that the Bavarian generals who were responsible for the unsuccessful action at St. Eloi were placed on the retired list.

The troops who opposed the British on Hill 60, the "eye-witness" says, were composed of Saxons and men recruited from all parts of Germany.

JUST SUITS MY NEEDS BUILDING UP THE SYSTEM

This is the Way Thousands of Women Are Speaking of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

"I want to state that I have never taken anything to do me so much good as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food," writes Mrs. Edson Brock, Trenholmville, Que., "and I am never without it in the house. I was so nervous I could not sleep, but now I sleep soundly at nights and wake up feeling refreshed and ready for the day's work. I used the Nerve Food for months and found that it just suits my needs and has built up the system wonderfully. I know it is Dr. Chase's Nerve Food that has brought about the great change in my condition and am thankful for it.

"My husband was a great sufferer from itching piles and has been entirely cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment."

We are constantly receiving letters like this in regard to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Everywhere it is being used because of its great restorative and reconstructive influence on the nervous system. Men and women who are run down in health, tired, nervous and discouraged, find in this great Food Cure the means of nourishing the exhausted system back to health and vigour.

Headaches, indigestion, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, lack of energy, and vigour — all tell of nervous exhaustion, and indicate the need of such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Instead of affording mere temporary relief by stimulating the nerves, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food builds up the system by supplying the ingredients from which Nature forms new rich blood and revitalizes the wasted nervous system. Put Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to the test when you are feeling tired out and discouraged, fill the body with new rich blood and new nerve force and you will realize again the joy of good health. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

DRESS WITH PLAITED SKIRT.

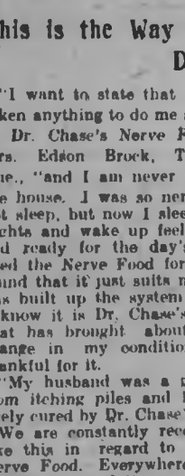
By Anabel Worthington.



The plaited skirt is always becoming to little girls and larger girls as well. In the dress illustrated, the skirt is cut perfectly straight and then plaited all around, except just at the front where the buttoned closing comes. The dress may be open all the way down and fastened with buttons or, if preferred, the lower part of the skirt may be joined and merely a placket left. For laundering, the first method is to be recommended, as the dress can then be laid out practically flat upon the ironing board.

There is a tuck at each side which is not sewed at the front below the armhole, and bishop sleeves finished with a straight wristband. Altogether, this is a very simple and practical little frock, suited to wash and wool materials alike. In 12 cent gingham it could be made up for less than 75 cents. For eight years size, 4¼ yards of 27 inch material would be required. The pattern, No. 7,090, can be obtained in sizes from six to twelve years.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

"Grass Widow" Set Wives Crazy In Six Months

NEW YORK, April 22.—The heartthrobs of a grass widow who wrote that she could not go six months without a husband provided interesting testimony yesterday in the Queen's County Supreme Court, Long Island City, where Mrs. Helen M. Usbeck asked Justice Garretson for a separation from George F. Usbeck, president of the Ejur Piano Company, of the Bronx. Mrs. Usbeck lives in Manhattan. Mr. Usbeck, whose Iowa divorce in 1913 is under scrutiny, married Mrs. Helen F. Cousart, of Belford, N.J., soon thereafter, and he testified, is living with her in Broadway.

After Mrs. Usbeck, a most attractive and vivacious young woman, had testified that they were married fourteen years ago and had a son thirteen years old, and that they had been separated since 1912, first by agreement for one year, Mr. Usbeck's counsel suddenly produced several letters addressed to him and asked if she had written them. She said she had, but that it was purely to make her husband jealous and cause him to return to her. One letter said:

"Now that I am a grass widow, I have plenty of admirers. I lead them just so far and then give them the mitt. They tell me that during my enforced widowhood that I am daily growing sweeter. Men are all fools, and I could set any number of wives crazy. Your last kiss set me on fire. Do you imagine that I can go six months without a husband? Guess again. I have captivated several men and they have fallen."

In another she wrote she had promised her caresses to no fewer than three men, and in others were more statements of her remarkable love affairs with different men. In this connection she said her husband had begged her to obtain a divorce from him, promising not to contest it and to pay liberal alimony.

John H. Usbeck, a Bronx grocer, and brother of the defendant, was flatly informed by Justice Garretson that he was not believed when he testified that after the "trial separation" of his brother and Mrs. Usbeck he had called upon her twice, had hugged and kissed her, and that they had otherwise seriously misconducted themselves.

While this brother testified his own wife, the mother of three children, was asked to leave the court room. When he had finished his unsupported accusations his wife testified that on one occasion, when Mrs. Helen Usbeck called at their home, she saw her husband kiss her on the cheek. Mrs. Helen Usbeck testified this was true, that she had gone to John H. Usbeck for consolation in her trouble with his brother, and that in consoling her he had bestowed a brotherly and quite passionless kiss upon her cheek.

In reserving decision Justice Garretson said he did not believe the story told by Usbeck's brother and that he would inquire into the legality of the Iowa divorce. Usbeck testified that while travelling in Iowa for his company he established a residence, and obtained the divorce after a residence of six months.

Doctor Said She Had Bright's Disease.

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED HER.

Bright's disease is a term applied to one of the most serious of all diseases of the kidneys, the symptoms of which are often of a severe character.

Severe pains in the back appear at first and are followed by disturbances of the urinary organs which show that the urine contains a large amount of albumen. Dropsy is also another forerunner of the dreaded Bright's disease. On the first sign of any kidney trouble you should at once put the kidneys right by the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. The pill that cures kidney troubles only.

Mrs. C. A. Heistand, Mooswa, Alta. writes: "Last May I was taken down sick. The doctor told me I had Bright's disease. My kidneys got so bad I could not rest day or night. The doctor's medicine did not give me any relief. I used four boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills, and they put me in good shape again."

Doan's Kidney Pills are the original kidney pill, so when you ask for "Doan's" do not accept any others with similar names.

Price, 50c per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, April 24.—Widening efforts to establish adequate reserve stocks of wheat in Europe had a bullish effect today on prices here. In this connection just at the close announcement was made that vessels had been chartered to carry 1,500,000 bushels of wheat from Chicago to Montreal. Latest quotations were firm at 2c to 2 7-8c above last night. Corn advanced 3-4c to 7-8c, oats finished 1-16c off to 1-2c up, and provisions from 5c to 12 1-2c up.

Corn—New, No. 2 yellow, 85½c, Toronto freight, all rail; for opening of navigation, No. 2, 82½c, c.i.f.; No. 3, 81½c.

Ontario flour—$6.15 to $6.20, nominal, seaboard.

Peas—No. 2, $1.80.

Rye—No. 2, $1.13 to $1.14.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, April 23.—The wheat market was strong from the start this morning. Oats were also higher, while flax was lower. Wheat futures opened ½c to 1⅝c advance, oats ⅛c to ½c higher, and flax ½c to ¾c down. The rash situation in wheat, oats, barley and flax were practically at a standstill.

Wheat futures closed 2¼c to 2⅜c higher, cash 2⅝c to 2¾c higher, oats ⅛c to ⅜c up, and flax ⅝c lower on all months. At the high point, May was but ⅛c under the high prices of the season.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, April 23.—The demand from foreign buyers for wheat today was good, especially so for new crop American winter wheat, and as cables for such were stronger at an advance of 3d to 4 1-2d per quarter a fair amount of business was worked for August-September shipment from this port, and in consequence of which engagements of thirty loads of ocean grain room were made, for which as high as 8s 9d was paid in London for the above shipment. There was also a fair enquiry for Manitoba wheat, but the bids were all from 2c to 4c per bushel out of line. The local trade in coarse grains was quiet with no further change in prices to note. The tone of the flour market is strong with a moderate amount of business passing for local account, but the export trade is quiet. Demand for millfeed is fair.

On more liberal receipts of butter a weaker feeling has developed in the market and prices have declined 1-2c per pound with only a limited demand. Cheese is also weaker in sympathy with the lower prices ruling in the country, and prices have declined 1c per pound.

Demand for eggs is fair.

CHEESE MARKETS.

NAPANEE, Ont., April 23.—Cheese boarded, 40 white and 170 colored; all sold at 16c and 16½c.

PICTON, Ont., April 23.—At the first meeting of the local cheese board today, 20 white and 150 colored were boarded; 130 sold at 16 7-16c, and 40 at 16½c.

BROCKVILLE, April 23.—At a special meeting of the cheese board, 426 white and 480 boxes of colored were boarded. The highest bid of 16c was refused, and no sales resulted. Board adjourned until May 6.

FRANK BAKER TO PLAY WITH SEMI-PRO CLUB.

Will be Farmer Except on Saturday and Sunday.

PHILADELPHIA, April 22.—Local baseball fans are at sea as to the intentions of Frank Baker. Yesterday they thought that it was certain that the third baseman would return to the Athletics this week, but to-day they are not so optimistic, for Baker to-day announced that he is going to play with the Upland team of the Delaware County league.

He says he will make his debut in an exhibition game with the Rockdale Independents on Saturday. He will play with the semi-professionals on Saturdays and holidays, and the rest of the week he will devote to his farming.

That is, if he is not sold to the Yankees in the near future. Rumour has it that one of the new owners of the Yankees has had a falling out with Ban Johnson on account of his failure to use his influence in getting the player for New York. Johnson has been quoted as favouring forcing Baker to live up to his contract with Connie Mack, and that there was no chance of New York's getting Baker.

SAGE TEA TURNS GREY HAIR DARK

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Colour and Lustre to Hair

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns grey, streaked and looks dry, wispy and scraggy, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold.

Don't bother to prepare the tonic; you can get from any drug store a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," ready to use. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural colour thickness and lustre of your hair and remove dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the grey hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy, lustrous and abundant.

Days of Rheumatism Now Over! Wonderful Miracles Worked by "Nerviline"

Its Strange Power is the Marvel of Thousands it Has Cured.

You will welcome the good news that "Nerviline" rapidly relieves the most excruciating pains.

Nerviline penetrates deeply into the tissue and possesses pain-subduing power at least five times greater than anything heretofore discovered. Its curative influence upon rheumatic pains is really wonderful.

Nerviline is offered to the people of this community under a positive guarantee of its reliableness.

Rheumatism is the greatest test Nerviline has to meet. It cures pains, big and little, but to rheumatics especially it is a great blessing, just as it is to those who suffer from neuralgia, sciatica, lumbago, stiffness or enlarged joints.

Remember this: There is nothing harmful in Nerviline.

You can use it freely on your children for their aches and pains. It is dependable, reliable, safe. Nothing to equal good old Nerviline as a general family remedy.

1000 Canadian Prisoners Says Berlin

ALLIES SLOWLY REGAINING LOST GROUND

THE GERMAN WAR OFFICE SAYS 1000 CANUCKS CAPTURED

Official Statement of the Enemy Claims That They Still Hold Positions on the West Cank of the Canal and That Their Prisoners Number 5,000 British With 45 Cannon.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

BERLIN, via wireless, April 26th. --- The Anglo-French claim that the Germans have been thrown back across the Yser canal is definitely and specifically denied by the German war office. On the contrary, the war office says, the positions at Lizerne, on the west bank of the canal, are still in the hands of the Germans.

The total number of British prisoners is 5,000, including 1,000 Canadians, and the total number of cannon captured north of the Yser is 45, says the war office.

LONDON'S VIEWS

LONDON, April 26.---While the semi-official statement issued at Paris last night seeks to minimize the importance of the action at Langemarck, accusing the Germans of magnifying their success in order to influence neutral countries, London attaches the greatest importance to these operations. The Times' military correspondent this morning says: "Some think this will will be the greatest battle of the war, but the allies are well prepared to meet any German offensive in this quarter and it need not be considered that there is most danger where there is the most noise."

The Times' correspondent in northern France says: "The second battle of Flanders has begun. The enemy has been long carefully preparing for it and was biding his time, waiting for a favourable moment to develop his attack but our unexpected capture of hill 60 had a double effect---upsetting the enemy's calculations and compelling him to postpone if not to abandon his contemplated attack on the British position and disclose his hand in premature attack on the French lines to the north."

THE PREMIER'S TRIBUTE

OTTAWA, April 26.---Sir Robert Borden, the Prime Minister, this morning paid a splendid tribute to the Canadian forces: The Prime Minister said: "The magnificent pluck, gallantry and resourcefulness of the Canadian troops at the front saved a difficult situation, as the highest authority has publicly declared. They have proved themselves the equal of any troops in the world, and in doing so they have brought distinction and renown to this dominion. My colleagues and I deeply lament the long list of casualties and send our profound sympathy to every home which is plunged into sadness and sorrow by tidings that reach us from hour to hour."

THE WOUNDED ARRIVING

TORONTO, April 26.----The cables here to-day report the following Canadian wounded as arriving at Dover for the British hospitals: Private Fryer and Lance Corporal Hilton Johnston, of the 1st Battalion, slightly wounded; Pte. Ernest Edward, 4th Battalion, two wounds in arm; Pte. Ormiston, 5th Battalion, shrapnel fragments in body. No further particulars yet.

OTTAWA, April 26.---Additional casualties this afternoon were announced as follows: Third Field Artillery, died of wounds, Driver Sydney Cross, Nanton, Alberta. Fourth Battalion, Corporal J. Herbert Orr, of Brantford, killed in action.

KING'S MESSAGE OF CONGRATULATION

"His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, Ottawa.---"Congratulate you most warmly on the splendid and gallant way in which the Canadian Division has fought during the last two days north of Ypres. Sir John French says that their conduct was magnificent throughout. The Dominion will be justly proud."

"(Signed) George."

CANUCKS HAD THE WELLINGTON TOUCH

London Daily Mail Correspondent Says They Endured Every Sort of Difficulty, Mental or Mechanical and Saved the Cohesion of the Allied Line.

A MAGNIFICENT TRIBUTE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 26.— The London Daily Mail correspondent says of the Langemarck fight: "The Canadian officers, and indeed the men, had the Wellington touch, the touch of the man who never lost an English gun which he did not recover. What Wellington did in the Pyrennes, the Canadians did on the flattest plain in Europe. Within four hours they turne around and advanced. They endured every sort of difficulty, mental or mechanical. They met men terribly sick, half blind and weak in limbs from the fumes let loose by the Germans. They had to face shrapnel, rifle fire and machine gun fire in a country absolutely defenceless. They were wounded by every sort of engine, by bayonet, by gas, by bits of metal of every shape and size but they charged home against all the rules of war as understood in the German text books. Their charge and advance did more than regain one position and recover the lost guns; it enabled cohesion of the whole allied front to be re-established. The issue of the battle is not yet. There are still German outposts, few and weak on either side of the canals and river, but the allied counter-attacks are regaining the lost ground under the Canadians' left.

An Exciting Chase After a Deserter

On Saturday Chief Ruse of Cobourg received a message from Belleville to keep a lookout for Val Taylor, who had deserted from the 39th Battalion there. Taylor, who enlisted at Cobourg, broke into the storeroom where the civilian suits were stored, discarded his military uniform, and got his civilian clothes. He came on to Cobourg and on Saturday evening was seen talking to a soldier at King and Division Streets by Chief Ruse and Acting Constable Creagrey. Taylor took to his heels as soon as he saw the police, and ran up Division Street. Creagrey managed to catch him and in the scuffle got hold of Taylor's raincoat. Taylor wiggled out of the coat, which Creagrey hung on to, and managed to make a getaway.

PETERBORO' AWAITS LIST OF CASUALTIES

Although No Peterboro' Officers Have Appeared So Far it is Known That the Local Infantrymen Were in Action and Probably the Artillery as Well.

LOCAL HOMES AFFECTED

Peterborough is waiting with the deepest anxiety the publication of the list of the casualties among the non-commissioned officers and men of the Canadian contingent. No names of Peterborough officers have appeared in the list as yet, but there are about 300 Peterborough men all told in the division and it can hardly be hoped that all escaped. The absence of artillery officers' names from the list, gives hope that the 100 local artillerymen may have gotten off lightly.

That the 115 Peterborough boys representing the 57th Regiment were in the thick of the fighting which marked the German advance at Langemarck is indicated by the fact that one of the subalterns of A Company of the 2nd battalion, the company to which Peterborough infantrymen belong, was wounded. This was Lieut. O. G. Whalen of Ottawa. The latter's name has not yet appeared in the casualty list, but his mother, Mrs. Peter Whalen of Ottawa, received a private cablegram for him yesterday stating that he had been wounded in the shoulder, but was quite safe.

LOCAL HOMES AFFECTED.

Although no Peterborough names have so far appeared in the list of casualties among the officers, local homes are already effected by the publication of the roll of honour. Lieut. A. D. Kirkpatrick of the 1st Battalion, and formerly of the Queen's Own Rifles, who was killed, was a cousin of Mrs. W. H. Dunsford of Peterborough, and Lieut. A. G. McLennan of Ottawa, who was wounded, was a cousin of Mrs. Jos. Maynard, also of this city. Lieut. McLennan was formerly a subaltern in A Company, but some time ago was transferred to F Company along with Lieut. Chas. Ackerman of Peterborough.

DID ARTILLERY ESCAPE?

An Ottawa despatch to-day says:

OTTAWA, April 26.—There is considerable relief at the military headquarters here following the absence so far of any extensive list of casualties among the officers of the field artillery in the first Canadian contingent. The Germans claimed the capture of thirty guns, and on Saturday when the British official statement made no mention of the field artillery, but simply described the gallant recapture of four heavy guns it was

MAJOR GEO. W. BENNETT, who led the Peterborough boys into action in the fighting at Langemarck. A persistent rumour has been in circulation since Saturday that he has fallen, but there is no foundation for the report, as no word official or otherwise has arrived in connection with the well known local officer.

CONTINGENTS TO BE MOBILIZED SOON AS POSSIBLE

Third and Fourth Canadian Quotas Are to Be Assembled at Earliest Possible Moment Announces Gen. Hughes.

PROCEED TO CAMP

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, April 26.—The important announcement was made at noon to-day by Major-General Hughes that the third and four Canadian contingents will be mobilized at the earliest possible moment. The troops now training at the different divisional points in the various provinces will now proceed to camps for additional training. In Ontario, Kingston, Niagara Falls and London will be the camp points.

Wants Kawartha Lakes District Advertised

W. M. Graham of Viamede recently wrote the G.T.R. that in their pamphlets advertising Ontario the Kawartha District was overlooked. He requested that in the Company's advertising work they include the Kawartha chain. It was last an individual effort and would be greatly strengthened by the support of others.

THE ALLIED LINES HOLD EVERYWHERE; RECOVERING GROUND

British Press Bureau Says Two German Attacks Were Stopped---Fighting Continues With Utmost Desperation With Allies Slowly Recovering Ground Already Ceded

LONDON, April 26.---The press bureau in an official statement to-day says that the British troops have stopped two determined German assaults directed from Paschendale (five miles south east of Langemaske, and seven north east of Ypres) towards the allied line at Brodseinde. The fighting is declared to be continuing with the utmost desperation but with the allied lines holding everywhere. Some reports claim that the Germans have been driven entirely from the west bank of the Yser canal, but the official reports do not make such a claim. All that is stated is that up to the present time the allies are slowly recovering the ground already ceded.

FOURTH HIT THE WORST

OTTAWA, April 26. --- While all the battalions have suffered heavily in killed and wounded, three regiments in particular have been very heavily hit, the fourth battalion, comprising Ontario men, has the record, with three officers killed and 15 wounded, a total of 18 casualties, or over one half of the full complement of officers. Lt.-Col. Birchall, an imperial officer, who commanded the regiment, was killed, also one captain and a lieutenant; and in wounded lost one lieutenant, Lt.-Col. Buell, second in command, two majors, three captains, and nine lieutenants. The 16th battalion, Western Highlanders, comes next with four officers killed, and 13 wounded; the 10th, Winnipeg and Edmonton, next, with two officers killed and eight wounded, the 1st next with nine wounded. All the talk of elections at the capital has been dissipated by the news just received.

So far the total casualties among the officers are 87, including 21 killed and 66 wounded; others are trickling in and are being given out as quickly as possible. So far only a few of the casualties among the non-commissioned officers and men have been listed and it may be a few days yet before the full story of Canada's sacrifice has been told.

BOMBARDING YPRES

LONDON, April 26.---The Germans are now bombarding Ypres with 17 inch guns. The roar of these great pieces of artillery, the latest product of the Krupp factories, can be heard 30 miles. The German incendiary shells have fired all of the Belgian farms and vilages along the front of 20 miles. To-night the sky is illuminated with the glare from the blazing homes and barns. The high northerly winds which for three days have been blowing from the German lines across the Anglo-French-Belgian lines carrying before them the stupefying gases, have now died down. There is a complete calm to-night (Sunday) and the temper of the allied troops over what they claim the most flagrant breach of the rules of civilized warfare by the Germans, is bitter. From the highest officer down to the villages along the front of 20 miles. To-night the sky used against the Germans. "I belive now that the Germans actually did massacre the Belgian people," snapped a Canadian officer of high rank whom I saw in a field hospital, and who was suffering from the effects of the gas. Many of the Canadians who are in the hospitals are suffering from gas fumes. The entire Canadian contingent was engaged, and all are recipients of unstinted praise from General French and his staff for the part they played in the battle.

TWO EXPECTED THINGS.

There is something to be proud of in a paragraph of the official War Office report, of the conduct of the Canadian troops at the battle of Langemarck—mingled with the sweet. It is sweet and glorious to hear the highest men in the realm speak warm words of praise of the gallant conduct of the Canadians at the battle front. It is only what we expected. They could not do otherwise and be Canadians. But with this sweet is blended the bitter of grief at the loss of life. This too, was what we expected; for we know that Canadians have courage, and courage in war means being in the thick of it; and being in the thick of it, with brave and resourceful soldiers, means victory clouded with death. While we are proud of our Canadian soldiers, we must bewail the loss of bright young lives; but it is something consoling that the sacrifice has not been in vain. We sent our soldiers forth to help the triumph of the British cause in a just war. And, though the cost is great, the help has been given at a critical time and in a gallant way—"the Canadians saved the situation." We have not yet the full Canadian casualty lists, and we must brace ourselves to bear what they bring. We must expect casualties; our contingents would be only a vain show if there were no casualties. As the seed we sow is not quickened except it die, so there would be no fruit of victory by the soldiers we have sent to war, without casualties, an inevitable result to a greater or less degree of the soldier doing his duty. It is easy to reason in this way, but it is hard for wives and mothers, and sisters, and sweethearts, to bear the burden of bereavement and grief—and the appalling sense of loss. We can give some consolation by our sympathy and assistance. While our soldiers are fighting and dying across the seas, we, who stay at home have a work to do. With our soldiers in the thick of the battle there is not only death, but wounds to be healed. There will be needed hospital supplies, dressings, bandages, etc., to a greater degree than the authorities have provided or can provide. We can busy ourselves in helping heal and comfort, and care for the wounded. The only practical way left us to comfort those amongst us who have wounded relatives in this war, is to do our full duty in helping in the work of caring for the wounded and suffering. We can, and must, add action to our words of sympathy.

"THE CANADIANS HAD MANY CASUALTIES, BUT THEIR GALLANTRY AND DETERMINATION UNDOUBTEDLY SAVED THE SITUATION. THEIR CONDUCT HAS BEEN MAGNIFICENT THROUGHOUT."

CANADA'S ONE DUTY.

We are only now, having the horrors of war brought feelingly home to us. And what we hear to-day is only a forecast of what we shall have to hear from time to time, and perhaps for a long time. Not only are many, many homes darkened by sorrow, and hundreds of hearts set bleeding, but our whole people are stirred to their hearts' depth, with sympathy and interest. We only now begin to realize what the share of Canadians is so far to be in this war. Our people, from the humblest to the highest, but only now realize, not only the grim reality, and realises the responsibility of Canadians who stay at home in respect of doing their duty, to not only our soldiers, but the high interests involved—the duty of doing everything we can do in helping end the war. We begin only now to realize the duty of every citizen to join hands with every other citizens in concentrating every energy, and strengthening every influence, that can be brought to bear on the work Canada is committed to in the present war, in order to complement and second the work our soldiers are so bravely, gallantly, and at the same time, painfully doing in the battlefield. Our sole and undivided energies must, apart from the inevitable duties of the daily round of life, be concentrated upon helping wage this war to a triumphant finish. Our people must continue as they are now, united in this work, and must not permit any lesser interest to distract their attention, impair their zeal, or subdue their enthusiasm, or divide the ranks of the solidly united people of Canada. Under the circumstances the idea of a general election at this time or later—within a year or two—would seem to be something of the nature of a crime; for a general election will for months put a stop to the work of helping on the war, and withdraw the activities of our people from the work, which till the end comes, constitutes our supreme duty. To realize the crime of it, suppose a general election were now on; and polling day fell in the midst of a great battle in which Canadians were killed by shot and shell, or mangled and maimed—think of taking a vote of Canadian soldiers—at the battle front—and the criminal folly of a general election at this critical heart-breaking, home-darkening time, will be realized. As we realize the horrors of the war, so we must realize, and do our duty to set our faces in the way of duty, as a united people, undistracted, by the frivolity of an election, to meet the ambitions of some place-hunting politicians.

MORNING PAPER DELIVERIES.

In another column is printed correspondence, in connection with the early delivery in Peterborough of Toronto morning papers. It appears that by contemplated and announced changes in the time table, by the C.P.R., the freight train by which Peterborough now receives the early morning delivery of newspapers, will be timed to leave Toronto at an earlier hour, thus also securing earlier printed. This will, of course, throw Peterborough back upon the express trains that will deliver the morning papers here at noon sometimes, and sometimes later than noon.

It is to be hoped that the Board of Trade, and the City Council will unite their efforts and their influence to try to avert this undesirable change. At this time when war news assume so intense, and in many cases a personal significance to our citizens, they want their morning papers as early as possible—they cannot reasonably be expected to stand the suspense till the evening papers come out. For this and other reasons we should have our morning papers as early as possible. Prompt and energetic action by the authorities, may prevent the change and insure our present early deliveries of Toronto morning papers. Prompt action is further indicated as the proposed change of time is contemplated for the end of May.

The Criminal Character of a General Election in Time of War

Surely to-day's staggering and heartbreaking reports from the battle-front will put a stop, an unmistakable and final stop, to all plotting and manoeuvring for a war election in Canada. With perhaps not less than a thousand Canadians, officers and men, in this one list when the last line of anguish is set to the report, surely the most callous man in all Canada will learn that Canadians have tasks before them far too serious, far too stupendous, to suffer intrusion and profanation from the flippancies and recriminations of an election campaign. In the sobering light of this Monday morning Premier Borden must surely see that there is but one thing to do; the official announcement must be made, and made without delay, that no matter who says yea or who says nay, a general election at any time while the war is on is wholly and absolutely out of the question. To-day an election campaign must seem the ghastly crime May or June will prove it to be.

Let there be no mistake; the horror-time of the war Canada is just before us, in May and June, and the darkening months that follow. Victory, complete victory for right and freedom and peace; is surely at the end, and on to that end we must go, undaunted and resolute. But the end is not yet.

And in all the weeks that must intervene between to-day's list of tragedy and the last list of Canada's share in the world's blood-sacrifice, there must be no mocking of Canada's sorrow, and no profanation of the solemn sanctuary of Canada's soul, by conflict and clamour over the ins and outs of Canada's political parties.

In the lengthening shadows of this first list who cares anything about the personal ambitions and party interests of any politician who has interests to serve by the return to Parliament of one set of men or by the return of the other? And any man who would crowd itself—such a man would pollute by his presence the atmosphere even for a very Hun.

For many, many thousands of us in both political parties, for many hundreds of thousands of us as private citizens, and for Canada as a nation, there are experiences ahead that would make the noblest and holiest political campaign Canada ever knew a wanton desecration. But such an election campaign as has been gathering force during the past eight months—Germany has committed no crimes against decency and humanity more profane than such an unneeded and unjustified election would be.

The Globe speaks with the utmost seriousness and sincerity in saying that no matter how criminal the war contract, revealed and unrevealed, may have been, no matter what the looting and what the graft, no matter anything in all the sordid and shameless exhibitions some Canadians have made of themselves, and no matter how blameworthy some of the Ministers and some of the Government officials have proved, we would rather a hundredfold have the ugly tale go on to its ending after the war than have the infamy of a general election, with the insult of its extension into the life-and-death struggle at the battlefront, added to the humiliations and heart-breaks of this year. We do not want votes for Liberal candidates at such a time, even though a half-million of them would swing to carry Laurier and Liberalism again into power. We ask rather for a half-million new recruits, from all the Provinces and counties and concession lines of Canada, to enlist and to learn to shoot, against the needs of this war and of the peace negotiations that will follow.

This is Canada's business, Canada's only business. Not political speech-making, writing and electioneering. That would be trifling. That would be treason. That would be an unutterable crime.

spoils upon the minds and souls of the men in the trenches, playing the worst game of Canadian politics at its very worst into the very jaws of death ly one, who has the right and the power to say there shall be no war election. Premier Borden is that man. Let him speak to-day.—hTe Globe.

The Way of The Transgressor

Nothing more illuminating has been published upon the trend of the war than the French official review which is appearing in installments in the newspapers. Those clear and lucid summaries rise to the rank of literature when the reviewer quotes German diaries and letters taken from captured and dead soldiers. Ultimate German victory was at first part of the consciousness of every German soldier. "At the moment of the battle of the Marne," says the reviewer, "the first impression was one of failure of comprehension and of stupor." But as the retreat continued, a process of conversion began to set in the German mind. The vast Teutonic force in the pink of condition, with almost half a century of preparation, was actually shaken and turned back. The official expressions of victory no longer re-echoed in the minds of the fighting soldiers. The battle of Calais, which was in reality no nearer Calais than the Yser, with its terrific loss of probably two hundred thousand Teutons, seemed to stagger the German mind. The failure of the capture of Warsaw completed the disillusionment. "Until during the last two months," says the report, "the most intelligent of the prisoners have all admitted that no one could any longer say on which side victory would rest." And recently letters seized on a dead officer speak of "the imminence of a military and economic hemming in of Germany." They discuss "the possibility of Germany finding herself after the war 'with empty hands and pockets inside out.'...." On January 18 an officer of the German General Staff, captured, said: "Perhaps this struggle of despair has already begun." Perhaps it has! That is the way of the aggressor. No such struggle of despair can ever set in in the hearts of the scanty Belgian soldiers who have fought valiantly a losing but a glorious battle of cheer defence. Despair is the just part and lot of the aggressor; and despite all our sympathy for the hosts of honest and hard-working Germans who never sought war, who hardly know what they are fighting for, we cannot but feel satisfaction that a sin against the human race should be so fitly and certainly punished on earth; that the way of the aggressor should be made hard and perilous, be his name Napoleon or Wilhelm; that the wages of arrogance should be despair and defeat.—Collier's.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of Lena Darrah, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isadore Darrah, who died on April 26th, 1914.
One precious to our hearts has gave
The voice we loved is stilled
The place made vacant in our home
Can never more be filled
Our Father in his wisdom called
The boon his love had given
And though in earth the body lies
The soul is safe in Heaven.

INTENSE SUN HEAT EXPLODES CONCRETE WALK

At high noon yesterday a square of concrete pavement "blew up" in the sidewalk opposite 480 Gilmour Street. A loud report like the muffled crack of a ruptured motor tire made the people in the vicinity think of a shell as the cause. And a shell was the cause. The surface shell of the works was broken into a score of fragments, due no doubt to the unequal expansion of the finishing layer and the foundation layer. The expansion caused by the intense solar heat caused the concrete crust to buckle. The originating cause of the fracture was perhaps that the foundation layer of concrete had been allowed to become too dry before the finishing layer was applied, resulting in an imperfect pour. The irresistible expansion caused by heat acting in the line of the length of the walk met resistance at both ends, with the result of the buckling of the imperfectly bound surface layer.

REV. CANON ALLEN AT ST. ALBAN'S CHURCH

Rev. Canon Allen of Millbrook, conducted a special service at St. Alban's church on Sunday afternoon. There was an after-glow of the celebration of St. George's Day in the service which was attended by a gathering which filled the church. Canon Allen spoke on the 'Ideals of the English Nation.'

THE WEATHER

Sunday was a particularly warm day, and especially so for the month of April. In the afternoon the thermometer was up to 85 degrees in the shade. It is the highest April figure there is any record of in this locality. April 30, 1899, being its nearest approach, with 81. Eighty-six degrees is exceeded on but afew occasions in July and August.—W. P.

EARLY GERMAN HOPES ARE NOT BEING FULFILLED

NEW YORK, April 26.—The Evening Post publishes the following news notes compiled from latest available German newspapers:

As a sign of the times, the expressions of Herr Eugen Zimmerman in Der Tag are worth quoting. He writes of what the war has "not brought." Prophetic diplomatists, professors, and those who concerned themselves with politics in theory or practice were of one mind in the belief that the whole of India would rise in rebellion. Nothing of the kind has happened, he says; but on the contrary tens of thousands of Indian troops are fighting for England on French soil. The Holy War was expected to be a great factor against England. It exists, but while the holy banner of the Prophet gathers about it a certain number of fighters, it is no longer the symbol of fanatical strength exhibiting itself in destructive deeds. Russia was said to be unready, her mobilization slow, her railways defective, her armaments and training defective, and her soldiers besotted with drink. But things happened otherwise. The Russians came on with unexpected rapidity, their armament is good, and their artillery especially so. Alcohol is forbidden, and the men fight with remarkable skill and bravery. Moreover, the promised revolution in Russia has not arrived. Small value was set upon the French army, and yet it is fighting splendidly, and General Joffre and other French generals, who were supposed to be immersed in politics, evidently knew their business. Not everything has happened that the allies expected, either, says Herr Zimmerman, but his candid statements have evidently created an impression in Germany.

The Cologne Gazette seems to be much annoyed at the proposals for economic downfall of England. Thanks to the slackness and ignorance of her industrial leaders, England let herself go beaten in the chemical industry by Germany — by Germany's business-like spirit of enterprise and the technical and scientific activity, England has become a subordinate. She produces arithmeticians and bookkeepers, but no men with spirit for great new businesses. She produces no creators of technical novelties, because the knowledge is lacking, and because no practical men of learning could grow up in the swamps of poverty of thought and of laziness in which England has been moving for decades past. Finding herself in this position, and feeling in so many spheres of pressure of her backwardness, England in despair had recourse to the crime which this war constitutes. She hoped by means of the war, and of the general passion stirred up by the war against the enemy, to be able to strike this enemy a real blow — even by the foundation of the aniline dyes company. Much luck to it. The attempt will be interesting."

German newspapers continue to provide proof of the serious extent of the food shortage. Each day produces fresh suggestions for economising. The latest is that there should be "a war tax" on dogs. The Cologne Gazette says: "Since January it has been forbidden to make dog biscuits, with the result that dogs kept as luxuries are given food that might be used for human consumption. In Cologne there are about 14,000 licensed dogs, but anyone going about the streets cannot fail to see how many there are without collars, and so unlicensed.

"There are about 2,000,000 'luxury' dogs in Germany, big or small, and it must be acknowledged that they used by human beings or useful animals. If the cost of the license were raised and sharp control exercised so that all unlicensed dogs were confiscated, it would make for really substantial economy in food, and at the same time produce several million marks revenue. It would be successful in any event, because either dogs would be got rid of and food saved or there would be larger income from the taxes."

The Hamburger Fremdenblatt speaks of a meeting of farmers, who complained that they were not getting from the kitchens all the food scraps that ought to be available for feeding animals. Twenty thousand pigs could, they said, be fed on the waste from the Hamburg kitchens alone. In Berlin and Westphalia all kitchen garbage is collected by the authorities, and some journals suggest that this should be done throughout Germany. The head of the statistical department in Berlin states that two-fifths of Germany's normal egg supply is imported.

An authority on cold storage and other kindred subjects has been communicating his ideas to the Vorwarts. A great many animals, he says, have been slaughtered for food, and much meat is in cold storage, but it is feared as the summer approaches that a good deal will be wanted. Many towns have taken over large storage premises, but there is in many places no proper arrangements for keeping the meat chilled or frozen. The Bundesrath has ordained that communities of 5,000 inhabitants are to provide themselves with preserved or other supplies, but in many towns there is a complete want of means. They are urged to take time by the forelock, and make their arrangements to maintain a store of food in good and proper condition for consumption. Considerable time is required, and much knowledge for the salting, drying and smoking of hams and bacon. As to cold storage and transport, the Hamburg Cold Storage Company is ready with advice, and can provide means for freezing meat so that it can be sent to retailers in ice vans on the railway.

On the last day of February there took place in the Reichstag building a meeting, under the presidency of Privy Councillor Prof. Dr. Kahl of Berlin, representatives of all parties and callings, who decided to establish a Freie Vaterlandische Vereinigung, or Free National Society, whose object shall be to make permanent and fruitful, "in the future peace," that unity of Germany which has been manifested in the war. No German is henceforth to think anyone dearer to him than the Germans. Undiminished is to be the character given to Germany by Natur und Kultur, the unity of the Volkstum is to be more strongly accentuated and enforced, the over-valuation of foreign art is to be denounced, and every care is to be devoted to the development of things that are German.

The demands of national security and military preparedness and the care for those stricken by the war and their survivors are to be placed above all consideration of party.

Whatever serves to maintain and increase the "Volkskraft" or national power of the people is to be nourished and extended, and whatever has been proven to be of service in securing the internal strength of the country is to be developed. The national soil is to be better cared for, its productiveness increased, and the economical lessons of the war are to be directed to a future organised care for the country, in the interests both of the producer and the consumer.

The relations between the Government and the representatives of the people are to be based more on candor and trust in the future than has been the case in the past, both in the realms of internal and external politics, and thus the operations in both departments are to be raised to a higher level and improved and brought into union.

Finally, in social and other matters, German society is to be freed from narrowness, exclusiveness and quarrel.

Among Professor Kahl's co-labourers in this association are Professor von Harnack, director of the Royal Library; and Prof. Hans Delbruck.

STORIES OF CANADIANS WHO ARE BACK FROM THE WAR ZONE

Many Relatives of Canadian Soldiers Are Sojourning in England—Family Gatherings When Soldiers Return for Rest

LONDON, April 26.—Striking evidence is afforded in the metropolis of the interest which is felt by Canadians of the Dominion in the progress of the war. The presence of Canadian soldiers at the front has brought over to London quite a number of visitors from across the Atlantic, who cheerfully suffer the anxieties of the ocean trip and all its war risks in order to be at hand to have a talk with fighting relatives when they come back to London on short leave of absence. The departure made by the military authorities a few months ago in granting occasional week-end leave of absence for officers and men has of course greatly facilitated such meetings. Technically with the journey overland and across the Channel the fighting men get only 24 hours in town, but when exceptional circumstances are stated, some small concession is made and the week-ends often run to Tuesday. These family gatherings afford many good stories, some of which are true and some invented. One which was told me by a Canadian officer was given in all seriousness. It was offered in proof of the frequent observations as to the extraordinary completeness of the information which the Germans get from their secret intelligence agents. Some Canadians had to replace British soldiers in the trenches "somewhere in France," and for reasons which were perfectly good they arrived later than had been arranged in the first instance. The opposing trenches were very near, and soon after the Canadians had ensconced themselves they heard a voice 'tother side shouting: "How is it that you are so late; we have been expecting you Canadians for an hour."

Rest Before Dignity.

Another story which has been going round London concerns a Canadian soldier who, while on leave in London, and very tired from walking about, sat himself down one evening on the steps of a business establishment in the Haymarket. The sight of a man in khaki, with all the dignity of the King's uniform, putting himself on the level of the fatigued flower sellers and casuals of the pavement, attracted notice, and when the lettering was seen on his shoulder, the remark was made: "Ah, well, he is quite new to London and does not know our way, or he would not dream of doing such a thing." The tired Canadian chuckled to himself: "It is only 18 months since I left the West End," he said, "but then I was a taxi driver and I don't see why I should give myself away." Still, the reflection which he allowed to be made was a little hard on Canada.

The Progress of the War.

A good many officers and men who were engaged in the magnificent battle of Neuve Chapelle are back in London, and, although their mouths are closed by military regulations to any detailed story of that great event, their casual observations go to show that the official reports have not overstated the character of the fight. They are permitted, of course, to speak of the work of the artillery, and there is no doubt that it spread terror in the ranks of the enemy. I doubt if such a hot and deadly directed fire has been made previously in this conflict. There have been a great many stories (that the censor naturally would not allow to be published) circulating as to this battle, I dare say, however, that some of them may work over to your side by word of mouth, and it is just as well therefore that I should say that most of them, so far as they have been related in by hearing, are exaggerations of the truth. The feat that was performed by the British forces was really splendid. If all the plans and schemes had gone with perfect smoothness, it would have had still better results, but in so far as there was disappointment and check, the trouble was due to the complicated circumstances, which invited some breakdown, and not, as I am informed, to any serious fault that could have been reasonably avoided. It is rather a pity when a great success has been obtained that people should worry because it has not reached to the height of expectation and that they should put the emphasis on the disappointment rather than upon the actual triumph. Yet this is the way that some of the arm-chair critics have been acting in the clubs, and for this reason I offer a word of warning to your readers.

Facts About the Falaba.

The statement issued by the Admiralty last week regarding the Falaba is very important for the disposal of assertions made to relieve the enemy of the charge of deliberately taking life. It was said that the captain was warned in the first instance, disregarded the warning, and that when he found the chase was too hot, was yet given reasonable time wherein to discharge the passengers in boats. It was further said that the Falaba, although a passenger vessel, had been armed by the British Government, and it was for that reason that she had been singled out for attack. All these defences are untrue. Only five minutes were given to the passengers to take to the boats and while the boats were still on the davits a torpedo was fired at short range with the obvious intention of taking life. Anyone who has had a voyage on a great liner and seen the practice that the staff captain gives in the lowering of boats will understand that with the heightened difficulties of a real emergency the possibility of gathering passengers from all parts of the ship and placing them in orderly proportion in different boats is not a matter for which five minutes offer security. I notice that there has been much eagerness amongst German emissaries in New York to extenuate this crime, and it is quite possible that the captain of the submarine exceeded general instructions. But that does not exonerate Admiral von Tirpitz, who, if he chose, could make his instruction of such an explicit nature that they could not possibly be misunderstood. Discipline in the Germany navy, as in the German army, is of the severest kind. We have not yet heard that the captain of this submarine has been recalled and subjected to a Court of Enquiry. Such a proceeding would give the pious declarations of the Germans some colourable support if it were made.

Canadian Finance.

While the war is temporarily depriving Canada of the capital it formerly obtained regularly from European markets, there is a well-grounded belief that one effect will be to widen the British sources of money for Canadian investment. It is perhaps only natural that the object lesson of so much destruction of property and so complete dislocation of business should turn the minds of quiet folk to countries which are not likely to be ravaged by war. The United Kingdom differs from Canada in that a very large proportion of its population are people of more or less leisure, who derive their living from the interest on inherited capital. It is probable that hitherto the inherent conservation of this class has retained the vast majority of such capital at home, but this great war upsets all preconceptions as to security and opens the way to new ideas. Conversations with solicitors and others upon whose advice such moneys are frequently invented lead to the belief that the spectacle of Canada even profiting by this European war is having a considerable influence in the direction alluded to. It is perhaps just as well that such new sources may become available, for undeniably a good many people have had their confidence in Canadian investments somewhat rudely shaken. It is hardly necessary to give a list of the companies which, during the past year or two, have been floated with flourishing trumpets only to find their way into early liquidation. Instances of this kind are only too common, while suspensions of dividends and even bond interest are even more so. One result of the wide popularity Canada has enjoyed over here from an investment point of view during the past few years is that Canadian matters are now very closely and intelligently watched and understood. Thus while people appreciate the important bearing of the Canadian movement towards increased farm production, and take a wide and sane view of the country's future, it is true that many look somewhat askance at the trend of both Dominion and provincial legislation as affecting investment matters.

The Railroads.

Similarly, but in even wider sense, the affairs of Canadian railroads, which have been mainly financed by British capital, are being watched. It is a good thing that at last the weekly and monthly traffic statements, being now compared with the poor weeks of 1914, are not so discouraging as when the contrast was with the booming times of 1913. But, for all that, it is observed that the tendency of legislation is to increase operating expenses by enforcing higher wage scales and to restrict severely any countervailing elesticity in freight or passenger charges. It is not for outsiders to criticize Canada's own domestic concerns, but on the other hand Canadians may well consider carefully the effect that their decisions will have upon those opinions and actions of outsiders which will vitally react upon Canada. For instance the Western farmer, who clamours for decreased freight rates for himself and for higher wages for his sons in railroad employment, may well consider whether his relations in the Old Country will find money to make railroad extensions possible, if he sees no certainty of the railroads being able to pay interest with regularity. This aspect of affairs will probably come in for discussion at the Grand Trunk Railway meeting next week. The inability of this company to meet the full interest on its guaranteed stock has been a severe blow, and the critics, who always make themselves heard at this meeting, will this year probably be in greater evidence than usual.

Provincial and Municipal Securities.

As to Government, provincial and municipal securities there would even now be a wide and ready market in Great Britain but for the Treasury restrictions. Confidence in such securities was never greater than now, as indeed was shown by the prompt over-subscription of the recent Dominion loan. It will not be forgotten yet previously the Dominion issues have, for some little time past, not been conspicuously successful. Confidence is all the stronger on account of the ready absorbtion of this class of security in the United States, for it is argued that Canada's nearest neighbour must be the best qualified to judge of the value of her bonds.

Round the West End.

Miss Binnie Clarke, so well known in Western Canada as a successful lady farmer, was one of the speakers lately at a dinner at the Lyceum Club to discuss what should be done for the soldiers, disabled and partially so, after the war is over. Emigration naturally appeals to many people as a solution of the problem, but of course details would have to be very carefully thought out and all the circumstances of the ex-soldier considered. At the same dinner Mr. C. Arthur Pearson, who is enthusiastic over the hostel for blind soldiers, spoke, as did Sir George Riddell, the noted newspaper proprietor, who is also interested in what will be before very long a very pressing question.

Lady Victoria Stanley, who was married the other day to the Hon. Neil Primrose. Lord Rosebery's younger son, has more than a distant connection with Canada, as her grandfather was Governor-General, and her father was A.D.C. to the Governor-General in 1880-81.

All the ex-Governors and their families continue to take an interest in Canada long after their active connection with the country has ceased. Lord Grey, who visited the Queen's Canadian Military Hospital at Shorncliffe lately, was as pleased and proud at the fine equipment and the usefulness of the hospital as if he were entirely a Canadian instead of one by adoption.

RED CROSS NOTES

TORONTO, April 24. — While the men of Canada are fighting on the battlefield or training for the battle yet to be fought, and while the women of Canada are working with a will in almost every town and village of the Dominion for the relief of those who suffer and the comfort of those who bear the brunt of this colossal conflict, the children are likewise doing their share for the cause of humanity and right. To the children of Canada much credit is due and in the years to come they will be able to look back to the days when they did something in the great struggle of the nations.

Not a few instances have come to the notice of the society where children, some of tender years, have denied themselves something that a child enjoys, in order that they may do something for the sake of their country and empire of which they will later become active citizens. Many of them have fathers and brothers at the front or in the contingents that are to follow and while they enjoy the skating rink and the toboggan slide they still have time to devote to more serious matters in a serious period of our national life.

For many weeks a little boy, aged nine years, used to come regularly every Saturday afternoon to the head office of the Red Cross Society in this city and leave twenty-five cents with the treasurer. On more than one occasion he was asked his name but he never would say who he was or even the school that he attended. "This is for the soldiers" was the only remark that he would make and then he would leave the office to join his fellow playmates in some boyish game. This little lad gave more than many, for probably he gave all he had. The heart of a soldier would be stirred to greater deeds of valour and endurance did he know of the self-sacrifice and boyish patriotism of this young Canadian.

Here is another example of what our children are doing for their country. In Montreal there is a little orphan girl named Elaine Forcade who has a very real conception of her duty towards her compatriots who are fighting at the front. It found expression in a pair of woollen wristlets which were forwarded to the Militia Department with a simple little letter explaining that the doner was an orphan in Montreal with no means of support but that she wishes to have her contribution forwarded to some observing soldier.

The Militia Department upon the advice of Captain Dupont, French government agent in Canada, has sent the wristlets to General de Legarenne at Paris with the request that the little girl's desire be fulfilled. The Militia Department has made every effort to trace little Miss Forcade, but failing this, wishes to make this a public acknowledgment of her gift.

In Lucknow, Ontario, seven little children have been working for the soldiers. They are not old enough to knit socks or knee caps but they have each made a wash cloth, a very useful article and one that is used a great deal in the hospital at the present time. The names of these little workers are Dora Mitchell, aged 9, Gordon Thompson aged 10, Willie Thompson, aged 10, and Irene Rathwell, aged 10.

These little children are doing a good work for their country and for the empire and they are setting a splendid example to many who have not yet realized the seriousness of the present crisis and have so far done nothing for the soldiers. While the proportion of those who are doing nothing for their country at the present time is small, there are some who do not seem to know that a war is in progress. The little children of Lucknow, Ontario, have by their example shown that they are not too small to do their share for the soldiers and they should inspire some to fall in line and join the great work.

A good work is being done by the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides of Canada and only a few days ago Mrs. Plumptre received a letter from the Guide Captain of Chatham, Ontario, saying she was shipping six dozen pneumonia jackets to the head office as well as surgical sponges, scarves, handkerchiefs, etc. When it is considered that our soldiers are standing in water up to their waists for hours at a time in the trenches, it will readily be seen that a pneumonia jacket, will be deeply appreciated by the men who are fighting for us.

Another girl guide, who lives in this city, and is fifteen years of age, wrote to Mrs. Plumptre in the following terms: 'I do not think I am doing enough in aid of my king and country. I know how to bandage and would like very much to go away as a nurse or for scouting. I am not afraid of anything. I have a girl friend who wishes to go, too."

That is the spirit that should emanate from every young boy and girl in Canada to-day. That girl guide felt that she was not doing enough for her king and country and she wanted to go scouting and go through the dangers of actual war in order that she might do something for her king and for Canada when assistance of every kind is sorely needed. Her king and country thank her. Patriotism and unselfishness. Your brothers and fathers are laying down their lives that you may remain secure and your land happy. What are you doing in return? Now is the time to act while the iron of war is raging hot and while our brave Canadian soldiers are suffering for us. Later on in the years to come you will be men and women; may you be able to tell your children that you did your duty when your country called you.

Kills Uncle to Avenge Mother

Boy of Fifteen, Bearing Grudge For Slur Against Dead Parent.

NEW YORK, April 23.—Nursing a belief that his uncle had spoken ill of his mother before her death a year ago, Raymond Fisher, fifteen years old, shot asd killed Harry Taylor, forty-five, in the latter's home in Jersey City.

Following the death of his mother, Raymond and his father, whose name is the some, went to live with his mother's brother, Taylor. They had quarrelled frequently, and the lad always had said that Taylor had spoken untruthfully of his mother while she lived.

In the final quarrel the grudge flamed into passion. That the lad had premeditated the act was indicated to the police by the fact that he had arme dhimself with a pistol. In the quarrel, which was witnessed by Taylor's two children, aged 13 and 12 years old, Raymond Fisher suddenly drew the pistol and cried to his uncle:

"Now, I'm going to fix you for slurring my mother before she died." He fired one shot. The bullet entered Taylor's mouth and he died before a physician reached the house.

The boy ran into the street and escaped, but three hours later he surrendered at the Fourth precinct police station. There he said that he never could forget what his uncle had said about his mother and that ever since her death he had been resolved to kill him.

Fairly Large Fruit Crop Is Expected

It is not probable that the peach crop failure which visited the Niagara Peninsula last year will recur again this year. Information which Canadian Grocer has received from that district, points to the fact that peach trees have wintered well and that the buds have withstood the attacks of Jack Frost successfully. It is seldom, in fact true that we see a failure of any fruit crop two years in succession. This year, therefore, we may look forward to a pretty good crop of peaches, providing subsequent weather conditions are at all favourable.

Fruit men also say that other fruits, such as strawberries and raspberries have come through the winter in good shape. With a few warm rains, plenty of sunshine and no hard frost between now and June, we shall undoubtedly see splendid crops in these particular lines.

There is also some speculation as to the extent and the prices of the pack of fruits this year. From present appearances it looks as if the packs will not be nearly as large as in normal times. The trade knows that during the season 1914-15, packers were not very successful in regard to marketing their products at favourable prices, and this is going to deter many of them from producing any surplus pack. At the same time sugar is pretty nearly $3 cwt. more expensive than at the corresponding period last year. There is, too, a duty on tin plate which did not exist 12 months ago. These three items point to a smaller pack and higher prices for the 1915 pack of fruits.—Canadian Grocer.

It Multiplies Power.

The telephone, like the crane, multiplies power.

If the modern business man had to travel every time it was necessary to have a personal talk with a customer or business associate, he would be in the position of a builder without a crane.

Are you using the telephone as you should—systematically applying it to the needs of your business?

The telephone, especially the long distance service, makes possible real economy, and with it a greater, not a lower, efficiency. A careful study of the subject will repay you.

CRISIS IN DESPERATE RUSH AT YPRES IS REPORTED PAST

Greater Part of Territory Lost by the Unexpected Use of Asphyxiating Bombs Has Been Regained and Battle Is Developing Favourably For Allied Troops

LONDON, April 26.—The critical stage of the battle precipitated by the Germans north of Ypres, on the British, French and Belgian lines, has apparently been passed, with the allies resuming the offensive and steadily pushing the enemy back. The big surprise gained by the use of asphyxiating gas bombs by the Germans appears to be overcome. A great deal of the lost territory was recaptured by noon yesterday, and latest reports from the battlefield were that conditions were developing favorably for the allies. The Germans attacked Saturday night at several points along the British front from various directions — north, east and south east—but they were met by a counter offensive as fiery and determined as their own, and were not able permanently to gain new ground, says the French report.

The French War Office also reports that Friday night and Saturday morning and afternoon the enemy made strenuous efforts to avail himself of the surprise he had engineered the day before with his asphyxiating gas, but had no success. At break of day on Saturday, on the left bank of the Yser, where the Germans had penetrated, they succeeded in carrying the village of Lizerbe, but the French Zouaves and Belgian Carbiniers immediately rallied, made a vigorous counter-attack, recaptured the village, and passed beyond it. It was discovered Saturday afternoon that the Germans were using two army corps in their attempted advance, and they continued to throw bombs filled with deadly gas. The French and Belgians were able to make rapid progress on their right, but their progress was slower on their left.

In the meantime, the British troops were forced to withstand violent attacks throughout Saturday night and Sunday morning. These ended with the British in possession of the field. Thus was the French right firmly held.

The Belgian War Office confirms the recapture of Lizerne, and reports that the Belgian artillery was able successfully to reply to the German artillery fire, which was directed against the whole of the Belgian lines. The Belgian aviators were hampered by a strong wind, but they were able to make useful reconnaissances.

Sunday's fighting was devoted by the French forces to the clearing of the Germans from the north bank of the Ypres Canal, in which they had penetrated in their rush.

General French Praises Work of Canadians

OTTAWA, April 26.—J. J. Carrick, M.P., who is at the front with the Canadian troops, cabled to Maj.-Gen. Hughes that Sir John French telegraphed to Gen. Alderson yesterday as follows:

"I wish to express to you and the Canadian troops my admiration of the gallant stand and fight they have made. They have performed a most brilliant and valuable service. Last night and again this morning I reported their splendid behavior to the Secretary of State, and I have a reply from him, saying how highly the gallantry and determination in a difficult position are appreciated in England."

Sir Robert Borden sent the following cable yesterday to Gen. Alderson, commander of the Canadian division:

"Report of the splendid gallantry and efficiency of division under your command has thrilled all Canada with pride. Warmest congratulations."

Sir Robert also sent the following cable to Earl Grey in reply to a congratulatory message:

"Deeply appreciate your message. Canada is very proud that her sons have upheld so worthily the splendid tradition of our great pioneer races."

"Hearty congratulations on magnificent behavior of Canadians."

Gen. Hughes replied:

"Sincere thanks for message. Please convey to Sir John and the Canadians the pride and joy of their comrades in Canada for the part they have so nobly played. The Canadians have justly proved that there was no surrender, and that, by whatever fault the guns were lost, they were not allowed to remain in possession of the enemy."

A Canadian Associated Press cable from London says:

"J. L. Garvin, editor of The Observer, whose sober judgment on various phases of the war have earned his weekly war notes a degree of respect, in an estimate of the Canadians' latest achievements, thinks that the Germans must have already sent news to Berlin that they are retaking the lost ground. Things certainly must have looked serious for the allies, even when the French advance again started.

"Fighting shoulder to shoulder with them the Canadians had their chance," continues Garvin, "and the men of the Maple Leaf set their teeth to dare all by a charge, which as a magnificent feat of arms, will stand out in all the annals of this war no matter what it may yet bring. The Canadians attacked the Germans, routed the enemy, captured many prisoners, won back their guns. They have given their brave blood and measure, but have the soldiers' recompense. By sheer valor at a critical hour they baffled the Germans and their asphyxiating gas bombs, and proved how the utmost, despite scientific devilry, goes down before the indomitable hearts of free men. They have saved the situation dead or living; they have won laurels that cannot wither; through them the name of Canada is nobler in the world to-day and forever greater."

Starting in Poland

Germans Attack Russian Posts But Are Repulsed

PETROGRAD, April 26.—Russians standing on the defensive, had to fronts, Saturday and Sunday. In the Carpathians, a large increase in the German artillery is reported on the whole front, indicating that the enemy has brought up fresh units. Repulse of a series of persistent attacks in the region of Uzok Pass by rifle fire and hand grenades, is reported from the Russian headquarters yesterday morning.

Revival of warfare in Russian Poland was signalized by German attacks in units varying in size from two companies to one battalion on the Russian advanced positions between Kalwarya and Ludwinow. The Russian War Office says that all these attacks were easily repulsed by the Russian fire and that after one of these repulses the enemy fled in disorder.

The new Russian aircraft, called the Ilia Mouretz, figured in an attack on the Neidenburg station in East Prussia, where they destroyed a portion of the railway line and caused a number of fires.

REV. J. D. M'EWEN AT ST. PAUL'S

Spoke on Missionary Work in Brazil

The Rev. J. D. McEwen, who is touring Canada from coast to coast, in the interests of Missionary work in South America, occupied the pulpit of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church last night. He spoke particularly of his work in Brazil, and the great opportunities that await the Church in that land of ignorance and superstition. We are more familiar with missionary activities in Japan, China and India than we are with the work in the great continent to the south of us, so Mr. McEwen's address was of particular interest.

A fair sized congregation had gathered despite the inclemency of the weather. As the service was going on within, a wild electric storm was surging without. While it was at its worst the audience was being charmed by the singing of the quartette, (Mrs. and Miss Allan, and Messrs. McKeown and Dickson), who rendered "Peace, Perfect Peace," as arranged by Caldbeck.

The melody is of that plaintive style which soothes the storm-tossed soul, and the beautiful harmony of the well-balanced parts produced a magical effect upon the hearers, as their minds instinctively caught the contrast of the storm without, and the "peace" within.

The blood of Jesus whispers peace within."

In Jesus' keeping we are safe, and they."

These words burned their way into the hearts of those who were thinking in sorrow of our brave boys as they are offering themselves as sacrifices on the battlefields of Europe.

While in the couplet:

"Peace, perfect peace, our future all unknown?
Jesus we know, and He is on the throne."

There is that assurance to Christians that, notwithstanding the devastating war now tearing our souls, God is still in command, and all will be well when "Jesus calls us to heaven's perfect peace."

It is now about fifteen years since the Rev. Mr. McEwen first went to Brazil, and even in that time marvellous changes hath taken place. The discovery of the country, so to speak, had taken place about 414 years ago, when Cabral, a Portuguese navigator was wrecked off the coast of Brazil, while on his way to India. Indians threatened the annihilation of the landing party, but Cabral ordered the cannons fired, and the red men prostrated themselves before "the inhabitants of another world." A priest celebrated mass on the shore, while the Indians peered down at them through the bows of the overhanging trees.

The great difference in the development of the two continents, North and South America, lies not so much in climate or resources, as in the great fact that North America from the first has had a Bible. The people who crossed from Europe came to our country to seek homes in a land where they would be free to worship God. As a result we have a wonderful continent, of marvellous development, simply because we have had the Bible.

By way of contrast the continent to the south, although great in agricultural area, and almost unlimited in natural resources, lies in its virgin state with land untilled, and its people uncouth, uneducated, and impregressive, largely because of the absence of the Bible. For over 400 years the Catholic priests tried to keep the Bible out of the country, and for 400 years the country has seen very little progress. The Catholics of this continent have prospered because they live in a protestant country, where the Bible is paramount.

Brazil is about the same size as Canada, with three times her population, and the great majority have never heard the true gospel. This country, then, is a door for special missionary effort. In the year 1912 the British and Foreign Bible Society shipped seven tons of Bibles to South America.

Along the shore line, which extends over 1,000 miles, the cities have made remarkable progress in the last fifteen or twenty years. This is particularly evident in the capital, Rio de Janeiro, where a great deal of Canadian money has been invested. In fact the biggest thing in Brazil to-day is an Electric Light and Power Co. with headquarters in Toronto. In many of the cities great public enterprises are being undertaken such as the construction of immense docks, and the laying of sewers. Indeed, the problem of sanitation is changing past holes into the most beautiful and healthful cities in the world.

The great interior, however, is as yet practically untouched, and it was for this momentous work that the Rev. Mr. McEwen made his appeal.

—PAUL PENMAN.

Proposed Change In C.P.R. Time Table May Cut Off the Papers

Morning Train to Leave Shortly After Midnight Unless Company is Strongly Urged to Continue the Present Service.

The following correspondence explains itself and indicates to the Board of Trade and the City Council the necessity of proper action to preserve Peterborough's present early delivery of Toronto morning papers:

Canadian Pacific Railway Company.
Toronto, April 21st, 1915.
Business Manager,
The Toronto Mail & Empire.

Dear Sir,— When the timetable changes at the end of May we shall not be able to take the morning papers to Peterborough as we are doing now, as the train concerned will leave shortly after midnight.

Yours truly,
J. T. Arundel,
General Superintendent.
April 23rd, 1915.

Copy.
President,
The Board of Trade,
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Attached you will find copy of a letter received at this office. It is just about a year since Mr. J. R. Stratton, and another gentleman formed part of a deputation, which included representatives of the three morning papers, and interviewed Mr. J. T. Arundel in regard to the matter in question.

At that time they had arranged to start the freight train on which we are now sent the papers for Lindsay and Peterborough much earlier than formerly, and it was owing to the deputation that they agreed to go back to the old time. Now Mr. Arundel says they intend to start this train shortly after midnight when the timetable changes about the end of May.

Have not been able so far to find out the times the regular passenger trains will leave when the change takes place. It will be just as well to keep in touch, because it may be necessary to send another deputation to the C.P.R. as before.

Yours truly,
The Mail Printing Co.
W. J. Darby,
Circulation Manager.
April 23rd, 1915.

Copy.
President Board of Trade,
Peterborough.

Dear Sir,—We are advised by Mr. J. P. Arundel, General Superintendent of the C.P.R., that there is to be a change in timetable of C.P.R. trains at the end of May, when the freight train now leaving North Toronto at 3 a.m. for Peterborough will be moved up to depart shortly after midnight. This will make it impossible for Toronto morning papers to make use of this train, and means that there will be a difference of several hours in the delivery of Toronto morning papers in Peterborough.

Would it not be advisable for yourself and other influential business men in Peterborough to take the matter up with the C.P.R. with a view to having the present service continued? I would be glad to hear from you in the matter by an early mail.

Yours truly,
R. A. Cleary,
Circulation Manager,
The Globe.

Spring Seeding In Peterboro' County

Is Much Earlier Than Usual —Land is Very Dry— Work Progressing at Other Points

Farmers in Peterborough County are making rapid progress with spring seeding. A large proportion of the seed is now in the ground, and the end of April will about see the finish. This is much earlier than usual. The result will depend upon the amount of rain that falls between now and harvest time. As matters stand the land is very dry and in need of rain. The farmers would sooner have seeding operations prolonged for two or three weeks in return for a moderate rainfall. Seed that is placed in the ground under present conditions will be retarded in growth unless rain is forthcoming at an early date. The small amount of rain that fell last night will help matters a little.

Seeding in Perth.

Seeding in Perth is now in full swing. The last couple of hot days have brought the earth to the required dryness, and the farmers are getting in their coats and goose wheat. The seeding around Thamesville has been in progress some days.

Seeding Done Early.

Cobourg, April 26—This week has seen a greater amount of seed sown than has been put in the ground at so early a date for many seasons back. The low fields have worked up well, although it is usually impossible to get on them so early, and the high lands are already in need of rain. Farmers have made the most of their opportunity to get the grain in early and have been upon the land early and late.

Funeral of Late J. A. Culverwell

Was Held in Toronto on Saturday —Many Floral Tributes

TORONTO, April 26.—The funeral service for the late J. A. Culverwell, of Port Hope, who died on Wednesday, was held at 3 o'clock on Saturday afternoon at the home of his sister, Mrs. G. A. Brayley, of 92 Binscarth road. Rev. Archdeacon Cody and Canon F. G. Plummer and Rev. Mr. Elliott, of Port Hope, conducted the service. There were many floral tributes from relatives and friends. The remains were buried in St. James' Cemetery. The pall-bearers were: Messrs. Philip Bykes, A. R. Blackburn, G. A. Brayley, P. J. Bykes, R. G. McLaughlin and R. A. Mulholland, formerly Mayor of Port Hope.

A widow, living in Port Hope; his mother, and five sisters in Toronto survive the deceased. The sisters are: Mrs. A. R. Blackburn, Mrs. G. A. Brayley, Mrs. Bykes and Misses Ida and Bessie Culverwell.

Righteousness Exalteth a Nation, But Sin is a Reproach to Any People

These are stirring times in which we live, and things are happening so quickly we are almost lost in bewilderment at the turn some events are taking. If everything were turning out right we would have much occasion for rejoicing, but, sad to say, our fair name as a country is being dragged into the dust. What are we going to do about it?

With some such thought in his mind the Rev. R. G. Peever delivered a powerful sermon at the George Street Methodist Church last night.

His subject was: "Man Above Graft," his text being taken from 1 Sam. 12:1-5, wherein Samuel harkened to the voice of the people and appointed over them a king. As he sorrowfully relinquished his authority he challenged any man to say whether he had been wrongfully used. In answer they all with one voice, said: "Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken out of any man's hand."

What a splendid figure, this old servant, statesman and leader of his people, placing his life before them and before the world as a challenge.

In our own province we have a new premier, a worthy successor to Sir James Whitney. We welcome him. His character is vouched for because he is a Methodist, and before him comes the great question which is disturbing the public mind of Ontario, the regulation and destruction of the liquor traffic. Many contend that he is on trial, and has perhaps, lost the great opportunity that comes to few, in not giving strong leadership to the country against the traffic. In the meantime he is worthy of our confidence and moral support until his commissioners have tried their hand.

These are stirring times in our Dominion as well; as witness, the great world war and our parliament just closing, the most important session in its history in which a large war vote of one hundred million was made; yet a most serious crisis has arisen because of graft and public plunder, so much so that Bishop Farthing of Montreal, Dr. Herridge, Moderator of Presbyterian Church of Canada, Principal Gandier of Knox College, Toronto, and many other prominent men, have called the attention of the public to the alarming situation.

Never has he stood higher in the estimation of the Canadian people. His pronouncement will serve as a strong tonic, and we naturally breathe more freely, because the public mind is sick of the argument often heard on the floor of the House: "When you were in you did it."

A grafter in these times is a double traitor, taking advantage of the present emergency, to put gain in his own pocket at the possible expense of the lives of our soldier sons.

What Must Be Done?

The Samuels and Josephs of both parties must come forth, and good men in all walks of life must speak out strongly for righteousness, and in condemnation of these practices that are lowering the moral and national love of the country. It is time to get rid of the rotten timber upon which we would build a great state.

Fully ninety per cent. of our people are willing that the searchlight of investigation should be turned on the whole circle of mischief-markers and wrong-doers.

Space will not permit a fuller report of this most powerful sermon, further than to touch upon two reasons why these conditions are condoned. First, a false attitude of apology. Many justify these things by saying, "Abnormal conditions justify irregularities."

To offset this argument it is simply necessary to state that the Czar of Russia when he appointed purchasing agents for supplies for this great war, remembering the cause of their defeat in the Russo-Japan conflict, closed the interview by saying:

"The man who steals, now, I hang."

These men will think twice before they yield to graft.

Second false attitude: Why should not those, who are selling to the Government and meeting their demands, charge what they wish.

Who is the Government? You and I, and every other hard-working person.

Why rob ourselves? With this viewpoint we justify stealing and highway robbery.

To correct these we must put before our people high ideals: the parents in the home, the teacher in the schools, and the ministers in the pulpits.

"Righteousness alone exalteth a nation."

Heat Wave Sweeps Over Peterboro'--Registered 86 Deg.

Highest Temperature For April There is Any Record of in Peterboro —Nearest Approach is 81 Degrees Which Was Recorded on April 30, 1899—Severe Electrical Storms Follow—One Man Killed.

The high-water mark was reached yesterday when the thermometer registered 86 degrees in the shade. This is the highest April temperature there is any record of in Peterborough, April 30, 1899, being its nearest approach, when eight-one degrees was recorded. Yesterday's heat wave drove the people to the parks and the water front. Dispensers of ice cream cream and soft drinks report a brisk trade. Only those that could supply cake, pie or some other form of eatables were privileged to remain open throughout the day. This is a provision required by law under which such places operate. Eighty-six degrees is exceeded on but a few occasions in July and August. A thunderstorm in the evening added a midsummer tone to the whole, but brought little or no relief in the way of cooler weather.

MAN KILLED BY LIGHTNING.

The storm that visited Peterborough was light compared with the effect in other places. In Toronto the death of William Hamnett occurred while he was walking east on Broadway Avenue, 300 yards outside the city limits. At the time he was talking with David Russell, who resides at the corner of Bayview Avenue and Lawrence Street. Hamnett was struck by a bolt of lightning, which killed him instantly, while Russell was thrown to his knees. The latter staggered to the home of a man nearby and secured his assistance. The two immediately attempted to revive Hamnett by means of artificial respiration, but failed. Dr. W. L. Bond was summoned, but although he worked over Hamnett for some time the efforts were unavailing. The body was removed to Myers' private mortuary. Hamnett was 27 years of age, and is survived by a widow and one child.

HOUSE BLOWN DOWN.

The storm claimed one frame house in the north-western section of Toronto. A two-storey building which was being constructed by W. Naylor, of 171 Harvey Avenue, was blown from its foundations, and in collapsing fell upon the house next door. The roof of the latter was caved in and the interior completely wrecked. The owner, Thos. Snary, was struck on the head by a beam and slightly injured. His family escaped.

Shortly after the storm commenced the Harris glue works, Danforth Road, was struck. The flames quickly spread, but the prompt arrival of the firemen prevented the blaze assuming serious proportions. The damage is estimated to be about $900. The lightnig also struck the flag pole of the Bank of Montreal, shivering it into kindling wood.

CHURCH STRUCK.

At St. Paul's Church, Toronto, Ven. Archdeacon Cody was preaching the sermon when the organ was injured. Although struck by lightning the congregation did not know that the accident had occurred, the only evidence of the fact being a loud click. When the last hymn was sung the organist found it impossible to play the instrument. Repairs will be commenced at once. It is thought that a fuse has been blown out, although nothing definite can be ascertained.

A short distance west of Leaside the lightning struck the farm buildings of W. Meagher, and completely destroyed them, with the contents. The loss is said to be considerable. The barn of Thomas Jackson, at Markham, was also destroyed, the loss being placed at about $2,500.

POWER LINES AFFECTED.

In York county the storm also created great havoc. The suburban car service was brought to a standstill at many points, while the Hydro-Electric power at Cooksville station was paralysed. At Mimico the hail fell thickly, in some cases the stones being about an inch and a half long, and many windows were reported as being broken. At all points in the county evening church service was cancelled, as it was impossible for the congregations to brave the storm to attend church. Reports from Weston stated that the village was in darkness for some time, while a number of fires also occurred in the district of Scarboro' and Todmorden, resulting from buildings being struck by electrical bolts. The telephone service to Agincourt was also destroyed.

A PECULIAR FREAK.

A unique trick played by the storm was told by a railway engineer, who was running into the Toronto terminals last night. According to his version a bolt of lightning made a semi-circle of the engine and passed around the smoke stack without doing any harm. For a second, he said, he was dazed by the high voltage in the air. The passengers on the train never knew of the narrow escape which they had.

Although the storm did not damage the railways it greatly interfered with the wires, and for some time much difficulty was experienced by the operators in despatching trains. This was principally caused by the voltage interfering with the wire currents.

HOUSES WERE STRUCK.

BELLEVILLE, April 26.—This city and vicinity was visited by a severe electrical storm which did damage. At Foxboro village a house belonging to Mr. Frank Palmer was, with its contents, destroyed. The loss was upwards of $3,000, partially covered by insurance. At Sterling village a house owned and occupied by Mr. Bird was struck and considerably damaged.

Austrian Sentto Detention Camp

George Nahirniah, the Austrian arrested in the city some time ago, was this morning taken to Kingston. Nahirniah claimed to have left Toronto. When Chief Thompson made inquiries he was instructed to notify the authorities at Kingston. He did so and Nahirniah was taken to Kingston to-day, by two members of the 57th Regiment.

Peterboro' Boys Are Shining in Music and Football at Belleville

Recruits are still coming in for the fourth contingent at the local armouries and the men are being drilled each night by Acting Sergeant Major Succee of the 57th Regiment. There are twenty-six recruits in the detachment at the present time.

---

The Examiner has received the following interesting letter from a Peterborough boy at Belleville:

"Glad to let you know we are, with a few exceptions, keeping in good health. We are now getting good food and plenty of it. I hear we are moving to Barrieafield on May 15th.

"We had our Battalion Band out to-day for Church parade for the first time. Considering they have only had about a week to practice they made a good showing. The Sunday service for the men (less the Catholics, who go to their own Church) is now held in the Armouries. Capt. C. R. Spencer conducts the service. I tell you the boys marched good without a band and I am sure they will make a good showing now they have one.

"You would hardly know some of the boys, they are getting so tanned. We now have a dry canteen, and the Y.M.C.A. have erected a tent for us where we can sit and smoke, write, or play cards. We also have a nice piano, and, believe me, the Peterborough boys, have won every game as musical line. The boys have also had some good football games, and No. 1 Platoon, composed of all Peterborough boys, have wn every game as yet against the other platoons. Sgt. [illegible] and Opr. Bingham were swabbed and discovered, on Friday last, to be carriers, and, of course, are now isolated with about fifty more men, at the Exhibition Grounds. I was up to see them last night, and they do not mind it at all, in fact, they are having a good time; practically no drill, the best of food, and good quarters.

Military men in Peterborough will note with special regret the appearance in the casualty list of the name of Lt.-Col. Buell of the 4th Battalion. Lt.-Col. Buell was commanding officer of the Brockville Regiment and made many friends among the local officers when the Brockville and Peterborough regiments exchanged visits a couple of years ago.

City League Executive to Hold Meeting

There will be a meeting of the executive of the Peterborough City Baseball League in the Y.M.C.A. at 8 o'clock on Wednesday night, for the consideration of the constitution and schedule. Applications for the position of umpire will also be heard at this meeting, so that any applicants for the position should send in their applications before Wednesday's meeting.

THOSE WHO WOULD NOT WORK WERE PUT OUT

The "railbirds" at the Police Court this morning got a dreadful shock when everyone who wanted a job at mixing mortar was asked to stand up. Either they were afraid they would get work or they were so much surprised to have it offered that they were stunned and let the opportunity slip. At any rate out of the large number of men present satisfying their curiosity in regard to a little family trouble, the particulars of which were being exploited, and the available place for spectators was almost completely filled, only one man stood up to signify that he wanted work. The Magistrate happened to have a place to send him and, according gave him a note to the foreman in charge which will ensure his employment.

There was little sympathy for those remaining and they were told to get out, which they did.

Employing Outsiders on Outfall Sewer

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Please allow me space in your valuable paper to ask a few questions regarding the employment of the men on the new outfall sewer.

How is it that a single (unmarried) non-resident can be employed as an engineer?

Why this man in preferance to a married or single experienced engineer on that work, who is also a ratepayer

I also understand that there are not to be any outsiders employed on city work.

Yours truly
One Who Knew.

Automobile Service Proposed to River at Foot of Lock St.

A Sunday automobile service from the city to the foot of Lock Street has been recently mooted for the convenience of those who ocasionally spend the whole or part of the first day near the water. Undoubtedly the proposal would be welcome to the ordinary citizen whose legs are his only means of locomotion. The normal pleasure of a trip to the river is considerably marred by the long walk; and an auto service every hour or half hour would be appreciated by many oftizens who are otherwise home-bound on the only day which affords a few hours of real leisure.

Jitney Will Be Tried Out For Benefit of East City People

Mr. Chas. Bank Says Auto Car Has Proved Its Reliability and He Will Use It As Soon As the Present Contract is Completed.

DOING 160 MILES A DAY

On hundred and sixty miles a day has the jitney registered since its operations as an auxiliary unit in the Street Railway system. In days' service it covered one thousand two hundred and eighty miles, with only one hitch, and that came Saturday night from some part of its machinery that had been overlooked by the oil cup.

According to Charlie Banks the jitney begins work at 6 a.m. and runs steadily to 11 p.m., seventeen hours, covering an average distance of nine and one half miles an hour. One result of this service is found in tentative plans proposed by Mr. Banks after the present contract with the Railway Company is terminated.

He has several ideas under consideration, one being to Chemong Park, and another a regular service for East City. The latter will be tried out first, probably leaving the corner of Hunter and George streets, going east to Burnham, down to the C.P.R. east to the Vermont Marble Works, north on Rogers stret to Hunter, and west to George street. It is believed that a ten-minute schedule could be operated to connect with the street cars. Another route is suggested north of Hunter on Rogers into the Carlisle neighbourhood, returning by Douro street. This will likely be tried out before the Chemong season opens, and upon its success may depend its continuance.

The Chemong Proposal.

With the prospect of Chemong Park attracting more than the usual group of Peterborough people, the motor 'bus is proposed as a solution of the communication problem. Mr. Banks has in view a time table for the park commuters by which the jitney would leave Chemong at 7 a.m. and 8 a.m., the first hour for those who desire to reach their offices at 8 o'clock, and the second trip for those who can blow in at any old hour. Of course they would be in the city at 8:30, and ready for work much earlier possibly than when living in the city.

In the evening the car would leave the city at 5 p.m. and 6 p.m., arriving at the park half an hour after departure. Mr. Banks is seriously considering both plans, realizing that there is an opening in both directions for a regular and reliable service.

FENIAN RAID VETERAN DIED AT THE HOME

Chief Thompson has been successful in securing information about the Mr. George Armshaw, about whom he had an enquiry from Belleville on Friday last. He died at the Peterborough Protestant Home some years ago. His only son, Dr. Armshaw, of Montreal, died in Montreal.

The enquiry was from solicitors in Belleville, who were looking for the late Mr. Armshaw or his heirs to bestoy upon him one hundred acres of land. He was a Fenian raid veteran and the land was a grant from the government.

SPLENDID TEST RUN BY RUSSELL "SIX"

MONTREAL, April 23.—From Toronto to Montreal by motor car at the speed of an express train averaging 25 miles at hour was a trip successfully terminated last night by a Russell six "30" car. The trip was in the nature of a durability test to demonstrate the capability of this car of standing the strain of ambulance and transport work on the heavy roads of France and Belgium. The car was one of the Russell Company's stock models. Leaving the Queen City at 2.31 yesterday morning the car crossed the boundary line of Montreal at 8 o'clock last night and pulled up outside the Windsor Station at 8.50. The 30-mile trip was made with stops only for gasoline. No adjustment or repairs were made throughout the entire journey.

Mr. D. E. McVannell, the advertising manager of the Russell Company, was one of a party of four aboard the car. In speaking of the trip he stated that from Toronto to Kingston the roads were in excellent condition. At Prescott they became bad, and approaching Monreal they became worse. The trip was made for the satisfaction of the company, regarding the quality of their car, and they are well pleased with the result of the test. The type of car used on this trip is the same supplied to the Government and a duplicate of the same car is now on exhibition at the White Rose Garage, Hunter Street, Peterborough.

Those who made the trip were Mr. J. A. Martin, sales manager of the Russell Company; Mr. J. W. Gibson, of the Canada Cycle and Motor Co.; Mr. McVannell, advertising manager; and I. Spikeman, chauffeur. The latter is known to Torontonians in the business as a crack driver. At Ile Perrot the Russell car was met by Mr. J. R. Marlow, manager of the Montreal Agency; Mr. Kirby of the Automobile Association, and others.

St. John's Sunday Morning Service

Rev. R. L. Brydges, M.A., of Toronto, Officiated

The morning service at St. John's Anglican Church partook of the nature of an appeal from the Bishop of Toronto, through his representative, the Rev. R. L. Brydges, M.A., the Diocesan Secretary and Organizer for Moral and Social Reform, for an income of $3,000, with which to help maintain, in Toronto, a Rescue Home for Girls. During the course of his sermon the preacher paid special attention to the question of supervised play-grounds.

Prior to the Recessional Hymn a kindly reference was made to the fact that a family of the Church now upon the sea, which added a peculiar interest to the singing of that beautiful hymn, "Eternal Father, Strong to Save," especially the refrain:

"Oh, hear us when we cry to Thee
For those in peril on the sea!"

Truly the sea has its perils at the present time.

Never since man penned those words, long centuries ago, has the world heard a more significant note than that conveyed in the tremendous thought of debt. We all dislike it; most are familiar with it; we instinctively shrink from it. The text refers to a debt in a peculiar and wonderful sense.

The world has become convulsed in a gigantic conflict. It will never be the same world again. It has awakened men and women the world over from their idle dreams, from their frivolous lives, from their getting and giving. It is arousing them to help the world into a higher life and greater service to their fellow men.

Great Britain is giving of her best. Every family of distinction is in mourning to-day. They are giving their best in the service of the Empire. In our own land we are constantly receiving messages of some of our brightest and ablest falling at the front. We will feel it. We need it.

Men are living too much to themselves, becoming beasts and demons, such as are now ravishing Europe. We, too, have been living the selfish life; for proof we have but to look at the shameful exposures of the last few weeks. What are we drifting to? We need the new life divine, which will develop within us a new manhood of power and grace. We are waking up; Great Britain is waking up. The colonies are waking up. Think of Russia forbidding the manufacture of that national poison, Vodka! Think of France stamping out absinthe!

John Ruskin caught the spirit of St. Paul, when he said: "I owe a debt to my fellow men"; and we find him giving his fortune away for the uplift of those needing help.

As we sit worshipping God in one of the most beautiful churches in Canada there are thousands of men, women and children in England, the land we love, who know not the beauties of the world, who are in virtual slavery. Ruskin wore himself out in service.

Lord Shaftsbury, a child of the noblest culture, with his own two hands, went forth into the world to a life of service. As a huge monument erected to his memory are these words: "Reforms of the last century are largely due to his influence and power." He helped establish industrial and trade schools, and became the voice of the poor and weak.

As his funeral cortege passed through the streets of London thousands upon thousands turned out to pay him honour. The costermongers had prepared a banner with the words: "I was sick and in prison and he visited me," and the ragged boys' school had used the superscription: "I was hungry and naked and he fed me."

You say these were exceptional men? No. In this twentieth century there are thousands of men and women serving in the noblest way to do God's work. Think of the grand work being performed by our nurses, a service of which we are proud, and only sixty years ago this was brought into being through the instrumentality of one woman, Florence Nightingale, the "Angel of the Crimea."

As a result of the momentous times in which we live we are going to have a different outlook upon life; we are going to feel that the welfare of the whole community has been laid upon us.

We Christians are largely responsible for conditions as they exist, and we must become deeply conscious of the obligation we owe our brother, our sister and our children.

Our homes are the centres of influences for our children. Are they what they ought to be? Is our Church a social centre; do our people throng it and thrill it with their presence? Our Churches must be open wider, radiating more power and strength throughout the entire community.

The reverend speaker, here, made a strong plea for supervised playgrounds. "The Battle of Waterloo was won on the play grounds of Eton school"; and concluded his address by making an appeal to the diocese to help maintain, in Toronto, a "Rescue Home for Girls."

—Paul Penman.

Rest Hospital Near British Lines Cures Soldiers' Shattered Nerves

LONDON, April 26.—Not far behind the British firing line in France is a hospital, the patients of which are neither wounded nor afflicted with any particular illness. Any soldier can get admitted there, but only for a limited time. It is simply a "recuperation home," established in an old jute factory, in which modern hospital conveniences of various kinds have been installed. The building is situated in close proximity to a railroad station, making convenient the transportation of patients to and from the institution.

A British medical officer founded this establishment, after he had made the observation that the regular field hospitals were being crowded needlessly with patients whose ailments were caused only by exhaustion. Such sufferers now are conveyed to the recreation home, where soon after arrival they are divided into two groups, those who will be returned to their regiments after a rest and the more serious cases which eventually will be transferred to a regular hospital.

How useful this auxiliary hospital is to the military medical service is demonstrated by the fact that of 5,822 soldiers treated now fewer than 2,713 recovered within a fortnight and returned to the front.

The patients usually arrive during the night. Most of them are in a state nearing collapse, and as a rule are infested so badly with vermin that they have to be temporarily isolated. Upon arrival they are divested of their soiled clothes, and after a cursory medical examination receive a nourishing meal of easily digestible food. Sometimes several days may elapse without a single soldier arriving, but at other times they come in droves of a hundred or more.

Whenever a large contingent is sent to the recreation hospital the authorities must be notified beforehand, so as to make sure accommodations are available, since no more than a thousand persons can be housed and taken care of at one time.

The first night a new arrival has to spend in the so-called "dirty" quarters of the hospital. The next morning, after a bath,, the soldier gets back his uniform, brushed clean, pressed, mended and disinfected. His underclothes, however, have been sent to the laundry, but he receives a new set and three woollen blankets. He is permitted to enter the "clean" section, where nearly all newcomers immediately take to their beds and go to sleep. For several days their one and only desire is to sleep, and they barely summon up enough energy to get up and partake of a meal. And this is practically all the treatment that a majority of the cases require.

Four meals are served daily, and the attendants have orders from the physicians in charge to let the patients eat as much as they like of the plain but wholesome food. After a few days of sleeping and eating the mentality of a patient usually commences to rouse itself. He gets an ambition to write letters, read newspapers and take part in the games with which soldiers pass the time during convalescence.

In the next stage of his rehabilitation he proceeds to attend to his personal appearance. He gets a shave and a hair cut and has his feet treated. In a day or two more he may be seen regularly in the chapel, and then the house physician begins to take frequent notes of the convalescent's progress. His days of recreation are drawing rapidly to a close, and in a short while he again will be on his way back to the front, to the trying life in cold and dirty trenches, the nerve racking experience of bursting shells and all the other things that make up a soldier's day in the warfare of these enlightened times.

Mrs. Stanley Armstrong Was Seriously Injured in Runaway

Bit Broke and Horse Became Uncontrollable — Mrs. Armstrong Jumped and Trailing Buggy Passed Over Her—Three Ribs Fractured.

Mrs. Stanley Armstrong, North Monaghan, sustained injuries to the extent of three fractured ribs in a runaway, south of the city, on Saturday. Mr. Armstrong suffered a few scratches, but otherwise escaped unhurt.

They were returnig from the city to their home, near Whitfield's. Hitched behind their democrat was another buggy. Driving west on Cameron Street, which opens from the foot of Park Street, their horse became uncontrollable when the bit snapped in its mouth. Mr. Armstrong jumped out in an effort to grab the halter, but the horse bolted before he could grasp a line. Mr. Armstrong shouted to his wife to jump. She fell heavily on the ground and the buggy behind rolled over her. Her injuries are reported to have been three ribs badly splintered, one arm sprained or broken and other minor bruises. The horse dashed along the road and turned suddenly through Herb. Doig's gate, where it left the trailing buggy against a post. It raced up the lane and rounded a barn, against the corner of which the democrat was caught and freed. The animal finally was brought up at the river after a furious run.

Mrs. Armstrong was carried into Mr. Andrew Patterson's home, where she received first aid. A doctor was called and attended to her and, later in the afternoon, she was able to be removed to her home, her father-in-law, Mr. John Armstrong, coming in for her.

Voice of The People

Dear Sir,—There can be no doubt in the minds of those who were fortunate enough to have heard the Rev. R. L. Brydges, Secretary of the Social Service Commission of the Church of England, in St. John's Church, yesterday, as to the advantages of, if not the absolute necessity for, supervised playgrounds in this city. Let us all unite in helping the Local Council of Women in starting the first one this summer, but let us see to it that it is only the first of many. As opportunity will be given to all to help on Saturday, May 8, when each carnation bought in memory of mother, is so much towards helping the mothers of our city by helping the children.

Yours, etc.,
M.

FIRE DAMAGES LINDSAY FIRE HALL

LINDSAY, April 26.—Fire broke out in the fire hall here Friday night and considerable damage was done by smoke and water. It appears that the blaze started in the hay mow, which is situated at the rear of the hall, immediately over the horses. Luckily, however, the fire was noticed before gaining much headway, the horses were gotten out and the blaze extinguished. Origin of fire is unknown.

Police Court

The case of the local Italian, who was before Magistrate Dumble this morning for an examination as to his sanity, on information laid by his wife, was disposed of by an order of separation from his wife. He had been in the asylum before and was allowed out on parole.

Two Dollars Apiece.

There were four more bicycle cases before the Magistrate this morning and each offender was fined $2.00. Cyclists will soon be getting a little wiser and keep off the sidewalk with their wheels.

ODDFELLOWS GO TO CHURCH ON ANNIVERSARY

They Visited Murray Street Baptist Church Last Evening Where They Were Addressed by Rev. J. R. Webb

THE OATH OF DAVID

Though the weather for a while threatened to mar the pleasure of the evening, Murray Street Baptist church was filled when Rev. J. R. Webb addressed the Otonabee Lodge, Number Thirteen, and Peterborough Lodge, No. One Hundred and Eleven, of the I.O.O. F., who held church parade as a body last evening in commemoration of the 96th anniversary of the Order.

The visiting Oddfellows congregated at the Lodge rooms, corner Hunter and George Streets and were marshalled to the church, both lodges being well represented.

In preparation for the reception of the Oddfellows the officers of Murray Street Baptist church had a pamphlet upon which was printed a welcome and the I.O.O.F. emblem, also the order of service. The choir was composed of thirty-six male voices. Besides two anthems by the choir, Mr. Asa Huycke rendered a solo in his pleasing way.

The Oath of David.

Rev. J. R. Webb preached, taking for his subject, "The Oath of David." First Samuel, Chapter 20, the 17th verse, "And Jonathan caused David to swear again, because he loved him, for he loved him as he loved his own soul."

"It is hardly necessary for me to tell this body of men that Jonathan was the son of King Saul, and in the natural course of events would have succeeded to the throne. But Jonathan was to see an unusual and galling spectacle—that of another taking his place. The usual result to be expected would be that the fires of jealousy should burn in Jonathan's heart. That there could be absolutely nothing akin to friendship between Jonathan and David would seem natural.

But that was not what happened. From the hour that the skull of the giant Goliath was crushed, Jonathan loved David.

I want to talk to-night regarding the nature of the love Jonathan had for David and the demand this love made on David.

Three Kinds of Love.

There are three kinds of love. We are first told that love is neglecting oneself. Every person in the wide world who has need is our neighbour. The love of a Good Samaritan is to love everyone who needs you. There is also the love of our own. In that is included sex love—the love for wife, mother and sisters. At the source, at the root, we must confess that there is something selfish about this kind of love.

There is the love of reason. It is by an act of will determining to love, as you would determine to love the beauty of the flower— something of worth. This kind of love can show cause. Jonathan saw David kill the giant and said, "Oh how I should love to be able to do an act like David." He therefore chose to love David and did so.

Therefore the three loves should be called Friendship, Love and Truth. This last kind of love was the kind Jonathan had for David. His love was not the love of women.

Like Love of Jonathan.

What I want to say to you men as Oddfellows is that if your unity—the love you boast of as a society, is anything like the kind that Jonathan bore for David, it will demonstrate itself in three ways, namely: Discrimination, unselfishness and secrecy.

You must discriminate. You as a society also claim to have a love of this kind. There is a great danger of societies of to-day running wild in an endeavour to get membership. Your society will not be great in that way alone. The men you have must be worthy of the things of a true man. It is infinitely better that you have fifty members who are worthy than five hundred unworthy. Your oddity ought to be your excellency.

Now this matter of unselfishness. You can read for yourselves when you go home in 1st Samuel, chapter 23, verses 16 and 17. I believe it is one of the most beautiful passages in literature. It shows how Jonathan strengthened David's hand in God. Now you men are the greatest crowd in the world to go around to funerals. And, you will, go night after night and sit up with the sick. And after a death you buy the most expensive flowers and always look after the widow and children of a deceased brother. You "weep with those who weep." You are also required to "Rejoice with those who rejoice." This latter is much more difficult. It is so much easier to weep with those who weep than to rejoice with those who rejoice. The moment you become selfish, grasping men, that moment you must cease to be an Oddfellow. The moment you try to climb over your fellows, that moment you cease to be an Oddfellow.

Must be Secrecy.

In the kind of love that Jonathan and David exhibited one for the other, there must be secrecy. Jonathan's love found a way of communicating its message without the whole world knowing. Jonathan, the chiefest of Old Testament lovers was the founder of secret societies. Long before the founder of the society was born there was Oddfellowship. The secret that you and I would have together must also be pure, that will bear the scrutiny of God. And such are your secrets as Oddfellows."

GERMAN PEACE EFFORTS FUTILE UNTIL BY DEFEAT

NEW YORK, April 23.—"Germany does not want any peace terms discussed just at present," writes A. Fits-Maurice in a late issue of the Paris Figaro. "The proper time has not arrived yet, according to the organs of the German Chancellor's office, but this does not prevent the government's secret agents from making periodical attempts to find suitable mediators. We have noticed their activities ever since the battle of the Marne, and although they have been rebuffered time and again this seems not to have discouraged them. They are in evidence everywhere, now at Washington, then at Rome, then again at The Hague.

"In one place they have tried to show how advantageous a separate peace would be to France. Germany does not wish France any harm. No, indeed! It admires France, and would almost love it! In another quarter their proposition has concerned an immediate peace treaty between Russia and Austria, based on the cession of Galicia to the former Power, and the return of Bosnia and Herzegovina to Serbia.

"Still another peace arrangement has been rumoured about, the parties to it being the Allies and Turkey. The Sultan is supposed to have declared himself willing to lay down arms on condition that Turkey be allowed to retain what is left of its European possessions and that the attempt to force the Dardanelles be abandoned forthwith. The strait would henceforth be open to merchant vessels of all nations without any discrimination. As mediators the Pope and President Wilson are most frequently mentioned as the alleged sponsors of the various peace schemes.

"There is only one of its enemies with whom Germany never talks of making a separate peace, and that is England. In one of its outbursts of frankness, which have become quite frequent of late, the Cologne Zeitung uttered a few days ago the significant remark: 'Peace is impossible as long as England, which makes war at the expense of her allies' blood, refuses to agree to it.'

"It is true that England spurns any peace offers in the present situation, but the same is also true about Russia and France. It might be as well for Germany to realise that it is only in Berlin that signatures don't count, and treaties are considered mere scraps of paper. On September 4th last Great Britain, France and Russia made an agreement to carry on this war in unison to its end and to conclude peace, also in common, only after a complete victory. This treaty will hold, and it has a bearing on Austria and Turkey no less than on Germany.

"If, however, one of the Powers fighting on the German side should acknowledge defeat and cease hostile operations, the Allies will of course discontinue their attacks on it, but no peace negotiations will be opened anyway until the whole war is over. And it will be only at the conclusion of the definite treaty which is going to readjust the map of Europe that the ultimate fate of such a power will be decided, at the same time that the indemnity chargeable to each of the defeated nations will be settled, and the benefits, territorial and other, of the victorious allies will be apportioned.

"In order to reach this goal the allies are exerting all their resources in perfect unanimity and without keeping jealous count of one another. Assuredly Great Britain does not conduct this war with the blood of her allies, as the Cologne Zeitung contends. It has set up a formidable army, which has by no means said its last word yet, and which will soon be at least doubled. It is destined to take great part in the decisive battle which is impending, and the certain success of which is foreshadowed by the recent actions at Perthes and Neuve Chapelle.

"Our resolution is irrevocable. It aims at peace in Europe, and this cannot become possible, before Germany is irreparably defeated. And it will be."

The sudden change to intense heat yesterday had the effect of causing the rails to spread and put seven cars of grain off the track on the Grand Trunk Railway near Birdsall Station. The auxiliary was sent from Lindsay to the scene of the run-off and this morning the track was clear.

Yesterday was the first Sunday this season that the Grand Trunk Railway has transported grain over the local line, and the result was not very profitable. A steamer loaded with 119,000 bushels of wheat for rush trans-shipment to Montreal docked at Midland at 1 p.m. Saturday. A freight passed through this city with a load of the wheat, at about 10:00 a.m. yesterday, and at noon seven cars left the track.

Trainmaster McMillan and Supervisor Yarrow were in charge of the auxiliary which was dispatched from Lindsay.

SIXTY THOUSAND PEOPLE WITNESS ENGLISH CUP FINAL

Sheffield United in no unmistakable fashion put Chelsea in the shade at Old Trafford, Manchester, and for the third time in the club's history won the coveted English Cup. That the Bramall Lane brigade have received a just reward even the most partisan enthusiast will readily admit. Their road to the final was not without many stiff hurdles. Blackpool was their first and easiest opposition. Then in turn came Liverpool, Bradford, the titanic struggle with Oldham and Bolton Wanderers in the semi-final. Nor had Chelsea an easy journey, for they had to lower the colours of Swindon, Woolwich Arsenal, Manchester City, Newcastle and Everton. Thus both teams entered on the final struggle with the knowledge that they had behind them in this season's English Cup ties meritorious records. Sheffield United's league standing made them the favourites in the final bout, and a mint of money must have been wagered on the trophy going to Bramall Lane. There are two occasions at least when the Old Country punter likes to back his fancy, and the cup final is one of them. The "Pensioners" were not without support for their gameness when it comes to a push, and their record as cup fighters commanded respect. This was the first time for many years that the final had been played out of London, and, although war times were against anything approaching a record attendance, there were 60,000 people present at Old Trafford, Manchester United's magnificent enclosure, when the teams which represented them so well in the semi-final. The line-up was:

A DING-DONG BATTLE.

Right from the start the pace was a hot one and the play characteristic of cup-tie fights, over-eagerness on the part of the players spoiling excellent opportunities of scoring. Not one man was out to spare himself and as a really stern struggle for mastery the game will be remembered. Chelsea were the first to threaten danger. From the kick-off they made a raid on the United defence, but faulty passing negatived a bit of good work. Then it was Sheffield's opportunity, and Kitchen with a beautiful long shot caused Molyneaux to handle. It was neck or nothing, and the custodian distinguished himself. From end to end the ball was lashed at a hot pace, with Sheffield perhaps the more aggressive and dangerous. Time and again their forwards had Bettridge and Harrow in trouble, but, though a little shaky at times, the latter pair held back the attack until the game was 36 minutes old. Masterman then worked the ball cleverly down on the left, when he crossed over to Simmons. The outside right was in a splendid position to take up the pass, and he literally walked the ball past Molyneaux into the net. Sheffield was well represented among the thousands, and this initial success was greeted with cheers which might have been heard miles off. The handicap thus set Chelsea had the effect of spurring on the Southerners and near half-time they almost equalized the score, but Gough by a skilful bit of play saved a shot from Walker, the left half-back. Level exchanges followed until the "breather" came, with the score Sheffield United 1, Chelsea 0. Though in splendid condition, the players were beginning to show the effects of a hard and a fast game.

Sheffield United opened the second half with dash, but Chelsea rallied, and Walker gave Thomson a rare chance, but that player, instead of shooting, passed the ball for an opponent to clear easily. Logan, of Chelsea, was the best player on the field, robbing Fazackerley and gave his side a chance, but McNeil in trying to get the ball into the centre found his pass met by Brelsford. Chelsea struggled gamely, but met a rock-like defence. Fazackerley scored again for Sheffield 36 minutes after the restart, and five minutes later Kitchen added a third.

The Chelsea half-backs failed time and again to break up the combination of Kitchen and his colleagues and the defence of the Londoners was sorely beset. Both full backs and Molyneaux in goal played up manfully, but before the finish the trio were beaten twice and Sheffield ran out winners of the cup. The players on the losing side by no means disgraced themselves. But for Molyneaux Sheffield's tally would have been greater. He gave a splendid exhibition of goal-keeping. Logan at centre-half played the game of his life. Kitchen, Simmons and Masterman were perhaps the best men on the side of the victors. Utley at left half was marvelously accurate in his placing and his efforts had much to do with the success of his side. Final—Sheffield United 3, Chelsea 0. This is the largest score in a up final since Bury in 1903 defeated Derby County by six goals to none. Lord Derby at the close presented the cup to the captain of the victorious team.

The League Championship.

The league championship has yet to be settled, but at the moment Oldham lead Everton on the table by one point with a game in hand. Should they win their final game then the flag for 1914-15 will go to Boundary Park. On Saturday they should have accounted for Liverpool but allowed the Mersey side players to take both the honours game. The honours in the other leagues have been lost and won and next Saturday the game will cease for the time being and it will not be resumed until after the war is over. Players, as has hitherto been the custom, will not be signed until August and therefore will not receive summer pay. Aside from war reasons, but few of the clubs, even if they were willing, cannot afford to keep up with the old practice. It has been a disastrous season and more than one big club is on the verge of bankruptcy. Gate receipts this season have been reduced by half, but expenses have been practically the same as in previous years. It might not be unfair to say that the management of a few clubs are more glad than sorry that the season has come to a close.

FRED BRAMBLE WITH SHAG THIS YEAR

Manager Frank Shaughnessy of the Ottawa baseball club, has received an application from a catcher named Schneider, who figured on Shag's 1912 For Wayne Central League champions. During that year Schneider led the Central League in batting, with an average of .444, but he didn't play in many games. In 1913 Schneider's father died, and he stayed out of baseball. Last year, he started out too hard and hurt his arm, which necessitated him being out of the game for most of the year. In his letter to the local manager, Schneider states he is again in shape.

Will Suspend Players.

As the Ottawas are in need of a catcher, Schneider may be ordered to report at Chatham when the team goes into training. Manager Shaughessay has officially suspended Gero, and the rest will follow, unless they communicate their intentions to the Ottawa managers, shortly. Pitcher Fred Bramble has accepted terms with the Senators, and he will report with the rest of the hurlers when they gather at their training headquarters. It is expected that about seventeen or eighteen players will battle for positions on the Ottawa team. Shag will carry five pitchers, while the rest of the Canadian League teams intend to carry only four.—Ottawa Journal.

EARLY SUMMER SPORTS

Sunday's early warm waves drove small boys and men to the water, and a few citizens to canoes and motor boats. There have been no extensive jaunts yet, all the two bridges have been the limits of most motor runs. The number of persons on the river at the week end was not large, but many jaunted to the woods, especially Jackson's Park, many others drove along country roads and the chosen people motored far and wide, grabbing at the chance of an inviting spring day undre enjoyable conditions. The small boys declared the water awrmer than the air, but their nervous system in that respect can scarcely be regarded an accurate thermometer. And in Flander, Peterborough boys——?

Batteries—Hughes, Gowdy; Mayer, Oeschger, Killifer and Burns. Umpires—Rigler and Hart.

At Pittsburg—Cincinnati and Pittsburg played a tie here to-day 1 to 1, the game being called at 5 o'clock by agreement to allow the Pirates to catch a train for St. Louis. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Pittsburg | 1 | 4 | 0 |

Batteries—Lear, Ames and Wigno; McQuillen, Schang Umpires—Quigley and Eason.

At Brooklyn—The Dodgers beat the Giants to-day 7 to 5. The Giants' defence was almost as weak as their attack. Score:

| Chicago | 0 | 2 | 3 |
| St. Louis | 3 | 5 | 1 |

Batteries — Zabel, Bresnahan; Sallee, Snyder. Umpires—Klem and Emslie.

Cubs and Reds in a Tie Game.

Cincinnati, April 25—Chicago and Cincinnati played a brilliant fifteen inning game to-day, which was finally called on account of darkness with the score a tie—4 to 4. Benton, who started the contest for Cincinnati, was taken out of the box in the fifth inning after Chicago had made five hits and scored three runs, while Cheney, who began for Chicago, was taken out in the eighth inning. Cheney had one bad inning, the sixth, when Cincinnati made four hits, which, with a base on balls, yielded four runs. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Chicago | 4 | 10 | 0 |
| Cincinnati | 4 | 13 | 2 |

Batteries — Cheney, Stanridge and Bresnahan; Benton, Dale, Ames, Douglass and Wingo.

Cards Beat Pirates.

St. Louis, April 25—St. Louis playing errorless ball, defeated Pittsburg, to-day, by 6 to 1. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Pittsburg | 1 | 9 | 4 |
| St. Louis | 6 | 6 | 0 |

Batteries — Kantlehner, Mamaux, and Gibson; Doak and Snyder

Chicago, April 24—Benz was in fine [illegible] four hits. The Sox won the game by 4 to 1, mainly on good stick work by J. Collins and E. Collins, aided by a wild pitch and two errors. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Chicago | 4 | 8 | 3 |

Batteries—James, Perryman, Baumgartner and Agnew; Benz, Schalk. Umpires—Dineen and Nallin.

At Cleveland — The Tigers romped off with a game to-day by 6 to 0. Boland, Detroit's recruit pitcher, held the Indians safe all the way. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cleveland | 0 | 5 | 2 |

Batteries—Boland, McKee; Steen, Hagerman, Walker, O'Neill Umpires—O'Loughlin and Hildebrand.

At Boston—A medley of pitching figured in Philadelphia's 6 to 3 victory over Boston to-day. Pennock gave nine bases on balls, hit a batsman and made two wild pitches. Only Boston's lack of a punch prevented a win. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Philadelphia | 6 | 7 | 3 |
| Boston | 3 | 4 | 1 |

Batteries—Pennock, McAvoy; Leonard, Ruth, Foster, Carrigan, Thomas. Umpires—Connolly and Chill.

At New York — The Americans played a smashing good game against the Washingtons to-day, and shut them out by 4 to 0. Walter Johnson pitched, but that did not worry the Yanks any. They hit Johnson freely, and the visitors could not get hold of the flingings of Caldwell often enough to make a run. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |

| Washington | 0 | 2 | 4 |
| New York | 4 | 11 | 3 |

Batteries—Johnson, Ainsmith; Caldwell, Sweeney. Pmpires—E. Mullaney and Evans.

Tigers Beaten by Cleveland.

Cleveland, April 25 — Cleveland broke Detroit's winning streak to-day winning 3 to 1. Modton was a puzzle and blanked Detroit until the eighth, when Jacobson's double and Cobb's single resulted in a run. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cleveland | 3 | 8 | 1 |
| Detroit | 1 | 6 | 0 |

Batteries—Morton and Egan and O'Neill; Reynolds, Cavet, Boehler, Dauss and McKee.

Made it Four Straight.

Chicago, April 25—Chicago made it four straight from St. Louis to-day, when Russell struck out 11 men and won a pitchers' contest from Baumgardner, 1 to 0. Score:

Told Easily.

A witty political candidate, running in an agricultural district, after making a speech, announced that he would be glad to answer any questions that might be put to him.

A voice came from the audience.

"You seem to know a lot, sir, about a farmer's difficulties. May I ask a question about a momentous one?"

"Certainly," replied the candidate, nervously.

The candidate waited until the laughter died away. Then he replied:

"If I had anything to tell a bad egg, I think I should break it gently."

He won the place.

Few Canadian Boys Realize Their Early Baseball Dreams

The average boy with a finger mit has visions of Johnny Evers, Hans Wagner or Eddie Collins, but few of them ever qualify as good "bushers." This is an opinion of Joe Lally, an old lacrosse player and a present day missionary with a zeal for the revival of Canada's national game, lacrosse. Mr. Lally points out that as soon as a Canadian boy is able to read a newspaper he dreams big league dreams. His tendency to imitation asserts itself as soon as he is big enough to swing a bat or pitch a ball, and in his school yard or city lot games he is John Franklin Baker and Ty Cobb rolled into one or a a Matthewson and James. As he grows older his ambitions decline until he realizes that a city league is his limit. And there are few exceptional city leaguers.

Mr. Lally in his tour of the country is emphasizing the necessity of moderation in boys' participation in sports. And he confines himself for the most part to school boys. Baseball to a large extent diverts boys' attention in an undue measure from their studies. This again is largely due to the extent to which baseball is played up on the sporting pages, to the league races and the world's championship games. The boy carries a mit hitched to his braces in school, and produced it on the way to and from home, at recess and whenever he gets other opportunities. And yet in spite of this immoderate attention to the game, his dreams and ambitions vanish, with rare exceptions, after the manner of all rosy dreams.

Mr. Lally says he states the experience of most Canadian men in this respect, and when the merits of baseball are being considered he directs the attention of teachers and parents to these two points. In addition there are other considerations. For example there are the physical and mental aspects of the two games. There are no bench warmers in lacrosse. Every player shares in the operations. The game requires skill, is a lung developer, and also demands self-control. But Mr. Lally especially indicates that lacrosse tends to a moderation and not an obsession in sport, and Canadian boys have greater opportunities of ranking as capable lacrosse players than baseball produces diamond stars. Not that he holds out the idea of making sport an occupation, but rather that the game a boy undertakes should equip him physically and mentally for the greater battles of life when his playing days have passed.

Lindsay Cheese Board Asked to Join Local

Effort to Secure Strong Board in This District May Be Fruitful

President Switzer of the Peterborough Cheese Board has written the Lindsay Board asking them to amalgamate with the local body and list their cheese here. Neither of these boards are as strong as they would be if united. More buyers would be attracted and with the keener competion better prices should predominate. Peterborough is nearer the Campbellford - Belleville route for buyers and has other advantages which gives it the preference. The Lindsay Board has promised to consider the matter and it may be that they would realize the benefits which this co-operation of factories and salesmen offers. The local Board's first sale will be about May 20th or 23rd.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. D. Hughes-Charles of Port Hope is in the city to-day.

Mrs. Cavanah, London Street, will not receive to-morrow, nor again this season.

Rev. Canon Allan of Millbrook was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Coulthard over Sunday.

Mrs. T. H. Mather of Syracuse, N. Y., is visiting her father, Mr. Edmund Layfield, 580 Charlotte Street.

Mrs. F. H. Falkner is in the city through the serious illness of her sister, Mrs. W. Jackson, Dalhousie street.

Mrs. Geo. E. Sancton, who has been spending a short time with her mother, Mrs. J. W. Edwards, Brock street, Street.

The late Mr. McNaughton represented the ratepayers of the South Ward in the Town Council for several terms, and for a time when the late Mr. Cox was Mayor. Though of late years he has lived retired he has followed with interest the developments in the affairs of the city.

Born in Ireland in the year 1844 he came to Canada, and to Peterborough when 21 years of age. Forty-eight years ago he married Miss Kingdon, who survives him. There are no surviving members of the family. He was a shoe-maker by trade and for quite a number of years had a shop on Sherbrooke Street and later on Bethune Street, next to his home. Five years ago he decided to retire, and since that time has not done any work.

The funeral which took place this afternoon was largely attended. Service was conducted at the family residence by Rev. R. B. Grobb at 2 p.m., the funeral cortege leaving at 2.30 o'clock for Little Lake cemetery, where interment took place.

THE EXAMINER'S GREAT SERVICE IN WAR NEWS

The excellence of the Examiner's war service was never displayed to better advantage than on Saturday, when the big story of the Canadians' glorious fight north of Ypres was made public. Containing practically all the information in regard to the battle that appeared in the Toronto evening papers, the Examiner was on the street at 3.30 o'clock, nearly five hours before the Toronto evening dailies were available. Through its affiliation with the Toronto Daily Star, the Examiner was able to give its readers not only the official statement on the fight as issued by the London War Office, and the French and German official statements in reference to the fierce struggle, but also a descriptive story of the exploit of the Canadians by Ed. L. Keen of the United Press, an analysis of the situation as it affected the Canadians by the military critics of the Toronto Star, and as the engagement affected the war as a whole by J. W. T. Mason, military expert of the United Press, an interview with Major-Gen. Sam Hughes, information as to the personnel of the Canadian Heavy Artillery mentioned in the report, in fact all the news that was available in Canada yesterday. The Examiner's connection with the Star news service places at is disposal the splendid telegraphic and cablegram facilities of the Toronto Star, including the United Press service, enabling the Examiner to give its readers a war service that cannot be equalled by other local papers. Most of the big stories of the war have come in the evening papers and the Examiner gets them all.

LABRADOR MISSION

The bale of clothing and comforts for the Labrador Mission is to be packed and forwarded next week. Those who have been making garments for the bale are asked to let the secretary know where to send for them. Kindly address Mrs. Jas. Wood, Box 290, or telephone No. 1.

Any contributions of warm clothing or men, women or children will be most acceptable.

thought possible that Canada's field artillery, manned principally by Ontario men, had been captured or severely decimated. It now develps from the official statement that the 4.7-inch guns which figured in the despatches were behind the French lines and were accessible to the Germans. It is supposed now that the Canadian three brigades of field artillery, including from twenty-five to forty guns horsed up and were safely brought to the rear in retirement.

Germany leads the world in the number of electric furnaces for steel production, with France in second place and the United States in third.

OBITUARY

MITCHELL McCLURE.

Death occurred this morning of the late Mitchell McClure of Dummer Township. Deceased was in his eighty-second year and was well known and highly respected. His wife predeceased him some years ago. The late Mitchell McClure was born in Ireland, emigrating to this country when a young man.

The funeral will take place to-morrow at 2.30 from the deceased's late residence. Interment in Warsaw cemetery.

MRS. SAMUEL W. BARRINGER.

The death occurred in Nicholls Hospital at 3 o'clock this morning of a well known and highly respected citizen of Peterborough, in the person of Mrs. Samuel W. Barringer, wife of Mr. Samuel Barringer, London Street. The deceased, who was fifty-nine years of age, was taken suddenly ill last Monday and removed to the Hospital, where she sank rapidly. She was born in Campbellford and after her marriage lived in Hastings and Uxbridge before coming to Peterborough, a little over two years ago. She enjoyed the respect and affection of a large circle of friends in the different towns in which she resided. She is survived by her husband, four sons, Walter, John and Charles of Peterborough, and William of Toronto, two sisters, Mrs. Boyd Clute and Mrs. J. H. Pringle, and one brother, Thos. Brooks, all residing in Campbellford.

The funeral will take place on Wednesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock from the residence of her son, Walter, 143 London Street, to Little Lake cemetery.

JOHN McNAUGHTON.

Death claimed one of Peterborough's well known citizens at 5 o'clock Saturday evening in the person of Mr. John McNaughton, ex-Councillor of

Young Soldier Is Held For Bigamy

John Freeman, of Belleville, appeared in the County Judges Criminal Court before Judge Ward on a charge of abduction. Freeman, according to the evidence, was a soldier with the 3rd contingent at Port Hope, and eloped from Campbellford with Violet Parcels, of Havelock. Mrs. Parcels, Violet's mother, who has also ten other children, was not aware of her daughter's age, but her father swore that she was fifteen years of age October 8, 1914. Violet said her mother had given her to understand that she was past sixteen years of ago. She had met Freeman only the day before they eloped, not having seen him for four or five years previous. As there was no official entry of the girl's age, His Honour adjourned the case until April 28, when a family Bible, with the ages of all the Parcels children is to be produced in court. Crown Attorney Kerr stated that a more serious case of bigamy had been laid against Freeman. He and the Parcels girl were married at Port Hope in March last by Rev. A. H. Going, the marriage certificate being produced in court. Freeman's lawful wife was in the court room and is a fine looking young lady. She had a few months old child in her arms. Freeman, who had the military trousers on, never even looked towards her.—Port Hope Guide.

BRINGING UP FRESH FORCES FOR THE FRAY

Lull in Fighting Around Ypres, Due to Additional Troops Being Brought to the Battle Line—Fight May Be Resumed at Any Minute

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, April 27.—Slackening in the fighting along the jagged battle line that surrounds Ypres like a half-moon, was reported early to-day. But it was a lull due entirely to bringing up of additional troops and the battle here, in many respects, is different from any other of the war, may be resumed at any time. British forces co-operating with the Belgians and the French, have a serious attack before them. The Canadians took St. Julien, [illegible] according to General French's official report, were forced later to withdraw to a new position closer to Ypres.

Apparently the Germans have flattened the Allied salient, northeast of Ypres, have driven a wedge on their own account into the British line, and new hold the arc around Ypres, so that their heavy artillery can operate unmolested. They hold most of the villages around Ypres, and although they have been demolished the ruined buildings provide cover for guns and give the enemy a distinct advantage. While naturally all information regarding the nature of the present operations is withheld, it is understood that both General French and General Joffre have so strongly reinforced their line that it is declared utterly impossible for the Germans to make any great gains toward the sea. Reports the in circulation to-day that the Allied warships again are bombarding the Germans near Ostend, but these reports or not confirmed.

LIZERNE RECAPTURED.

LONDON, April 27.—The Belgian official communique on the war, made public by the Press Bureau at noon to-day, admits that the Germans succeeded in capturing Lizerne, but says that yesterday afternoon, following a determined charge, the Belgians reoccupied the village and drove the Germans back. The report says: "Our infantry have repelled three attacks south of Divmude. The Germans are using asphyviating gas bombs, but they have sustained very heavy losses. The enemy attached Lizerne on Sunday which fell into their hands, but we recaptured it Monday afternoon. The losses on both sides are heavy."

Gaseous Vapour Which Germans Used Contrary to Hague Convention

BOULOGNE April 27.—The gaseous vapour which the Germans used against the French divisions near Ypres last Thursday, contrary to the rules of The Hague Convention, introduces a new element into warfare. The attack of last Thursday evening was preceded by the rising of a cloud of vapour greenish grey and iridescent. That vapour settled to the ground like a swamp mist and drifted toward the French trenches on a brisk wind. Its effect on the French was a violent nausea and faintness, followed by an utter collapse. It is believed that the Germans who charged in behind the vapour met no resistance at all, the French at their front being virtually paralyzed.

Everything indicates long and thorough preparation for this attack. The work of sending out the vapour was done from the advanced German trenches. Men garbed in the dress resembling the harness of a diver and armed with retorts or generators about three feet high and connected with ordinary hose pipe turned the vapour loose toward the French lines. Some witnesses maintain that the Germans sprayed the earth before the trenches with a fluid, which being ignited, sent up the fumes. The German troops who followed up this advantage with a direct attack held inspirators in their mouths, these preventing them from being overcome by the fumes. In addition to this the Germans appear to have fired ordinary explosive shells loaded with some chemical which had a paralyzing effect on all the men in the region of the explosion. Some chemical in the composition of these shells produced violent watering of the eyes, so that the men overcome by them were practically blinded for some hours. The effect of the noxious trench gas seems to be slow in wearing away. The men come out of their violent nausea in a state of utter collapse. Some of the rescued have already died from the after-effects. How many of the men left unconscious in the trenches when the French broke died from the fumes it is impossible to say, since those trenches were at once occupied by the Germans.

This new form of attack needs for success a favourable wind. Twice in the day that followed the Germans tried trench vapour on the Canadians, who made, on the right of the French position, a stand which will be remembered as one of the heroic episodes of this war. In both cases the wind was not favourable, and the Canadians managed to stick through it. The noxious explosive bombs were, however, used continually against the Canadian forces and caused some losses.

Assault On Straits Begun

Anglo-French Troops Have Been Landed Safely on Gallipoli

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, April 27—The combined Anglo-French fleet and army have commenced their long-expected general attack on the Dardanelles. All that is known here so far of the new operations is contained in a brief report issued by the War Office, and Admiralty last evening, which simply says that in spite of serious opposition troops have been successfully landed at various points on the Gallopoli Peninsula and that their advance continues."

The attack is being made by land, the sea and the air. The allied airmen are playing an important part in the operations, in locating and dropping bombs on the Turkish guns and trenches, and directing the fire of the warships which are covering the landing of the troops. The Russian are doing their share by making demonstration against the forts at the Black Sea entrance of the Bosphorus.

"The general attack on the Dardanelles by the fleet and the army was resumed Sunday. The disembarkation of the army, covered by the fleet, began before sunrise at various points on the Gallipoli Peninsula, and in spite of serious opposition from the enemy in strong entrenchments projected by barbed wire, was completely successful. Before nightfall large forces were established on shore. The landing of the army and the advance continues."

The first information concerning the new bombardment of the Bosphorus forts by the Russian Black Sea fleet comes from Turkish sources. The enemy's version of the affair, as contained in official Constantinople communication, is as follows:

"Sunday afternoon the Russian fleet carried out a demonstration, firing for half an hour outside the range of fire of the Bosphorus forts. The Turkish gunners made no reply. The Russian bombardment was ineffectual, none of the forts being damaged."

"Our Black Sea fleet yesterday bombarded the Bosphorus forts. Great explosions were observed in one fort. A Turkish battleship in the straits made a feeble reply to our fire."

Not So Many As Supposed

Number of Canadians Killed In Action May Not Be As Great As Was First Expected

EIGHT MORE OFFICERS

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

OTTAWA, April 27.—A list of eight more Canadian officers wounded in the four days' fight near Ypres was given out for publication at the Militia Department to-night. A further casualty list of 100 or so non-commissioned officers and men has come in, and will be issued within a few hours, as soon as the relatives are notified.

No further official communication has been received in regard to the details of the fighting, but it is not believed here that the list of killed and wounded among the men will be as high as might be imagined from the number of officers killed or wounded. It is pointed out that it is the duty of the officers to lead the men, and that proportionately the casualties among officers would be high.

The officers reported wounded to-night are as follows: Capt. Bowen, 7th Battalion, formerly 9th, from 19th Edmonton Dragoons; Major Ballantyne, 4th Battalion, seriously wounded, formerly of the 20th Peel Regt.; Lieut. W. L. Ford, 7th Battalion, of Kamloops, formerly of the Rocky Mountain Rangers; Lieut. H. B. Schornschmidt, 7th Battalion, Vancouver; Lieut. E. S. Meison, 13th Battalion, formerly of the 8th Royal Highlanders, Montreal; Lieut. J. A. Dansereau, 15th Battalion, a graduate of the R.M.C., and attached to the Corps of Guides; Capt. Geo. Haggarty McLaren, 15th Battalion (place of residence unknown at time of writing), and Lieut. H. F. Hutzberg of the Engineering Corps.

There is nothing official from the War Office yet telling whether or not some of the Canadians are prisoners, but in view of the character of the fight it is considered likely that at least some of the Canadians were taken prisoners in the first rush. It will probably be some days yet before the complete list of killed, wounded and prisoners is available. The Germans apparently still hold part of the ground where the battle began, and presumably some of the wounded are now in their hands.

FOUND COMRADES BAYONETED TO DEATH

Canadians Inflicted a Most Terrible Punishment to the Enemy When They Found Themselves Surrounded On All Sides—Canadians Are Now Resting

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, April 27.—Harold Ashton, writing from Northern France to the Daily News, says:

Everywhere in Pas de Calais the praises of the Canadians are being sung. Tried in a cricible of intense heat, they have not been found wanting. The wounded who came down to the base yesterday, and there are many hundreds of them, were in high spirits, though many of them will assuredly never fight again.

They respect the German as a fighting machine pure and simpel, but over his humanity they just shrug their shoulders expressively. They tell how in the great Steenstraete fight they had to retire for a spell during the thick of the tumult, leaving their wounded there. Presently they returned, the Germans having been hurled back under a tornado of machine gun fire. They found all their wounded comrades bayoneted to death. Their revenge for this was swift and terrible at the point of their own bayonets; they only took two German prisoners alive.

The Canadians broke all conventional rules of warfare in their amazing operations. They found Germans wheeling all around them both behind and in front of their trench. Instantly they adapted themselves to the situation and fitted up a double-ended trench to meet the trouble. They were surrounded, enfiladed and hemmed in on all sides, but it did not avail the enemy. Yelling their war cry they rallied and fought back to back with infinite courage and daun, giving the Germans behind them as well as those in front of them a most terrible punishment.

CANADIANS RESTING.

LONDON, April 27—The Canadians have just been relieved, and are now resting behind the line. Hundreds of wounded are arriving at the base hospitals. Some are already here. Many are suffering from the effects of gas fumes.

The First and Fourth Ontario Battalions did exceptionally brilliant work, but suffered heavily. Non-commissioned officers filled the gaps. These units, together with two Western battalions and two Highland battalions, were in the front line, bearing the brunt of the initial German attack.

Both Toronto regiments were in reserve trenches, but had a full share in a brilliant bayonet charge. Though heavy, their casualties are not so numerous as in some other units. The division will probably rest for a week or two now.

Hero Worship Most Popular War Diversion

LONDON, April 26. — The most popular war time diversion of Britishers to-day is hero-worship.

London shopkeepers are authority for the statement that they can hardly keep up with the demand for engravures of Lord Kitchener, Admiral Sir John Jellicoe, General French and other popular idols of the present conflict.

From every shop window large and small there beams on passing populace the faces of these military heroes and it is estimated that before many moons few homes in Britain will be without the likeness of some of the men who are leading the history making legions on the sea and in the field.

Along with the demand for highly polished and well appearing pictures of England's war leaders, caricatures of German war notorieties, including the kaiser, Admiral Von Tirpitz, sultan of Turkey and others are in demand.

"The best hero sellers are Lord Kitchener and Sir John Jellicoe, but I am also selling hundreds of King Alberts, Sir John Prenches, General Joffres and Prince of Wales," said a Strand book stall proprietor to-day. "Included among the heavy purchasers are public houses and city offices, while thousands of pictures have gone from this shop alone to private homes. As many as otherwise are ordered with expensive frames."

This shopkeeper declared he was "having a time of it" buying the pictures from the wholesale dealers who have recently been unable to get adequate supplies from the manufacturers. Another popular seller in London bookstalls is a recently issued poster of a British "tommy," pipe in mouth and rifle shouldered inscribed "Come Along, Boys." This poster is one of the many issued by the government to stimulate recruiting and its appearance immediately signallized its popularity.

Among the most popular postcard sellers are those printed in the catchphrase language of the government recruiting office and pictures officers and privates who have distinguished themselves on the field.

Refuses To Compromise

NEW YORK, April 27.—New York relatives of Leo Frank applaud his refusal of a compromise in his fight for his life. Declaring with one accord that he is innocent, they plan to continue their earnest efforts with his friends to save him from the death sentence imposed on him at Atlanta, Ga., on the charge of murdering Mary Phagan.

Although Frank's lawyers have asked for a commutation of the sentence to a life term, they declare it was against the wishes of their client. He takes the stand that he is innocent and would rather be hanged unjustly than to admit his guilt even indirectly by seeking a prison term.

Frank's friends, who are keeping up their fight to save him, now are centring their efforts on plans to obtain a pardon.

"I want the whole world to know, she declared, "that I am proud of my son. If there were more boys as thoroughly fine as Lea Frank this world would be a better place to live in.

"Unless justice is a by-word in this country my son will soon be free.

"Georgia can never repay my boy or me for the cruel injustice they have cast on our name. How dared they take the word of a jellyfish judge, swayed by the mob he dared not to resist, and send an innocent man to the gallows?"

FOR THE KIDNEYS

A Guaranteed Treatment, Money Back If It Fails

Kidney diseases are more prevalent than is generally supposed, and are not always recognized as such. What was at first but a slight derangement of the kidneys often results in indigestion, rheumatism, anaemia, chronic and very painful headache, neuralgia, eye weakness, and other diseases of a most aggravating type. Therefore it is highly important and absolutely necessary that the kidneys and the urinary system be kept in an active and healthy condition.

After a thorough experience with the most successful forms of kidney treatment, we are confident that the one remedy which embraces the most desirable, safe and efficacious curative qualities, so necessary to the successful treatment and positive eradication of kidney diseases in general, is Rexall Kidney Pills.

We are so positive that Rexall Kidney Pills are unexcelled, and that they will do all we claim, that we sell them with our own personal guarantee that they shall not cost the user a cent if they should fail to give entire satisfaction.

We particularly recommend Rexall Kidney Pills, for kidney ailments that resist ordinary treatment. We believe, if taken according to directions with regularity and persistency for a reasonable length of time, they will positively remove all symptoms and effect permanent relief.

Surely we could not more strongly demonstrate our faith in Rexall Kidney Pils, and our generous guarantee should convince the most sceptical [illegible] statement except we know what we are talking about. We urge you to try Rexall Kidney Pills at our risk. Price 50c. Sold in this community only at our store.—The Rexall Store.

Many Germans Sent Over From U. S. To Fight

A London Daily Mail correspondent in France sends a remarkable interview with a so-called German-American soldier—who had been wounded and placed in a French hospital.

"You know the National German-American alliance into which all the German societies in the United States were amalgamated in 1899?" said this wounded patient, whose name is Hauptman Adolph Rappenhagen. "Well, although outwardly American, its object has been the prevention of the Americanizing of good Germans over there.

Secret Organization, D.A.S.B.

"Behind most of the societies which make up the million and three quarters of members of the National German-American alliance there are camps of the secret organization, the D. A. S. B., the Deutche-Amerikanische Soldaten Bund. I was not asked to join the 'Dasb'—that was left to my discretion—but soldier members of the alliance are driven inevitably into the secret camps. By the time I left New York on December 18, the 'Dasb' had sent back to the old country 1,000 or 2,000 reservists and German Americans.

Rappenhagen was born in Sandusky, Ohio, the son of a German who fled to the United States after taking part in the revolution of 1848. He joined the United States army in 1884 and fourteen years later went to Cuba with the expeditionary force. Later he served in the Philippines and in China. He left the army some years ago.

Powerful Political Members.

"For one reservist sent across the Atlantic," continued Rappenhagen, "in the early days of the war by consulates in the United States, more than 100 were able to reach Germany through the unsuspected influence of the 'Dasb.' Its influence was obtained through powerful political members of the alliance, who will do anything for the 'Dasb' and ask no questions. The 'Dasb' has a 'pull' everywhere in the United States, and its power stretches to the Argentine, Brazil and Chile.

"Until I joined the 'Dasb' a couple of years ago I had not realized the strength and power of the German element in the United States. The Teutonic element is double that of the Anglo-Saxon and American elements put together. Of course, in the Teutonic element one includes Scandinavians and Dutch. So I have been fighting here in France, not for the furtherance of the German empire in Europe, but for the creation of an outlet for German expansion."

"THE GRELL MYSTERY"

By Frank Froest

"Detection can never be reduced to a mathematical certainty until you level human nature, so that every person in the same set of circumstances will act in exactly the same way. Like doctors, we have to diagnose from circumstances—and even the greatest doctors are wrong at times. Specialist knowledge has often to be called in.

"When this case commenced, specialist knowledge had to be enlisted to fix our facts—and the one general difficulty which arose as always, was that we did not know which facts might prove important. As an instance, I may say that the finger-prints on the dagger were wholly misleading, and might have brought about a miscarriage of justice.

"It was necessary that we should collect every fact we could about the murder, whether great or small. That was one phase for the investigation where organisation was necessary. A man working alone would have taken months, perhaps years, in this preliminary work. Then luck favoured us. Our records—collected, of course, by organisation—contained a portrait of a man strikingly like you"—he [illegible] "and a comparison of finger-prints told us that the dead man was not you, but Harry Goldenburg.

"Previously, the time of the murder had been fixed by Professor Harding as between ten and twelve. It was our business to find out who had been with Harry Goldenburg at that time. Among those persons was the guilty one."

"I can't see how that helped you at all," said Grell, his brows bent.

"In this way, and as a negative test. The alibi is a commonplace of the criminal courts. Every person on whom clues might ultimately rest would be eliminated from the investigation if it could be proved beyond doubt that they were elsewhere at the time. You must remember, that we had not only to find the murderer, but to produce evidence that would satisfy a jury that we were right. But we worked, first of all, from such main facts as we had. You were missing. Ivan was missing. A mysterious veiled woman was missing. There was the pearl necklace that you had bought as a wedding present for Lady Eileen. There was the strange dagger used in the murder. There was the miniature of Lola on the dead man. These were the chief heads. There were scores of minor things to be dealt with.

"The matter was complicated, too, by the dead man's clothes. In the pockets, there were your personal belongings. A natural, but erroneous assumption was that they were your clothes. There is not much scope for individuality in evening dress. I confess I was misled and puzzled at first, but a little thought accorded the explanation, and, in fact, it would have been cleared up automatically in any event by the examination of the garments.

"Now, subtlety may be an admirable thing, but it can be overdone. I have never believed that, because a certain thing seems obvious, it is necessarily wrong. It was reasonably certain that one, or all of the missing persons, sad knowledge of what had happened. It was extremely probable that one of them was guilty. Our starting-point was to find them. That was where organisation came in. The miniature helped me to bluff Sir Ralph Fairfield into an admission that it was the portrait of Lola of Vienna, and I purposely showed it to some newspaper men on a pretext. One of them commented on the likeness to the Princess Petrovska, who was staying at the Hotel Palatial, and I at once telephoned to the hotel, and discovered that she was supposed to have left at ten on the evening of the murder. A reference to the St. Petersburg police gave us a few more facts about her. She became a possibility as the veiled visitor.

"The finger-prints on the dagger, although we should have adopted a different method had we known what we know now, helped us to narrow the investigation, for they apparently—and actually by luck—settled the innocence of several people who might have been suspected.

"Lady Eileen Meredith came to me with a story that seemed to implicate Sir Ralph Fairfield. There seemed just a possibility that she was right, for I could conceive jealousy might be a motive—though, of course, there was so far nothing to explain why the master of the house and his valet should take to flight. I took Sir Ralph's finger-prints by a ruse, and to me that seemed fairly satisfactory proof that he was not the man. Of course, I was then presuming that the finger-prints were those of the murderer.

"Then I received information that Ivan and a man my informant took for Goldenburg had been seen at Victoria Station on the night of the murder. I managed to find Ivan, and, by a threat, got a partly formed opinion confirmed. He knew that the [illegible] from him the pearls that were to have formed a wedding present, and let him go after taking his finger-prints. My idea was to have him watched, for I felt confident that he was in touch with his master—whom I believed to be the murderer.

"But it was not enough to follow one line. We used the fact of the striking similarity of Grell and Goldenburg to advertise for the former under the name of the latter. The mere fact of throwing the description broadcast was calculated to make any attempt to escape more difficult. Meanwhile, we were making inquiries about every one concerned in the case by co-operation of foreign police forces, and particularly with the help of Pinkertan's agency in the United States. It was all organisation, you see—the individual counted for little.

"The first attempt to communicate with Fairfield failed, not through the working of any miracle on our part, but by patient watching. I stole a note from Fairfield, which gave us something to act upon, in the East-end. Remember, the immediate object of our search was Robert Grell—not necessarily for the murderer. Do you follow?"

"I think I do," answered Grell. "You wanted, at least, an explanation from me."

"Precisely. Well, on top of that, we got a typewritten letter, informing us of the kidnapping of Waverley. That letter was important, for its contents showed that we were up against people who were absolutely reckless. We were able to trace, too, a typewriting machine as having been sold recently to a man named Israel, in Grave Street. There were finger-prints on the letter, and they corresponded to those on the dagger. As a matter of fact, I recently found out that the letter had been written on paper given by you. You had torn a half-sheet from an old letter, and I can only presume it was one that had been written to you by Lady Eileen Meredith. For they were her finger-prints.

"We paid a surprise visit to Grave Street, and although we were unable to lay our hands on any one of much importance to the investigation, we hit on the cipher with which it was intended to communcate with your friends. Now, we had already, as you know, taken every precaution to stop supplies. It was obvious that, sooner or later, money would be wanted, and we rigorously watched the persons who were likely to be applied to. Up to this point, circumstantial evidence pointed clearly to you"—he nodded towards Grell—"as the murderer.

"Something of the sort happened, for Lola went to Lady Eileen, and we were able to lay hands on her. But we failed to get her identified as the veiled woman who had visited the house in Grosvenor Gardens. I will confess that, at this time, I never had any suspicion that she was the actual murderess. We had no adequate excuse for detaining her after she handed the jewels over, with an explanation endorsed by Lady Eileen Meredith. I had taken her finger-prints, and they did not agree.

"It was palpable that the attempt to baffle us was being shrewdly organised. I tried a different way of getting information—an attack, so to speak, by the back door. I enlisted the help of a criminal. He was acting more or less blindly, but by his help we stopped the burglary affair that was planned. In the pocket of one of the men we arrested, we discovered two advertisements, worded so as to convey a cipher key without exciting suspicion. We had them inserted, and naturally arranged to keep an eye on the office—for the word to-morrow suggested one to be inserted the following day.

"Ther is always wisdom in gaining the confidence of those concerned in a case if you can. I was trying hard to establish friendly relations with Lady Eileen and Sir Ralph Fairfield. Each was difficult to handle, but with Sir Ralph I succeeded to some extent. I used him to try and learn something from her. She realized that the cipher was known, and went to the newspaper office to try and stop the insertion of the advertisement that might enable us to find Grell. Of course she failed, and we got a message which had been handed in by Petrovska. One of our men followed her.

"We deciphered the message, and it enabled us to discover your hiding-place on the river. But the business was muddled and you got away. We found the sheath of the knife used in the murder among other belongings you left behind. By the way, we understand that that dagger had belonged to Harry Goldenburg — how came it to be lying about your room?"

Grell shook his head. "That is a mistake. The dagger was mine. It is possible that he had a similar one."

"Yes, that is possible. But in the event, the point does not matter much. What was more important was, that we had driven you out of a secure hiding-place.

"Meanwhile, Pinkerton's had been hard at work on the other side of the Atlantic, and many episodes of your private life were minutely examined. Their detectives it was, too, who had discovered that Goldenburg and Petrovska had in some way been associated with you. What they found out pointed to blackmail. Here appeared an adequate motive for you to murder Goldenburg."

Grell tapped impatiently on the table, but did not interrupt. Heldon Foyle went on.

"We could not blinde ourselves to the fact that you were not the type of man who would commit an ordinary crime under stress of temptation. But homicide is in a class by itself. You might have committed murder. Indeed, there was the strongest possible assumption that you had done so.

"You will observe that there was nothing miraculous in what we did. One step led to another in natural sequence. On the barge, we got the letter that led to the tracing of Ivan at the gambling-house in Smike Street. We knew your finances were cramped. We were, as opportunity offered, limiting your helpers, so that we might force you to show yourself.

"That is what happened. You went to Sir Ralph Fairfield, and succeeded in dodging our men—so far. It was Fairfield's servant who gave you away. He came to Scotland Yard, and, in my absence, was taken away by Sir Ralph. When I returned, I arranged to get Sir Ralph out of his chambers for a time, sufficient to allow me a talk with his servant. I then bluffed some idea of your mission out of Sir Ralph. I found you had been refused money.

"You had already applied once to Lady Eileen Meredith for money. There seemed a chance that, in your desperate state, you might do so again. I went to Berkeley Square. Lady Eileen had gone out. I got into her sitting-room on pretext of waiting for her. On the fire were fragments of a note from you, and I was able to make clear several words.

"That made me determined to examine her desk. I found a cheque-book, but the used counterfoils were not in her handwriting, nor did the amounts and the people to whom they were payable seem those that would be found in a personal cheque-book of hers. I searched the blotting-pad, and was able to make out the words Burghley and £200. The assumption I drew from that was startling enough, but it was still more startling to discover on the blotting-pad a finger-print which, as far as my recollection went, corresponded with those on the dagger.

"Up to that moment, the possibility that Lady Eileen might be the guilty person had not occurred to me. But now a rearrangement of the circumstances, apart from the finger-print, began to throw a new light on the matter. It would explain much if you, Mr. Grell, were shielding Lady Eileen.

"I could think of no motive, however, and resolved to hold the matter over for the time being. Even if I had good cause for my suspicion, it was still essential to find you. You obviously held the key to the mystery.

"We found out that you had met Lady Eileen, and driven to Kingston—not by shadowing, for our man failed there—but by getting hold of the cabman who drove you. With the aid of the provincial police, we were able to trace you to Dalehurst Grange. I feared that you might be on the alert for any step taken by Mr. Green, and so acted by myself in getting into the house.

"Your manner, when I confronted you, impressed me favourably. It was not that of a guilty man. But I could not let an opinion bias me, for, in spite of everything, you might still have been guilty. There was a great possibility that you were an accessory.

"One thing struck me. Your walk was uncommonly like that of Harry Goldenburg. Now, people may be uncommonly like each other in face and figure and be unrelated. But I have noticed often that little peculiarities of gait run through a family. I had thought you might be a relative of Goldenburg's, but not till that moment did I become certain of it. You will remember that I put some questions that might have seemed offensive. I wanted you to lose your temper—it was conceivable that you might blurt out something.

"I found it very difficult to place [illegible] thought the matter over and formed an hypothesis. I put several questions to you later, and found that a woman had visited your house with Goldenburg. That was Lola Petrovska. Now, if she was not the veiled woman who came later, who was? For the sake of my theory, I put her as Lady Eileen.

"Very well. Lola and Goldenburg had visited you together. But she had assisted you since the murder, and she was hardly likely to do that if she was on friendly terms with the blackmailer and knew you had killed him. So it came to my mind that you might have used her in an attempt to get the compromising letters. And then it occurred as a remote possibility that she might, after all, be the guilty person, but, to assume that, it was necessary to explain away the finger-prints—for they were not hers.

"All this led to the supposition that the dagger had been handled by some one after the crime. That person must have been Lady Eileen—therefore she must have been the veiled woman—you see?

"But this was supposition, which a single fresh fact would destroy. I held on to you, and Lola walked into our trap. An interview with Ivan cleared up some of the vague points in the story, and confirmed my theory—you will understand that I was ready to drop it the moment it failed to fit the facts. Indeed, to make assurance more sure, I sent a story out to the papers, which I felt sure would convey to Lady Eileen Meredith that you were in great peril—and which, if she was guilty, might induce her to confess to save you. It had an effect rather different to that which I intended.

"Your clumsy attempts to take the guilt on yourself made me more sure than ever of your innocence. This morning we laid a trap for Lola. She was suddenly aroused out of her sleep, and I surprised her into what amounted to an admission of guilt."

Grell rose from his chair with extended hand. "I rather believe that I have made a fool of myself," he said. "You have done a great deal more than you adopt credit for. I cannot thank you now, but later—I suppose I am at liberty now. I must see Ei—Lady Eileen at once."

"You will have to give evidence at the inquest," said Thornton. "That is all. The step this woman has taken will save us all a great deal of trouble. Of course, what Mr. Foyle has told you is entirely confidential."

"Of course."

"Lady Eileen is here, if you would care to see her now," said Foyle. "Will you come with me?"

Grell followed the superintendent along the corridor. At the door of his own room, Heldon Foyle stopped and knocked.

"Here you are," he said.

Robert Grell opened the door.

THE END.

THOUGHT SHE COULD NOT LIVE

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Unionville, Mo.—"I suffered from a female trouble and I got so weak that I could hardly walk across the floor without holding on to something. I had nervous spells and my fingers would cramp and my face would draw, and I could not speak, nor sleep to do any good, had no appetite, and everyone thought I would not live. Some one advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I had taken so much medicine and my doctor said he could do me no good so I told my husband he might get me a bottle and I would try it. By the time I had taken it I felt better. I continued its use, and now I am well and strong.

"I have always recommended your medicine ever since I was so wonderfully benefitted by it and I hope this letter will be the means of saving some other poor woman from suffering."—Mrs. Martha Seavey, Box 1144, Unionville, Missouri.

The makers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have thousands of such letters as that above—they tell the truth, else they could not have been obtained for love or money. This medicine is no stranger—it has stood the test for years.

If there are any complications you do not understand write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Fair Treatment For the Railways

In the past, Canada has learned many lessons of importance from the experience of her nearest neighbour, the United States. While the Canadian people are always disposed to act with independence, they are not short-sighted enough to reject what may be learned with profit from another country very similar in nature to this one.

A few weeks ago, the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States handed out a decision granting to the railway companies in certain sections the right to increase their rates. A few years ago any such decision would have aroused a storm of protest. The recent decision was accepted, generally, in such good part as to suggest that the public is being educated in economic truths.

President Woodrow Wilson, who is one of the leading economists of his day, sometimes hands out hints to the public along with his messages. One of these he handed out when he first mentioned the subject of freight rate increases. He said the prosperity of the country is bound up with the prosperity of the railways. He suggested that the public, in hurting the railways, were hurting themselves. Justice for the railways was justice for the public also.

Big industries, like some big men, are sometimes not in popular favour with the general public. They are expected to give evidence of generosity to all and sundry; otherwise, they are roundly condemned. They lend themselves to the critical uses of cartooning. Such has been the experience of the United States. But the United States is learning what an expensive habit railway-baiting is, and is quick to profit by the lesson. In the last election, the remarkable gains of the Republican party, once shot and apparently killed because it was believed to be a friend of the "big interests," has been interpreted by all disinterested political experts in the United States as sufficient evidence that the nagging of business just because nagging was popular and not because business was guilty of sin, had begun to pall on the American public.

When an application by the Canadian railway companies for permission to increase their freight rates is before the Board of Railway Commissioners, it is timely to point out that the great danger both the railways and the public have to fear is popular prejudice against the railways. Let such prejudice take form, and it will be extremely hard for justice to be done, with the result that the railways will suffer and the country with them.—From Montreal Evening News.

Escape From The Perils of Belgium

About fifty English women and children arrived in Rotterdam from Belgium, en route for home. I met the train at the Dutch frontier, and found the happiest party of travellers I have seen since the war began. All had been in Belgium since the beginning of hostilities, and despite the trying experiences through which they had passed, were in the best of spirits, full of excitement, and laughing gaily at the prospect of getting home once more.

One lady, a South African, told me how in the early days of the war, she helped to nurse the Belgian wounded. After the occupation by the Germans she remained doing similar duty in the hospital.

"I was sorry that I was only able to help one English soldier in Brussels — a soldier named Askew, who had been wounded at La Bassee. He has lost an arm, but is doing well. After the battle of Eppeghem I went out on the field to help collect the wounded.

"A German officer asked if I was sympathetic with the Belgians, and when I replied in the affirmative he inquired, 'How many barbarians have you killed?' Lately they would not let us Britishers nurse, saying, 'You find out too much.'"

Miss Bond, of Adlington, Lancashire, told me with pride how she had worn all the time in Brussels an enamel badge of the Union Jack.

An Unpleasant Hint.

"When I went for my passport a German officer, pointing to it, asked, 'What's that thing?' I told him, 'My national colours.' He said, "Take the thing off!' Of course I did not do so. The officer said, 'You should not wear it.' The others are wearing Swedish, Danish, or American colours. I replied. I am going to wear the colours of my own country. He scowled and said. 'Your own countrymen dare not fly their own colours on their ships.' I told him to his face that I knew that was a lie."

When the women left Brussels there were several German officers at the station. One officer, as the train was leaving the platform, shouted out, 'Au revoir, until we see you when we march through.' Another officer's farewell was, 'You think you are going to London, but you may be blown sky-high while crossing the Channel.'

Amongst the party two nuns brought from a convent three Canadian girls, whose friends cannot be traced, who are destitute. They are coming to England in the hope of finding a home. When the women arrived at Exchen, on the frontier, they tumbled out on the platform, cheering and shouting, "No more Germans! Free at last!"

Miss Mackenzie is from Chelsea, and has been unable to communicate with her friends since August. Mrs. Atkinson and her three children are also of London. She has been forcibly seperated from her husband, who she believes has been sent as a prisoner to Germany.

A French lady in the party is returning under very sad circumstances. Her husband was wounded early in the war and sent to England. She was going there to join him, but now hears that he has died from his wounds.

TOURIST CAMP FOR JASPER PARK

MONTREAL, April 27. — The Grand Trunk Pacific has received so many enquiries respecting the accommodation to be obtained at Jasper Park, through which the trains are now running, that it has determined to create a tent city in the heart of the park, which is 5,000 square miles in extent and comprises the heart of the Rockies, lakes, rivers, water falls and mountains.

The ultimate thought is to build a great modern hotel in the park; but in the meantime there will be summer tents for sleeping, marquees, in which meals will be served; while the Federal Government has provided shelter houses. All this is temporary. It is believed that the park (situated at the southwest corner of Alberta, close to Mount Robson) will attract hundreds of tourists this year, while it will be the playground for thousands in the near future.

American Held In Italy Writes History of Life

ROME, April 27.—Locked in one of the wards of the Como Insane Asylum, among a number of weaklings, harmless maniacs and idiots, whose inherent, rambling conversations he is compelled to listen to for hours at the time, Porter Charlton is now writing, at the behest of medical experts, the history of his life, several chapters of which will be devoted to the love romance that culminated in his marriage to Mary Scott, the vaudeville artiste whom he afterwards murdered at Scarboro after a brief honeymoon.

Two years spent in an uncomfortable Italian detention house have greatly changed the American young man, and,—to say that he has lost some of the confidence he reposed in Italian justice, is to state only part of the truth. The Charlton judicial investigation will remain memorable in the annals of criminal trials in Italy. With the exception of the great Camorra trial, and one or two other cases in which the accused persons were numerous and reticent, there is no record of a judicial investigation of a crime in which the accused was self-confessed that took almost two years.

The Italian authorities plead that the delay was unavoidable, as the investigation extended to the United States, but the defense lawyers argue back that, plausible as this argument may seem, yet the fact that the request of the Como authorities for the examination of the witnesses residing in America took four months to reach Rome, proves beyond a doubt that something is the matter with the Italian red tape has a unique place among those of every other civilized nation.

Friends Fail to Aid.

At the same time Charlton is not pleased with the way his American friends have dealt with him. Some of the witnesses who appeared before the New Jersey authorities while he was a prisoner at Trenton and testified in his behalf refused to appear before the Italian Consul in New York and repeat what they had formerly stated on the ground that having climbed several steps up the social ladder, they no longer wished to be mixed with the case.

The news that in order to execute a proper examination into his mental condition a residence of several months in the insane asylum was absolutely indispensable, was the last if not the hardest, blow struck at the young man ever since his arrest in New York in 1910.

A month among the human wrecks interned in the Italian insane asylum is all a man who is supposed to have affected at some time or other of his life with herotic mania and acute dysomania can endure without being driven to distraction. Yet, as the plea in his case will be insanity, Dr. Valtoris, who, at the request of Judge Palmieri, Charlton's family lawyer, is examining Charlton, convinced the young man to submit to the new ordeal as the final disposition of his case is not far off, the trial having been set for June next.

Dr. Valtori also suggested that in the case of Charlton a detailed autobiography would best serve the purpose of furnishing the medical experts with the element and facts on which to base a reliable diagnosis of the mental disorder or disorders from which the young man was suffering at the time he first met Mary Scott and in the tragic night at Moltrasio when he struck her dead with a piece of lead pipe, and after folding her still warm body in two, threw it into the lake.

History of His Romance.

As soon as the autobiography is completed the judicial authorities will give a copy of it to the prosecution experts who likewise will read it and report their conclusion to the jury. Charlton has been instructed to put down everything connected with his early life, metion every incident, no matter how insignificant, and devote at length on his relation with the beautiful actress before and after their marriage.

The trial is being looked forward to with the greatest interest, both in local and scientific circles, as it presents features of such an unusual character as to constitute a unique case. From the evidence gathered by the police there appears that the relations between Charlton and his wife must have been of a morbid nature, while many obscure points still require clearing up by pathological experts. Probably from some of the sessions of the court the public will be excluded owing to the extremely delicate nature of the proceedings.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, April 24.—Bullish cables and European buying of both old and new crop deliveries forced the wheat market today steadily up grade. There was a strong close at 1 5-8c to 2¾c above last night. Corn gained 2-8c to ⅜c net, and oats ⅛c to 1 1-8c. In provisions the outcome was unchanged to 5c down.

Peas—No. 2, $1.80.

Rye—No. 2, $1.13 to $1.14.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, April 24.—New high records in wheat prices were made today. May opened at $1.62¾ to $1.62⅝, the previous high point being $1.62 on April 19, and went as high as $1.64⅝, a new record for the market. Trading in futures was light, few offerings coming out. Cash demand was fair. Oats were active. There was practically nothing doing in barley or flax.

Wheat futures, 2c to 2⅝c up; oats, ⅝c up, and flax, ½c to ⅝c up.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, April 24.—A feature of the grain trade today was the demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat. Ocean grain room from this port for August-September shipment was good and an active business has been done during the week, with engagements amounting to 2,000,000 bushels at rates ranging from 8s to 8s 9d per quarter to all ports. Coarse grains steady. Spring wheat flour in good demand at advanced prices. Millfeed is steady under a fair demand. Butter is weak and prices have scored a further decline of 1c per pound, owing to the increased offerings and limited demand.

JAPANESE MASS 300,000 TROOPS

SHANGHAI, April 27.—Dr. Hioki, Japanese Minister to Pekin, has handed to the Chinese Foreign Minister a note insisting on the unconditional acceptance of the last proposals transmitted from Tokio, according to a despatch received from Pekin. Notice was given that further delay would result in the breaking off of negotiations.

Instead of the 120,000 trops which Japan was reported to have sent to China, it is now reported that 300,000 have been massed on Shantung Peninsula in anticipation of war with China.

Russia Has the Greatest and Most Wonderful Aeroplane

The greatest of all aeroplanes is the Russian "Sikorsky." In comparison with an ordinary aeroplane it is as a "Vaterland" to a yacht. With its curtained "cabin," many-windowed 'control house," searchlight, powerful engines, steering wheels, projecting bow, "corridor," chairs and tables for the convenience of passengers—with all these it seems rather the invention of an imaginative story teller than the actual product of a machine shop.

Even some of the writers of romances of aerial navigation have not ventured to put so many passengers upon one of their imaginary airships as this Russian aeroplane has carried in actual and long-sustained flight. On one occasion, at least, it is known to have had seventeen men go on board during a flight that lasted a quarter of an hour, and that might have been prolonged at pleasure.

For Black Sea Fleet.

It is no wonder that the Czar of Russia takes a personal pride and a keen, practical interest in so fine an achievement of one of his own subjects. It is not surprising, either, that both the Russian navy and the Russian army are to be furnished with several huge aeroplanes of the Sikorsky type, modified to meet the special needs of the two services. Fitted with floats, some of these machines have been ordered to be added to the Black Sea fleet as soon as they can be built and equipped.

These gigantic air craft are fitted with four German Daimler engines. Sitting behind glass windows, and at least as well protected against the inclemency of the weather as is a chauffeur in a first-class automobile, the pilot of a Sikorsky aeroplane handles his steering wheel and guides his craft with all the ease and comfort of the steersman of an ocean liner. In the experiments Mr. Sikorsky, the inventor, is himself, seen handling the wheel.

Roaring Sound Terrifies.

The machine is of the biplane type and has double control with two steering wheels, while each of the four engines drives a separate propeller.

The motion of the huge machine through the air is said to be very smooth and graceful, while the passengers, being inclosed on all sides, and able to walk about, even though the space is restricted, feel as if they were in the cabin of a flying boat. But the roaring sound made by the four powerful engines as the airship forges ahead, high above the earth, is described as nothing less than terrifying.

The success of the Sikorsky aeroplane is the best answer that could be given to those who persist in asserting that aerial craft can never be made large and powerful enough to enter into serious competition with the old means of locomotion on land and water.

Open Season For Straw Hats Was Announced Yesterday

Billie McIlmoyle gets the rainbow badge for the first straw hat of the season. Being a member of the leisure class he can defy convention. Hence, without any doubts or hesitancy, he sallied forth this morning with an anti-Vellum straw, a signal to the hatters that the siege was raised and they could trot out their wares as soon as they liked. Several posmen paraded with "straws" this morning, but they can scarcely qualify as regular civilians and are, consequently, debarred from the prize, although their wisdom should be recognized. Mr. McIlmoyle had no misgivings and forgot about his summer big, heavy overcoat, almost full length. The former began to feel that he was really rushing the season but Nat Stabler assured him that the gentleman had walked all the way from North Bay where the snow was still deep on the ground, and overcoats were more than decorative. As a result of the McIlmoyle dictum the more timid of us may be encouraged to call out the reserve straws and be comfortable under the humid heat.

Say Heiress Is Not the Child

ST. LOUIS, April 17.—Attorneys for Mrs. Lois Campbell Burkham, legatee of half of the $16,000,000 estate left by James Campbell, are making every effort to combat the positive testimony presented in court here that Mrs. Burkham is not the real daughter of Mr. Campbell. The testimony was given by Mrs. Edith Blair, who declared the heiress was the daughter of Mrs. Anna Elizabeth Hicks, now the wife of an English duke. Mrs. Blair is the stepmother of the former Mrs. Hicks.

Although the parentage of Mrs. Burkham was brought into question before at the contest on the Campbell will, the direct statements made by Mrs. Blair caused a sensation owing to the financial and social prominence of the parties involved.

Mrs. Blair told the Court that her stepdaughter married Oscar Hicks in 1892. She said that later Hicks disappeared. After Hicks' disappearance, Mrs. Blair said that Mr. Campbell began to show Mrs. Hicks devoted attention.

Came to New York.

Later Mrs. Hicks went to New York and Mrs. Blair testified that she subsequently became known as Mrs. F. A. Campbell, and that she gave her address as the Grand Union Hotel, New York.

Mrs. Blair testified that when she came to St. Louis Mr. Campbell called upon her and told her that he wanted her to keep quiet about Miss Lois.

"He said she was the daughter of my stepdaughter," testified Mrs. Blair, "but she always would remain as Mrs. Campbell's daughter. He said he would assist me financially."

On March 29 the Circuit Court here held that Mrs. Lois Ann Campbell Burkham was the daughter of the late James Campbell, whose will left his $16,000,000 estate in trust for St. Louis University to be given that institution after the death of his widow and daughter.

Relatives Contest Will.

The Campbell will was contested by children of the testator's brother. John P. Campbell, on the ground that Mrs. Burkham was a foundling and not a legal daughter.

The action to break the will was first begun here on October 3, 1914, after Mr. Campbell's will had been filed in the Probate Court.

It was alleged that Mr. Campbell had been unduly influenced in making his will. The Mercantile Trust Company, that was named in the will as administrator of the estate, got certified copies of the birth and baptism records, which showed that Lois Ann Campbell was born to Mr. and Mrs. James Campbell at the Union Square Hotel, New York, on March 17, 1868.

GLASS OF SALTS CLEANS KIDNEYS

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You, Drink Lots of Water

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

KIDNEY DISEASE CURED SWORN STATEMENT

Of Mr. Wesley Maxwell, Who Gratefully Gives All Credit to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

It is one thing to make big claims for a medicine and quite another thing to produce irrefutable evidence that it actually cures in serious cases.

We prefer to let the cured ones speak for themselves, and that is why you find in almost every newspaper the report of someone who has been cured by the use of Dr. Chase's medicines. To-day we present the sworn statement of Mr. Wesley Maxwell. When a man goes to this trouble in expressing his gratitude there can be no question of the benefit he has received. Mr. Wesley Maxwell, Orangeville, Ont., writes: "I have been using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I must tell you that before I started using them I could only make water with the greatest difficulty, and had many severe pains in the back. I am completely cured now by the use of these pills. Before that I used a lot of doctors' medicine without any benefit that I could see. I am thankful for being cured, and can recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills very highly."

SWORN STATEMENT.

"This is to certify that I, Wesley Maxwell, of the Township of Caledon, was cured of kidney trouble by taking Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

"Wesley Maxwell."

This statement is also endorsed by the Rev. Geo. W. Robinson, who is Mr. Maxwell's pastor.

This cure will interest a great many people who are suffering as Mr. Maxwell was with kidney and urinary troubles. It will only cost you a quarter to buy a box of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and put this medicine to the test. We are sure that you will be thankful to the writer for describing his cure to you. For sale at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

THE MILITARY INFLUENCE.

By Anabel Worthington.

Braid, buttons and standing collars closing in the front exemplify the military, which is perhaps the strongest influence in clothes to-day. In character the style is severe, but it permits a good deal of trimming and touches of bright color, so the result is on the whole rather gay. The dress illustrated combines the prominent features of the military with excellent effect. The material is a midnight blue serge, with black satin collar and cuffs and black soutache braiding. The buttons are dull gray metal. A gay hat with a cockade would be the appropriate finish and add the color feature.

The waist is of simple construction, very easy to make, with plain one piece sleeves. If one does not care to preserve the military character of the gown the neck may be cut out in a point and the sleeves made shorter. At high waist line a little circular peplum, very effective in cut, is set on. There are three gores in the skirt, the back gore laid in a plait at each side, giving a box plait effect. The skirt is moderately wide at lower edge, measuring about 2½ yards.

Gabardine would be a good material for this design, or covert cloth among the wool fabrics. In wash materials linen, ratine, cotton corduroy or piqué might be used, with cotton braid and pearl or material buttons. Cotton frogs would help to carry out the military idea. For medium size 5½ yards of 36-inch material would be required. The pattern, No. 7,133, comes in sizes from 34 to 44 inches bust measure.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

ANOTHER WOMAN TELLS

How Vinol Made Her Strong

Beallsville, Ohio.—"I wish all nervous, weak, run-down women could have Vinol. I was so run-down, weak and nervous I could not sleep. Everything I ate hurt me, and the medicine I had taken did me no good. I decided to try Vinol, and before long I could eat anything I wanted and could sleep all night. Now I am well and strong, and in better health than I have been for years." —Mrs. ANNA MILLHOUR, Beallsville, Ohio.

We guarantee Vinol for all run-down, weak and debilitated conditions.

Clergymen's Daughters

Reviewing the ranks of famous women, particularly in the world of literature, one is surprised to find how many of them were daughters of clergymen of whom the world would probably have heard nothing had it not been for the brilliant achievements of their children.

Jane Austen first saw the light in the vicarage of Stevenson, in Hampshire, in 1775; Mrs. Gaskell, who is famous as the author of "Cranford" was the daughter of William Stevenson, who preached at Doblane, and her intimate friend, Charlotte Bronte, who, with her sisters, Emily and Anne, took the world by storm, were the daughters of Patrick Bronte whose church and rectory at Haworth are yearly the Mecca of thousands of admirers of these immortal women.

Mrs. Lynn Linton, the Victorian novelist; John Strange Winter, the creator of the army; and Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, who, with "Uncle Tom's Cabin," struck the death-blow of the slave trade, were all daughters of preachers.

A Missionary's Daughter.

Among the more modern brilliant women are Olive Schreiner, who was the daughter of a missionary and born in Basutoland, where her father worked, and Mrs. Florence Barclay, who, as it were, sprang into fame in a night with "The Rosary," and who is the daughter of the Rev. Samuel Charlesworth, rector of Limpsfield, Surrey, and later of Limehouse. Mrs. Barclay had written simply for "the joy of the job," says "The Woman at Home," and it was her sister, Mrs. Ballington Booth, who induced her to send her "stuff" to a publisher.

Jane and Mary Findlater, whose individual and collaborated novels, "The Green Graves of Balgowrie," "The Rose of Joy," etc. have brought them wealth and fame are the daughters of the late Rev. [illegible] Lochearnhead, and their lifelong friend, Mrs. Nigel Robertson, the author of "The Gallant Quaker," is the daughter of the late Rev. Thos. Hill, Dundee; while Mrs. Billington the president of the Women's Journalists' Society, is the daughter of a Devonshire clergyman, by whom she was educated.

It is scarcely surprising perhaps, that many of our famous hymns were written by daughters of the vicarage. The best-known wedding hymn, "O Perfect Love," owes its origin to Mrs. Gerald Gurney, daughter of Dr. Bloomfield, Bishop of London, who penned it in a very short time at the laughing request of her sister, who asked her what was the good of having a poet for a sister if she could not write a special hymn for her wedding. The hymn was set to music by Sir Joseph Barnby, and sung for the first time publicly at the marriage of Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll. Frances Ridley Havergal, too, the famous hymn-writer, was the daughter of a clergyman.

Freighter Sunk In North Sea.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The freighter Ruth was sunk by a German submarine on Wednesday when about 100 miles east of Muy Island, in the North Sea. The crew was rescued, and was landed at Leith, Scotland.

The Ruth left Leith with a cargo of coal for Gothenburg, Capt. Andersen, her skipper who is a Swede, reports that the first torpedo discharged by the submarine missed its mark. The second torpedo struck the Ruth amidships, wrecking the vessel.

The sixteen members of the crew were all Swedes. They drifted about in small boats for twelve hours before being picked up.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES

The wheel of a wagon heavily loaded with gravel passed over the body of Cornelius Nash, three years, 305½ Pape avenue, Toronto, killing the child instantly, yesterday.

Rene De Saint Marceaux, the sculptor, died Friday night at his home in Paris at the age of 70 years. Many of his works are famous and occupy places of honor in Paris.

The Government elevator at Port Colborne has commenced operations for the present season and large quantities of grain are arriving daily from Chicago, Duluth and Fort William.

Wives of the striking laborers at Stamford, Conn., to the number of fifty or more, armed with broom sticks, pick handles and salt, had a hand to hand fight with the police on Saturday.

Guglielmo Marconi, head of the Marconi wireless system, and now an Italian senator, arrived in New York yesterday from Liverpool. He said he came to inspect the Marconi wireless stations.

A revolver and a mask were found at New Orleans near the spot where Harry Lester was arrested after the express car of a passenger train was robbed and Peter Marcey, the baggage master, was shot and seriously wounded.

Six officers and 19 members of the crew of the British submarine E-15 were taken to Constantinople Saturday. The officers and three of the wounded rode in carriages, while the other men walked. They are the first British prisoners in Constantinople.

Knew Arithmetic Anyhow.

A teacher of music desired to impress the pupils with the meaning of the signs "f" and "ff" in a song they were about to sing. After explaining that "f" meant forte he said, "Now, children, if 'f' means forte, what does 'ff' mean?"

Silence reigned for a moment, and then he was astonished to hear a bright little fellow shout, "Eighty!"

Austrian Women Rebel.

ROME, April. 26. — Despatches from Trieste, telegraphed from the frontier, daily are growing more grave to their reports of the situation there. One-tenth of the population are serving under the colors, including men 50 years of age. The calling of men of this age into the army has caused a rebellion among the women of the city.

Thousands Starving.

WASHINGTON, April 26. — Many are starving to death, others are committing suicide to escape the terrors of hunger, and thousands are on the verge of starvation in the Province of Szechuan, China, because of famine, according to advices to the State Department received yesterday from the American consulate at Chungking.

Danish Steamer Captured.

Heartless Hoax.

"My wife gave a reception yesterday."

"Did you attend?"

"Yes. I played a practical joke on her I got in line where she was receiving and before she knew it she was smiling and saying she was glad to see me—for the first time in three years."—Washington Star.

Too Well Done.

"Yes, dear," continued the newly made husband as he gazed despondingly at the steak that was broiled almost to a crisp, "you are very charming, and you do several things uncommonly well, but you don't know how to cook a steak."

pologized with a becoming penitent air, "you said yourself that it was very well done."

It is scarcely necessary to add that the cyclone was averted.

Thick, Glossy Hair Free From Dandruff

Girls! Try it! Your hair gets soft, fluffy and luxuriant at once

If you care for heavy hair, that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff; you cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast.

If your hair has been neglected and is thin, faded, dry, scraggy or too oily get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine at any drug store or toilet counter; apply a little as directed and ten minutes after you will say this was the best investment you ever made.

We sincerely believe, regardless of everything else advertised, that if you desire soft, lustrous, beautiful hair and lots of it—no dandruff—no itching scalp and no more falling hair—you must use Knowlton's Danderine. If eventually—why not now?

Officers To Be Made To Resign.

ERIE, Pa., April 26.—T. V. O'Connor, president of the International Longshoremen's Union, arrived here Saturday to investigate the dynamite explosion which caused the death last Wednesday of Michael Leoroff, former secretary of the local union, and the injury of thirteen other persons.

"All the officers of the Erie Union will have to resign," said O'Connor, "and if they refuse we will find a way to put them out. Russians who belong to Russian societies are barred from our organization, and those who have gained admission here will have to get out."

Twenty-three persons are still held by the police in connection with the explosion.

Recognition For Officers.

LONDON, April 26.—The Admiralty has decided to send letters of thanks of vellum to officers and men displaying daring and resource in the handling of the ships of the fleet. The letters will be equivalent to the well-known "mention in the despatches" in the army.

Such letters have thus far been sent to six officers concerned in the sinking of the U-8 and U-12. The latter, says the Admiralty, was sunk off the Forth. This is the first information issued of the locality of the sinking of the boat.

Humid Rhine Valley.

The climate of the Rhine valley is warmer than in most other parts of Germany and is consequently more favorable than any other regions for the cultivation of tobacco, grapes and corn. The humidity of the valley is excessive, sunshine is quite limited, and the annual precipitation ranges from twenty-four to thirty-two inches.

She Settles It.

"Mr. and Mrs. Twobble never have any difficulty in settling their differences."

"A remarkable couple. How do they manage?"

"After the quarrel has proceeded as far as Mrs. Twobble thinks it ought to she says, 'That will do!' and it does."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Nature Always Has Own Way

"I've been feeling pretty punk for the last few months and my wife has been teasing me to see a doctor," said the man with the tired lines in his face. "So yesterday I called on a physician whose reputation and price are both high, and told him to look me over.

"He didn't seem in a terrible hurry to do the looking, but sat and chatted with me awhile. Later, I realized that he got a whole lot of information out of me painlessly. After that he asked me some leading questions and finally told me to strip to my waist. He listened to my heart action and did some other stunts, and by the time he'd finished with me I felt that I had been nicely turned inside out and back again and had no secrets whatsoever.

"Meanwhile he wrote down things, from time to time, in a ledgerlike-looking book on his desk.

"'Well, doctor,' I finally asked him, 'what's the verdict?'

"'It's been a long time since you consulted a physician,' he casually remarked.

"'Not since I was a kid and my mother told me to stick out my tongue for the doctor to see,' I informed him.

"'Every human being, no matter how well he thinks he is, should be gone over by a reputable physician once a year,' he then told me. 'In our artificial mode of city life, we get into all kinds of bad habits which we don't know enough to halt or modify before they do us actual harm.

"'We are more careful of our machinery, of our animals, or inantimate things upon which we place a value, than we are of that most intricate of creations, the human body.'

"'I began to get scared,' said the man who had consulted the doctor.

"'You don't need to break it gently, doctor,' I told him. 'What's the matter with me?'

"'Nothing, except that you have been taking the easiest way to make yourself cranky, anaemic, dyspeptic old man,' he began.

"'You've gone from an overheated house into a crowded street car and from there into an overheated office, every day this winter, and probably every winter for the last ten years. You've sat on your haunches until 1 p.m. or thereabouts, when you hustled back to squat on your haunches again for several hours. Then you repeat the morning programme on the way home, where you eat without any appetite and then hustle out to some evening entertainment, where you spend more hours in a close, overheated room.

"'I'll wager,' he went on that even now, when the spring is sending the sap up in every living thing you don't consider the possibility of making a backyard garden, and that you wouldn't put your hand to lawn mower for anything! You haven't a real healthy fad that'll get you outdoors and work your body muscles. You belong to that class of city people who think they have to hustle from morning till night to make the money to pay living expenses in a flat in a good neighbourhood, dress your wife as well as the woman next door, send your children to a fashionable dancing school, keep your life insurance paid up and put on as good a front as anybody else. Hey?'

"He exploded that last at me like a shot out of a gun," commended the man with the tired lines. "It made me jump.

"'Well,' said I, 'what else can I do? We've got to live at the present cost and rate of living. I can't afford to throw up my job and go in for the simple life. I've tried to save some money, but something always turns up so I can't. So just fix me up some medicine so I can keep up the grind,' I told him.

"'That's what they all want,' muttered the doctor to himself. "Then—

"'I'm not going to give you any medicine. This is my prescription: Move into the country, even if you have to get up an hour earlier in the morning. Cut down living expenses. Get acquainted with nature. Use your body man! Nail the windows open in your house. Get the gardening fad—it'll cut down living expenses. Drink three quarts of pure water every day. Come back to me in six months.'

"And by heck," said the man with the tired lines in his face, "I'm going to do it! It cost me $5 to get that advice, and I've got to get something out of it!"—E. K. Wooley.

Playing Truth With Variations

Advertising is now recognized as the Fine Art of Handling Truth With Variations, but we have not, so far as I can learn, reached any final conclusion as to what Truth itself is.

Edward Everett Hale was once asked what he thought of Christianity, and he replied:

"I do not know, sir. It has never been tried."

We shall never know truth until we try it.

What is truth, anyhow?

When I come to discuss truth as applied to advertising, I am getting my fingers pretty close to the buzz-saw, but it seems to me the time is here to say something on the subject that has the indications of being so.

Another Ford Joke.

I always considered the Ford car to be an automobile, but I find quite a few owners of Packards and Pierce Arrows who dispute this.

They say all owners of Ford cars are Christian Scientists—they simply believe they own automobiles.

And who is wise enough to decide whether the Christian Scientist or the orthodox doctor is right about medicines?

One says medicines don't cure sick people and the other says they do.

They are as far apart as Germany and England.

The horrible war in Europe shows us how difficult it is to distinguish the truth.

What is a black falsehood to England is a beautiful truth to Germany, and you can twist these words around and get exactly the same problem.

Truth Confused With Opinion.

Nobody knows—we simply confuse truth with opinion, although it is evident to us all that they are as different as gentleman and gent.

The wise man is the man who knows that he does not know—and admits it.

I think the moment is here to insist that all of us be given the right to express our own opinions, and the right to a reasonable degree of freedom in telling through advertising what we think about the things we sell.

I do not believe any censor knows as much about the products I help to promote as I know about them.

I think every business in every line should stand or fall on its individual showing, and I further think there is nothing quite so altogether contemptible and vicious as the idea of putting a smallpox flag on every house in a town because there is a case of smallpox in one of the houses.

It's all wrong, as I see the truth, to visit the sins of a few men upon everybody else in the same business.

Before calling a man a liar or fraud, it is well to investigate with infinite care, or the accuser may acquire the title he gives the accused.

Truth is something to be lived—not merely discussed.

It cannot be caught and crystallized into a formula.

When we live the truth, we will cease to talk about it.

I have come to the belief that any person who openly affects to be better than his neighbours is sure to be a knave.

Give me the right to express a fair degree of enthusiasm about the products I am identified with—let me have opinions and print them—and I promise a like degree of freedom to you.

Honesty Needs No Horn.

Let us be honest, but let's forget it once in awhile and not talk about it all the time.

Any man who can't be honest without blowing about it needs to have his morals renovated and manicured.

There is nothing in honesty to brag about or to shout about through a megaphone.

It is the duty of every man to be honest, and he ought to be honest as a matter of course.

If you are honest, keep still about it and the people will find it out, and your reputation will advance in proportion as you are modest about your virtues.

Settling Problems Offhand.

Let us all have opinions—the more the better—and let us get away from the narrow idea that a committee can go into session and settle off-hand the problems that have perplexed mankind ever since the fig-leaf went out of fashion and Eve had to hustle around to see what new styles the department stores were offering.

Let us also slough off the idea that a lot of advertisers are second-story men working the public through the newspapers, because that isn't so.

There are a great many decent folks in the world besides ourselves.

Let us quit advertising the bad side of advertising and advertise the good side for awhile.

Two-thirds of our troubles are imaginary.

BRITISH TAKE OFFENSIVE AND MAKE PROGRESS NEAR YPRES

French Troops Have Recaptured Hetsas', East of the Yser Canal and Have Also Wrested Hartsmans Weilerkopp Away From the Germans Again---The Enemy Only Holding the Height For Part of One Day.

ALL GERMAN ATTACKS ARE REPULSED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 27.—The Reuterings report from Sir John Monash, Sir John French, commander of the British forces at the front, under to-day's date was given out here to-day:

"Yesterday all the German attacks northeast of Ypres were repulsed.

"In the afternoon our troops took the offensive and made progress near St. Julien and to the west of that place.

"In the course of yesterday's fighting our artillery took full advantage of several opportunities for inflicting severe casualties on the enemy.

"On the remainder of the front there is nothing to report. In addition to the destruction of Courtral Junction mentioned in the communique last night our airmen yesterday bombarded successfully stations and junctions at the following places: Tourcong, Rouzaix, Ingelmunster, Staden, Langemarck, Thielt and Roulers."

THE BERLIN STATEMENT.

BERLIN, via wireless, April 27.—The admission that the Germans have been compelled to evacuate Lizerne, although they still claim to hold the bridge heads on the left bank of the canal, and the denial that the French have retaken Hartsmann's Weilerkopf in Alsace, were the features of to-day's official German statement. Important British assaults in the north are also declared to have failed with very heavy losses to the enemy.

BRITISH VICTORY CERTAIN.

Special Cable:

LONDON, April 27.—There is no disguising the belief of the British officers that this second battle of Ypres, like the first fought on October 31, last, will end in a complete victory for the British.

Officials point out that whereas last Octoxer General French fought a battle along these lines to check the German drive towara the sea and won at that time, he had no reserves. The battle now in progress finds the British commander-in-chief with enormous reserves available, and the whole strength of Great Britain supporting his person, and his authority in his stand to turn back the Teutonic tide.

And because of the vastly greater strength of his forces the officials declare that complete victory is even more certain than it seem in the troublous days of last autumn.

THEY'RE FROM MISSOURI.

Salonika, April 27.—The Turkish committee on union and progress has given the Germans an opportunity to demonstrate that the Allies can be defeated. Advices from Constantinople say that at the conference of the heads of the Union relolutions were adopted agreeing to await the military events for the present. It was agreed, however, reports reaching here say, that if with German aid the Dardanelles cannot be held, the committee will favour making separate peace at any price with the Treple Entente.

GERMANY'S NAVAL ACTIVITY.

COPENHAGEN, April 27.—All Scandinavian ships en route from Britain to the Swedish ports on the Baltic were ordered to make for the nearest convenient port and remain there for orders. Germany is trying to stop all traffic between Sweden and England. This is the purpose of the activity of the German war fleet.

A GREAT ARTILLERY DUEL

PARIS, April 27.—The latest reports this afternoon from the front say that the engagement along the whole battle lines from the Champagne country to the sea has resolved itself into a tremendous artillery duel, in which thousands of guns are flinging millions of dollars worth of shells at the opposing forces. It is probably the greatest artillery duel in the history of the world, each side trying to weaken the other. In the neighborhood of Ypres the famous French "seventy-fives" batteries silenced an opposing German battery and at other points the superiority of this weapon over the Germans was emphasized by the results. In the meantime the infantry, both German and allied, is resting or preparing new positions for further terrific conflicts.

HARTMANSWEILERKOPF RETTKEN

PARIS, April 27.—The official statement given out to-day by the French war office reads: "There is nothing to add to our communication of last night except that we htve consolidated our positions, and continue to make progress to the north of Ypres (Belgium) and also on the heights of the eMuse." The summit of Hartuansweilerkops, which was taken from us yesterday morning was recaptured by our troops on the evening of the same day. We also took some prisoners.

YPRES IN FLAMES

LONDON, April 27.—Ypres is in flames, the Germans having thrown a hail of incendiary bombs into the town. The fighting continues most hotly all along this front, says the same correspondent.

$1,500 IS CLAIMED

Case Before Judge Huycke To-day is Aftermath of Explosion in Which Youngster was Injured

MUCH EVIDENCE HEARD

A suit for $1,500.00 damages is being tried before His Honour Judge Huycke to-day in which Mr. William White and Master Wesley White, his son, of Campbellford, are the plaintiffs, and Messrs. Thomas Samson, Luman Jordan and William Jordan, also of Campbellford, are the defendants. It is the aftermath of an accident from explosives, which it is alleged Wesley White on May 17, 1914, while playing on the property of one of the defendants, found and set off, losing the main part of his right hand and receiving injuries to his face. The defendants, it is alleged were responsible for the explosive in question being in the place the youngster found it.

Mr. G. N. Gordon is representing the plaintiffs, and Mr. I. Humphries, of Campbellford, the defendants.

Mother of the Boy.

Mrs. William White, mother of Wesley White, the seven-year-old boy, who was hurt, was the first witness called by Mr. Gordon. They have been living in Campbellford. Her husband has been ill and she has been working out herself.

On the day of the accident she was away from home, in the country visiting. She has heard blasting taking place around there at night. Her home was adjoining that of Mr. Jordan's.

Mr. Luman Jordan is the son of Mr. William Jordan, who was the owner of the property, and Mr. and Mrs. White were tenants.

The ground back of the Jordan house was rocky.

She had heard blasting during the week before the accident, as late as the Friday evening before. It was being done at the back of the White lot, and only a little piece from Mr. Jordan, Jr.'s house. The purpose of the blasting was to make post holes with a view to erecting a fence. She had seen the Jordans measuring for the fence. The neighbours were all frightened at the blasting, but after the blasting had taken place often passed over the ground again.

No Dividing Line.

There were a number of children in the neighbourhood. The children often played about this rocky section of land. There was no line to show where one property started and the other ended. Her boy, Wesley, often played there with other children, and there were no posts or lines to indicate the boundary line.

Those she saw doing the blasting were Thomas White, Jim Graham, William and Luman Jordan and Mr. Sampson.

Yard Was Playground.

The place where the blasting was done was like a playground for the children.

When Mrs. White returned from a visit on the Sunday afternoon of the accident, she found her son, Wesley, in bad shape. He had lost the main part of his right hand, and his face was marked. The two first fingers and thumb of the hand were gone, and the stubs of the two fingers have become webbed together. She had him in the hospital for three weeks. The lad could not see when she took him to the hospital. The doctor's account was $80.00, and a specialist besides. The hospital charges were 70c per day.

No Use of Hand.

At present Wesley had no use of his hand. He could not pick anything up with it. The marks on his face were deep.

A Bright Boy.

The boy was bright and intelligent and inclined to play with the other boys. He had been going to school for a couple of years. His health was impaired for quite a while after the

PETERBORO' BOYS WITH THE 48TH HIGHLANDERS

Report That Battalion Has Been Captured Will Cause Anxiety in a Number of Peterboro' Homes

CAPT. CORY A PRISONER

The report that the 15th Battalion, including the 48th Highlanders of Toronto, has been practically all captured by the Germans in the fighting at Laugemarck, is given some colour by the cablegram received, stating that Captain Robert Cory of the 48th Highlanders is a prisoner of war. The news will bring anxiety to homes in the city as a number of Peterborough boys were with the 48th Highlanders. Among them may be mentioned Lieut. Vivian Fessenden, son of Mr. Cortez Fessenden of the Collegiate Institute staff, Pte. John Miller, brother of Mrs. M. Pappas, Pte. Spence, brother of Sanitary Inspector C. A. G. Spence, and Sergt. Harvey Stannton of Benson Avenue. Pte. Wilbert McIntosh, son of Mr. Angus McIntosh, is in the same battalion, as are a number of other Peterborough men. Lieut. Gordon Campbell of the Bank of Toronto, is a lieutenant with the 48th, but has been in training in England. He is very likely one of the draft of new officers that have been sent over to France to replace those who have fallen.

Capt. Cory a Prisoner.

TORONTO, April 27.—A private official cable received here this morning states that Captain Robert Cory, of the fifteenth battalian, commanded by Lieu.-Col. John A. Currie, M.P., is a prisoner of war in Germany. This renews the anxiety here concerning this regiment, which was composed very largely of the 48th Highlanders, Toronto, but included also the contingents from the 2nd Dragoons, St. Catharines and Niagara Falls, the 13th and 20th Dragoons, of Quebec, the 31st Grey Regiment and the 77th Algonquin Rifles. Rumours prevalent in Ottawa and Toronto last night were to the effect that the whole regiment were captured. Colonel Currie invariably cabled his wife here after every engagement, but since the Langemarck battle, nothing has been received from him. One or two casualties from this battalion were in the official list last night, but this does not prove or disprove anything concerning the fate of the battalion as a whole.

Cobourg Police After Suspect

Chief Ruse, of Cobourg, writes to the Chief of Police, in reference to one Albert Arthur Taylor, for whom he holds a warrant for obtaining goods under false pretences.

He is a young fellow about 22 years of age; 5 ft. 8 in. tall; weight about 128 pounds; clean shaven; fair complexion; fair hair. When he left Cobourg he was wearing a red serge coat, blue trousers, red stripe blue peak cap. May discard uniform, and would be wearing a brand new pair of greenish brown tweeds, lined with white and a black stripe. Tattoo above the wrist, left arm.

NO NEWS YET OF LOCAL MEN AT THE FRONT

Comfort For Relatives of Artillerymen in Assurance That Canadian Batteries Were in Reserve—To-night's Drill

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

Still no news has arrived of the casualties among the Peterborough boys in the first Canadian contingent. To the friends of the local artillerymen with the division there will be comfort in the cablegram from London printed on this page, which brings the news that the Canadian artillery were in reserve during the big fight and their losses are trivial. In regard to the local infantrymen there is hope also in the same message which indicates that the 2nd Battalion was not one of those which suffered the worst.

There promises to be a record attendance at the drill of the 57th Regiment to-night. The story of the Canadians' exploits at the front have aroused a still more vivid interest in military affairs and this will be reflected in the turnout to-night.

B Company of the 57th Regiment will devote a lot of attention to shooting this year. Arrangemnts have been made for the use of the Rosa Cadet rifles and the shooting will be under the direction of Corp. W. H. Moore who has been on the Bisley team several years. All young men interested in shooting are invited to enlist in B Company and to join to-night.

To-day's List Of Casualties

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, April 27.— The following further list of casualties was issued to-day:

4th Battalion—Major Edward Thomas Kelly, wounded and missing, Dunville, Ont.

Capt. Reginald Arthur Sinclair Allen, Fifth Battalion, seriously wounded, Kamloops, B.C.

Judgment in Favour of Cordova Mines

Hughes v. Cordova Mines.— J. M. Clark, K.C., W. H. Price and C. M. Garvey, for defendants, moved to stay sale of their real estate and property under a consent judgment for immediate sale, dated 30th April, 1913. W. N. Tilley for plaintiff.

Judgment: Order may go staying all proceedings under the judgment on security being given against waste, for use and occupation, and for payment of estimated deficiency of $15,000, or, in alternative, on payment into court of overdue interest and evidence to the satisfaction of Clerk in Chambers that the taxes and insurance have been paid; this within one week. The applicants must undertake to bring their motion for leave to appeal before the Judicial Committee in July. The costs will be to plaintiffs in any event of the appeal.

LOSSES AMONG ARTILLERY WERE ONLY TRIVIAL

Canadian Gunners Were In Reserve When Big Fight Broke Out and the Canadian Infantry Was Supported by French Artillery — Second Battalion Also Escaped Comparatively Lightly

Special Cable to The Examiner:

TORONTO, ONT., April 27. — In view of the anxiety caused by the German claim of having taken Canadian guns, and of the absence of reports concerning the Canadian field artillery division of 18 guns, which led to the fear that they had met with disaster, The Toronto Star cabled to its London correspondent for information, and to-day he replied as follows:

"My information indicates that the chief losses were among the first, third, fourth, thirteenth, fourteenth and sixteenth battalions. The Canadian artillery losses are trivial, our artillery being in reserve, and the French artillery supporting our lines."

"One pathetic incident is that Lieut. Arthur Ryerson came across a body on the field which he recognized as his own brother, Captain George Ryerson. While trying to pick up the body he himself was wounded by shrapnel."

The same special cable quotes this letter: "One is proud to be a Canadian in these days," writes one doctor from the front. "The poor wounded fellows just break down and hold your hand and weep, they are so pleased to know they have done so well."

The first, third and fourth battalions are all Ontario battalions.

RECRUITING STIMULATED

OTTAWA, April 27.—General Hughes stated this morning that recruiting throughout the Dominion has been tremendously stimulated by the recent news of the Canadians' gallant work. He is receiving hourly telegrams from officers and men everywhere asking how soon they can get to the front to help fill the gaps.

THE DARDANELLES

ATHENS, April 27.—Advices from Salonika say that the allied troops have been landed at various points on the Gulf of Saros, and that the bambardment of the Dardanelles fortifications continues both from the Gulf of Saros and inside the Straits.

ALLIES OCCUPY ENOS.

ATHENS, April 27.—It is reported here that the allies occupied Enos during Sunday, the Turks withdarwing into the interior. The inhabitants have been ordered to leave within 24 hours.

Still After The Sanitary Inspector

Claiming That as a Civic Official He Should Reside in the City

Mayor Buller states that the city is in receipt of another communication from the Trades and Labour Council respecting the residential status of Sanitary Inspector Spence. He intimated that the matter would be dealt with at an early date. There is considerable speculation as to what stand the Aldermen will take when it comes to a show down. On more than one occasion it has been stated that prospective candidates for municipal honours in 1916 will do nothing that will jeopardize their standing with the labour interests. As matters stand, Sanitary Inspector Spence has purchased a home on the outskirts of the town, and it is hardly likely that he will sacrifice his interests even if he is forced to resign. He holds a professional position at wages that are lower than the average labourer receives. When seen to-day Mr. Spence declined to discuss the matter, preferring to wait until it is aired before the City Council.

Whatever happens the Council will hardly overlook the fact that Sanitary Inspector Spence is not the only city official who resides outside the city, although he may be the lowest paid and has more justification than a number of officials who are in a similar position as regards residential status.

News From Artillery Boys

Next Move Will Be a Little More Exciting Writes Edward Simmons on April 13th

Mr. Chas. Simmons has received a letter from his son, Edward, who is at the front with the 24th Field Battery detachment, in which he says:

Just a few lines to let you know that I am well. We have been in action and are out for a rest for a few days. We had only one casualty. I do not know how long we will be here, but I think our next move will be a little more exciting. The Canadians get a great name here in the artillery. All the boys are feeling fine and anxious for Berlin. We have a fair time here. We had a field day of sports yesterday.

NO REHEARSAL.

As many of the Peterborough Choral Society are assisting at the concert in All Saints' Hall to-night, there will be no rehearsal to-night in the Collegiate Hall. The practice will be held next week, on Tuesday.

THREE PERMITS ISSUED

Three building permits have been issued this week, representing a total valuation of $800. A permit has been granted to Dr. Moir, 186 Brock street. He proposes to make a number of alterations to his residence. The cost is estimated at $600.

Mr. J. A. Gibbs has been granted permission to make alterations to a house at 287 Simcoe Street, at a cost of $100.

Miss J. McCarthy has taken out a permit for alterations to a house at 282 Simcoe street at an estimated cost of $120.

ACTION CALLED FOR.

The magnificent manner in which the Canadian soldiers in France have upheld the tradition of British arms, and placed the name of Canada in the fierce white light of world publicity, adds another to the long list of things we owe them. Our duty to support them in the field, to heal their wounds and contribute to their comfort, becomes intensified; and another duty is created by the circumstances. Sad gaps have been made in the ranks, and these have to be filled. We must not only hurry forward our other contingents, but we must see all the cause for which we are fighting is won, and the spirit of discord subdued. We, in Canada, must do our share in this fight for peace; and we can only do it worthily if we keep our hands unshackled, our spirits free, from distracting influences; if we keep an united front.

And we should all be stimulated to increased exertions. We need not waste our sorrow in unavailing regrets; we can and must do something at home. There are not only vacant places in the ranks of our little Canadian army to be filled, but there are ghastly wounds to be healed, and much suffering to be mitigated. When we read of Canadians laying down their lives for Canada and the Empire, we feel our helplessness, our inability to do our share. We need not do so. There is something we can do. We can help in the Red Cross work. We can help provide comforts for the soldiers. We can contribute to the purchase or provision of hospital supplies. The best cure for grief is action—taking an interest in something. The depression we feel over the loss of our fellow-citizens on the battlefield, can be lightened by occupation in doing something for them. The women who are knitting their hearts into socks for the soldiers, are doing a part of the work of waging war. And in a score of other ways we can assuage our grief by doing work for our soldiers.

WAR PURCHASE COMMISSION.

The appointment by the Borden Government, of a commission to purchase war supplies, is at once a confession and a concession. It is a confession that the work of purchasing war supplies by the Government has been, to speak most mildly, unsatisfactory. It is a concession to public opinion that demands honesty, in, above all things, the expenditure of the money we devote to arming, equipping, and maintaining the efficiency of our soldiers. While they are dying and bleeding in the gallant fight they are making; while they are honestly giving the best that is in them, we should give our best. Not a dollar should be squandered, that is intended to help in the battle. We are as truly fighting battles as our soldiers under arms in France; they don't waste a lead bullet; and we mustn't waste a silver bullet. Lloyd George says that the silver bullet is the one that is to end this war. We must in Canada see, as we have not done so far, that every silver bullet we supply so ungrudgingly and generously has its billet, in the form of adequate value for the war supplies we purchase. The personnel of the commission is—E. A. Kemp, M.P., East Toronto, chairman; H. Laporte, Montreal, and Geo. F. Galt, Winnipeg. It is conceded that this commission has the necessary business qualifications; but these are the less important considerations. The middlemen and looters who helped squander the government money had highly developed business qualities—in their own interests. Fearlessly honest application of business ability is the desirable qualification in a commission. It is to be assumed that the commission will not be furnished with a copy of the patronage list which was the foundation of the scandals in the purchase of war supplies. It is also assumed that the Government does not surrender its responsibility to the commission, whose function will be, or should be, purely executive—to carry out the policy, and do the work which the responsible Government authorities require to be done. The commission has a tremendous responsibility—to wisely expend and get value for the 100 million war appropriation voted last session. A sum like that is a mighty big sum for Canada to spend; not that we grudge it, but 100 millions don't grow on every bush. We, the people of Canada, gladly give the money, but we demand that we, that Canada, our Canadian army, and the cause it represents, shall get full value for the money expended.

WE MUST WORK FOR PEACE.

Every day in the churches; every hour from millions of anxious hearts go up prayers for peace—for the cessation of war. To gain this peace we should pray for another peace, for political peace, for continued cessation of party strife. To end the war and bring peace needs the cooperation, the undivided concentration of the forces of the allied powers. To help in this we need in Canada, the united cooperation of all our Canadian people. We don't want any party politics stirred up; we need to have the party label cancelled entirely while we are working at home to help on this war. It would be just as unreasonable and suicidal for the allied armies to knock off fighting to discuss party politics as it would be for Canadians to knock off the work of helping end the war and care for wounded soldiers, for the sake of entering into a party struggle such as a general election would mean; especially when such an election can be legally postponed for a year and a half. We are proud of the work our Canadians are doing in the battlefield. They don't think of anything but the stern work before them, of the discharge of their duty. We stay-at-home Canadians are called upon to show as high a sense of duty. We have enough to do to fulfill the duty of the hour, without having our energies wasted, our duty shelved by the distracting frivolities of an utterly unnecessary and untimely campaign of party politics. We may pray for peace; but we must work for peace; we must first fight for peace. There

GERMAN MURDERERS ENJOYING THEMSELVES

The latest exploits of the gallant German navy reveal more clearly perhaps than any previous incidents, the nature of this war, the character of the Germans, and the spirit in which they are waging it. The treatment of non-combatants in Belgium is being repeated at sea and deliberately, with enjoyment.—London Times.

ITALY AND HER CHANCE

There can be no doubt of the readiness of Italy to strike a blow for her interests. German diplomacy was again singularly inept in believing that it could persuade Austria to abandon the Trentino peacefully, or that, if she did, Italy would forego her further ambitions for such a price. While Prince von Buelow's negotiations have only helped to embitter the relations of Germany and Austria, Italy has been getting her army and navy ready "to the last button." A fleet of Italian dreadnoughts has put to sea, troops have been massed on the northern frontier and the reserves have been called to the colours, hundreds of them from this city and this vicinity. Such preparations would be meaningless if Italy did not intend at this critical juncture to intervene in the conflict.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT

"It is not a pleasure to put forward these things. But when we sit in this House and listen to the fulminations of gentlemen opposite there comes a time when patience ceases to be a virtue." I have given (the Liberals) a taste of their own medicine." These words are from the closing sentences of a speech delivered by Hon. Dr. Roche, Minister of the Interior, in which certain charges were preferred against Hon. Frank Oliver, former Minister of the Interior. They are rather remarkable words to come from a Cabinet Minister. The public is given to understand that if the Liberals had closed their eyes to transactions which Premier Borden himself has denounced in language of becoming gravity, the material collected by Commissioner Ferguson might not have been used. If the words of the Hon. Dr. Roche are to be interpreted in the most natural way they mean neither more nor less than that the public money expended for the purpose of enabling Commissioner Ferguson to carry on his investigations was expended, not for the purpose of promoting honesty and morality, but to prevent the exposure of wrong-doing.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN'S DUTY.

In the face of the news from Europe to-day, how pitiful does the work of the rake-off patriots, as recently revealed at Ottawa, look! And how doubly despicable does the plotting appear of the flag-flopping patriots who see in the present circumstances nothing but a possible opportunity to rush the people off their feet in a khaki election! Premier Borden has a plain duty to the people of this country to perform at the present moment. That duty is to declare that Canada, in this hour of her trial and her grief, shall not be plunged into the bitter conflict of a party strife for the purpose of gratifying those sections of the Conservative party who are clamouring for a general election. Sir Robert Borden's silence in face of the activity of the Hon. Robert Rogers' section of the Cabinet has already had a most painful effect upon the country. Let him now boldly declare, not only that no election shall be sprung at the present juncture, but that there shall be no election this year. We make bold to say that the approval of the country will instantly be manifest. A cessation of party strife would naturally follow; indeed as far as the Liberals were concerned the political truce would never have been broken had it not been for the machinations of a section of the Conservative party in endeavouring to steal a march on them by forcing an election. The question now is—will Sir Robert Borden rise to the heights that are demanded of the country's Premier at this juncture?—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, April 26.—Rumors that Italy was about to declare war on America and on Germany as well, led to a good deal of selling today in the wheat market here. As a result prices closed unsettled at a range varying from 2½c decline to ¼c advance, compared with Saturday night. Corn suffered a net loss of 1¾c to 1⅞c, oats of ⅝c to ⅞c, and provisions 7½c to 17½c.

Increased country offerings put pressure on corn. The market was also handicapped by the slowness of cash demand. Argentine crop damage news appeared to have lost influence. Oats were governed chiefly by the action of corn. Rains also favored the bears.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, April 26.—Wheat made new high records again today. Oats advanced ¼c on both months, and flax advanced ⅛c to 1⅜c. Cash trade, is reported almost at a standstill, with no new export business.

Inspections, 232, against 287 last year. Wheat futures closed 1¾c to 1¾c higher; cash, ½c to ⅝c lower; oats, ⅛c to ⅜c lower, and flax closed ⅛c higher.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, April 26.—There was little demand from foreign buyers for American new crop winter wheat, and only a few bids were received for Manitoba grades, which were generally out of line. Demand for coarse grains for domestic account continues slow. Flour is firm. Millfeed in fair demand. Butter slow and weaker. Cheese quiet and easy. Eggs firm.

No Peace With England

LONDON, April 27.—According to a wireless despatch from Berlin, the Nord Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung prints the following:

"We learn from different sides that rumours regarding preparations for peace negotiations are being circulated in town and country. As a further detail it is stated that preparatory steps for the establishment of a special peace with England, based on certain English wishes and demands, are being conducted or will be taken.

"No person competent to form an opinion can possibly think of abandoning a war situation favourable for Germany in favour of the premature conclusion of peace with any one of her enemies."

Temperance Measures

Good Spirits, Light Beers and Short Hours Are British Program

LONDON, April 27.—The British Cabinet gave further consideration to the drink problem yesterday, and to-day the intention is that Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George shall submit the Government's liquor proposals to the House of Commons on Wednesday.

Although the Cabinet's plans are not finally adjusted, it can be authoritatively stated that the following are the main heads under which the Government intends to take actions:

(1) Prohibition of the sale of immature spirits.

(2) Encouragement of the brewing of lighter beers.

(3) Special public house restrictions in the munitions area.

(4) Reduced hours of sale generally.

(5) Compensation for interests affected.

It is understood to-day that there may be a new regulation prohibiting the sale of immature spirits under a certain age and restricting the manufacture of the heavier types of beers. Good spirits and light beers will be encouraged.

DAMAGES REDUCED IN FAMOUS CASE

MONTREAL, April 27.—The court of appeals has rendered judgment in the somewhat famous case of Chinquy and Begin, reducing the damages from $3,000 to $200. This case was brought by Mrs. Joseph Morin, wife of Prof. Morin of McGill University, against the proprietor of La Croix, a weekly paper, for libel. Mrs. Morin was a daughter of the late Rev. Mr. Chinquy and claimed that a certain article which appeared in La Croix assailing the validity of her father's marriage —he had at one time been a Catholic priest —insulted and defamed the memory of her father and mother and conveyed the idea that she was thus an illegitimate child. The case was first tried before Mr. Justice Greenshields in June, 1912.

Sale of Business

Tenders will be received by the undersigned up to the 22nd day of May, 1915, for the sale in two separate parcels, of the stock-in-trade and fixtures and business carried on by the late William Braund of Brockville, in the Towns of Lindsay and Smiths Falls, known as "Braund's Fair." Such stock consists of small wares and house furnishings.

Tenders will be received for the Lindsay and Smith's Falls stocks separately, at a rate to be named in such tender, on the dollar of inventory value of such stock and fixtures. The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted. Send written tenders to the undersigned.

GERMANS RAISE FUNDS FOR SCHEME TO INVADE BRITAIN

LONDON, April 27.—Two movements, apparently diverse in character, but in really correlated, recently sprang into existence in Germany, writes a neutral correspondent who has been on a business trip to Germany. These movements seem to have the same aim in view, namely, to bring about a speedy close of the war. Both parties are working silently; no documents referring to their projects are allowed out of the hands of their trusted agents; everybody is approached personally, so that no information may leak out either through treachery or by an incautious act. No official name is attached to either of the movements, though the government is cognisant of every step taken by the chief promoters and has sanctioned everything that has been done.

This secrecy enables the authorities to keep doors open for escape in the event of failure, and the government would then be able to declare that everything done had been done without its knowledge and would not, had the facts been known, have obtained under any circumstances its permission. The first movement refers to the collection of funds, already said to have reached several million marks, to be presented as a special reward to the army which has been assembled and is now ready to invade Great Britain. This event is to take place when the British fleet has been substantially reduced by means of submarine attacks and losses which the forcing of the Dardenelles—an impossibility in the opinion of the German authorities—must entail.

The invasion plan is reported to have been worked out in such detail that German railway officials have been appointed to take charge of the railway stations in the particular district where a landing is contemplated, and every one of these new station masters knows exactly where to go. The [illegible] scheme is a strong favourite with a large percentage of the German public, who have still not a shadow of doubt the empire's final victory.

The contributions to the fund vary the groschen—about one and a half cents — which the school children bring to the schoolmaster, up to the more substantial amounts collected by women by organized house to house canvassing. Children, schoolmasters and women, of course, play a prominent part in the many war propaganda which still are very much to the front in all grades of society in Germany.

The other movement is patronized by the more serious part of the German nation, that part which knows where the shoe pinches. As it costs nothing to join this movement—an attraction never despised at any time in Germany—it has met with much support, especially among business men, house and land owners, artisans these chiefly among the building trade, and last, but not least, a certain section of the social democrats, the so-called "rebels". The promoters' endeavour is concentrated upon obtaining signatures to a petition which it is intended to present to the Kaiser having for its object the stopping of the war at the earliest possible moment, as the financial losses suffered have been almost ruinous.

Admiration of the glorious victories achieved by the army is expressed in no measured phrasing, and while the signatories have not the slightest doubt of Germany's ability to crush the countries' enemies, they nevertheless venture to suggest to the Kaiser's advisers that peace on reasonable terms would be exceedingly welcome to them.

In well-informed circles it is said that the Kaiser is behind this stop-the-war movement; indeed, that he has even expressed guarded approval of the scheme. In any case, however, it wil be interesting to watch developments in connection with this matter.

Wellington Never Saw Napoleon

King Edward VII. as a boy worshipped Wellington, who lived for eleven years after the birth of the future King. One morning the young Prince of Wales displayed with pride a drawing which he had made representing Napoleon on horseback levelling a pistol at the head of the Duke, who was advancing with sword drawn to cut down the enemy. Just at this moment the Duke of Wellington entered the Prince's room.

"How is that?" asked the veteran Duke.

"Because you can best criticise my drawing," said the Prince. "Now, can you tell me who is on the left," he went on, showing the picture to the Duke.

"Well," said the latter, "from the waistcoat and the hat I can see it is meant for Napoleon."

"Right," said the Prince; "and who is the other?"

"By the cut of the features I should say it was myself."

"Right again," answered the Prince. "Now, what I want to know is—is the drawing accurate?"

The old Duke put down the drawing and impressively answered: "My boy, I am going to tell you something that the English people don't know. I never in my life set eyes upon Napoleon! Once, in the midst of a battle, some one cried, "Look, there is Napoleon!' Before I could get the field glass to my eyes the smoke from a field gun had envelloped him."

EMDEN CALLED AT BRITISH PORT

LONDON, April 27—A belated but amusing account of the German [illegible] of Diego Garcia, a blissful spot in the Indian Ocean, has reached London by mail.

Diego Garcia is a British possession peopled by Europeans and five hundred natives. The great world war had been under way for four months when the Emden reached the little island, but the people of the island had received no mail for six months and had no suspicion of what had been passing. So when the Emden steamed in one day the elderly "manager" of the island paid a pleasant call upon Captain von Muller.

Friendly exchanges were made, and even presents offered, before the departure of the cruiser.

JOHN BUNNY IS DEAD; MADE MILLIONS LAUGH

Educated to Become a Priest He Developed Into Great "Movie" Star

NEW YORK, April 27—John Bunny, whose antics on the screen have made millions laugh, died yesterday at his Brooklyn home. He had been ill for three weeks. Overwork is said to have brought on the nervous breakdown which caused his death.

Bunny sufferedu a collapse less than a month ago. Complications of heart and kidney set in, but he rallied strongly, and his friends were in hopes that he soon would be back before the camera. He suffered a relapse late yesterday, however.

Bunny suffered a collapse less than was born in New York. He was educated to become a priest, but worked in a railroad office to defray his school expenses. While there the chief clerk advised him to become an actor.

Bunny says the chief clerk said: "You are an awful thing as a clerk, but you talk loud enough to be a good actor."

His first professional engagement was in "Strangers of Paris," a Belasco production, in 1863. He later appeared as end man in several minstrel shows and in comedy roles in Shakespearian productions.

He entered the moving picture field about eight years ago, and at his death was reputed to be the highest salaried "silent" actor in the business.

MENINGITIS MICROBE IN GIRL'S BRAIN

London, April 27.—An inquest was held in London bearing on the circular recently issued by the Local Government Board upon the danger of kissing.

A little girl, Alexandra M. Tuckersole, aged 10 years, while at school became suddenly ill and was sent home by her teacher who at once also notified the relieving officer. The child died early the next morning without medical attendance—a circumstance which was fully explained.

Dr. Turtle, divisional police surgeon, said he made a post-mortem examination and found the microbe of cerebro-spinal meningitis in the girl's brain.

The coroner, Dr. W. Wynn Westcott, elicited from a witness that a soldier, a relative, who had recently returned from France on a furlough, had kissed and fondled the child. Dr. Westcott said that it was more than likely that the soldier had brought the fatal germs from France.

THE WEATHER

The unseasonable hot weather continues. Yesterday's highest figure was 84 degrees in the shade. Warm weather extends over practically the entire country.

Dandruff Surely Destroys the Hair

Girls—if you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silk hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring: use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.

COL. ROOSEVELT ON THE STAND

SYRACUSE, N.Y., April 27.—Refreshed and reinforced by their week-end rests, Colonel Roosevelt and Wm. M. Ivins, Barnes' chief counsel, faced each other again in Round 5 of their amazing duel of wits. The Wm. Barnes-Theodore Roosevelt $50,000 libel suit entered its second week and the end was not in sight.

Revelations of "inside history" more startling than anything yet brought out were expected when Mr. Ivins resumed his cross-examination of the colonel. Mr. Ivins has said he would lead Mr. Roosevelt through his whole career. The seizure of the Panama canal zone and the Tennessee coal and iron deal have not been touched upon.

Despite the fact that Rosevelt has been heard for four consecutive court days, 22 hours, and the weather has suddenly became extraordinary summery, interest in the lawsuit had increased rather than abated.

The great antipathy of Wm. Barnes to Chas. E. Hughes and the fact that Roosevelt was not strong for Hughes in 1908, but knew no stronger man to nominate for governor, was brought out when the Barnes-Roosevelt $50,000 libel suit was resumed.

Roosevelt wrote to Barnes and to Herbert Parsons that "there are many currents against Hughes, but I do not see where you are going to put in his place one who will not be weaker."

The annual waste of metal in the world from coins rubbing together is estimated at a ton and a quarter of gold and 30 tons of silver.

Needs Spring Suit Asks $5,000 More

NEW YORK, April 26 — Declaring that she needs a new spring suit and cannot get it from her present income Mrs. Ada E. Zahn, of No. 170 West Seventy-fourth street, yesterday, began an action in the Supreme Court against her erstwhile husband, Bernhard Zahn, asking that alimony of $5,000 a year be increased to $10,000.

Mrs. Zahn received the alimony award October 7, 1914, when she obtained a final decree of divorce on the ground of infidelity. The action was not contested. In the decree was incorporated an agreement made by Mr. and Mrs. Zahn, March 26, 1914, whereby the plaintiff was to receive $5,000 a year and an insurance policy for $50,000.

Mrs. Zahn says that when she signed the agreement she had suffered a stroke of apoplexy, which had made her incapable of understanding a business transaction. She submits affidavits from physicians attesting to her "confusion of ideas" during a period in which the agreement is signed.

According to Mrs. Zahn, her one-time husband derives an income of $40,000 a year from his interests in the Sayles-Zahn chain of butcher shops, the Smith & McNeil Company and White's Restaurant, in this city, and the Walton Hotel, in Philadelphia.

Mrs. Zahn says it is impossible to maintain her social standing on less than $10,000 a year. Keron F. Dwyer, of No. 302 Broadway, is her attorney.

6 Foot Wife Sues 5 Foot Husband

NEW YORK, April 26.—Disparity in the height of Solomon Begod, a clothing dealer, of No. 158 Meeker avenue, Williamsburg, and his wife, Gertrude, is largely responsible for their marital difficulties, according to Mr. Begod, who opposed a motion for counsel fee and alimony in a separate action in Supreme Court, Brooklyn. The defendant is only five feet high in high-heeled shoes, while his wife is more than six feet tall and weighs 150 pounds.

In response to the accusation that he had been cruel to his wife the defendant said, "I am a quiet little man, and am only too glad to be let alone."

On asking why his wife treated him with such scant courtesy Begod says she replied that all her sisters had married tall, handsome men, while he was "only a little shrimp." The couple were married in 1912, and have one child.

Justice Blackmar ordered Mr. Begod to pay his wife $8 a week pending the outcome of the action.

Cannot Get To France

LONDON, April 27.—It ought to be understood that the restrictions against travelling to France are now stronger than ever, even in the case of people holding official or semi-official positions with ambulance or general philanthropic effort among troops. Several such people who came from Canada with the intention of procuring work on the continent met the greatest difficulty in securing permission to proceed further than England, even when the application had been supported by those holding high rank in the Dominion.

accident. She had to buy dressings, etc., and dress the injured member for a long time.

Cross-Examined.

To. Mr. Humphries witness stated that she arrived home on the Sunday of the accident about 5 p.m. She was telephoned to come home.

She had not paid the Nicholls Hospital account, and to her knowledge it was not paid.

Dr. Carmichael and Dr. McCullough were the physicians in attendance in Peterborough.

None of the accounts were paid as far as she knew.

Jordan Was There.

"Will you swear that Mr. William Jordan was there between the blasts?"

Answer—"Yes."

"When was he there?"

"He was there once taking ashes from behind our house."

"What time of the day did you see Mr. Jordan making these measurements?"

"In the evening."

"Do you know when the blasting started?"

"I couldn't say—it was along about the first week in May."

"How many nights were you there while the blasting took place?"

"I was there two or three nights."

"Will you swear that the last blasting took place on the Friday night before the accident?"

"As near as I can remember it was on the Friday evening."

"Do you know who handled the caps, in this blasting?"

"I know only that I was told that Mr. Sampson handled the caps."

"Did you know that your boy Wesley was ordered to keep off the Jordan property?"

"No."

"Did you know that your boy was found in the Sampson kitchen lighting matches and was kicked out?"

"No, he never was kicked out that I know of."

From Mr. Gordon—"There was no dynamite in the kitchen."

"Where did this accident happen?"

"I was not there to see. I know only what they told me."

"Who do you mean by they?"

"I mean my daughter, Eva, told me."

"Do you intend giving Wesley an education?"

"Yes, that is my intention."

"And this will take quite a bit of money, and probably when he is 16 or 17 years of age he will get married?"

His Honour Judge Huycke—"There are several in Campbellford a great deal older than that who are not married. Is that considered the marriageable age in Campbellford, Mr. Humphries?"

In re-examination by Mr. Gordon, Mrs. White said the Sunday of the accident, her daughter, Eva, aged fourteen years, was at home to look after the children.

Mr. White Was Ill.

Mr. William White, father of Wesley White, and husband of the previous witness, was called to the box. He has been ailing for about three years and was not very well.

Witness had seen Mr. Sampson place the explosives. Mr. Luman Jordan was doing the slight work carrying a few boards, etc. He did not know who brought the explosive to the property, but Mr. Sampson carried the caps in a box in his hip pocket.

It was customary for the children to go around the property the day after the blasting took place to see what was done.

Hole Shot Twice.

The second post hole was shot twice. They went to put it off and it would not explode and was reloaded.

Witness had done some blasting and thought if a shot failed to go off it would be easy to lose the explosive in the darkness.

Youthful Witness.

Wesley White, the boy who was injured, was only eight years old, understood the significance of an oath and was sworn.

He remembered the time he was hurt on the right hand and face. His Honour looked at the injured parts.

The day he was hurt he was playing with Alfred Dawe and Arthur, his own brother. They were playing by the holes. He used to play there quite a lot. He found a cap by the side of the second hole, about a foot from the top of the hole. The cap was on a little rock projecting from the side of the hole. It looked like a new copper. He picked it up and said: "Oh, look what I found." They went and got some paper and rolled the cap up in it. The brother, Arthur, lit the paper while he was holding the cap and paper in his hand.

He had seen Mr. Sampson had them in his hop pocket for blasting.

Looked Life Fire Cracker.

The cap looked to him like a dead fire-cracker. He did not know what they would do. He had fired off fire-crackers and they did not hurt him. He was never told to keep away from them, excepting when the explosives were about to be put off.

The youngster did not remember being carried into the house after being hurt. He did remember being on the train. The day he was hurt he was looking in the holes to see how many there were.

To Mr. Humphries Wesley said he was in the first book. The Jordan youngsters were playing with him the day he was hurt until they were called in to go to bed for an afternoon sleep.

The evidence of Alfred Dawe, a youngster who was visiting at his grandmother's in Campbellford, was taken before a commissioner in Innisfail, Sask. Mr. Gordon objected to its being accepted in court this morning.

Court adjourned until 2.30 p.m.

Appointed To Buy Supplies

Messrs. Kemp, La Porte and Galt Form Purchasing Commission

OTTAWA, April 27. — The following purchasing commission was appointed by the Government yesterday: Hon. A. E. Kemp, Minister without portfolio; H. Laporte, formerly Mayor of Montreal and Geo. F. Galt, of Winnipeg, son of Sir Thomas Galt, who was at one time Chief Justice of Ontario.

This commission will purchase all supplies for the Canadian Militia Department, all supplies in Canada for the British War Office and the allies.

Hon. Mr. Kemp is chairman of the commission, and it is understood that it will be necessary to appoint a large staff the handle the immense amount of business that will have to be transacted. It will be conducted similarly to other Departments of the Government.

Mr. Laporte is a well-known business man of Montreal, and has a splendid record.

Mr. Galt is one of the most responsible and respected business men of the west.

The value of the composition of the commission is in the close touch which will be maintained between the Government and the purchasing commission, Mr. Kemp being a member of the Cabinet.

25c. An Hour For Civic Labour

The Trades and Labour Council have another grievance which they want the City Council to adjust. They are asking that the city adopt a standard wage of twenty-five cents an hour. The present wage is twenty-two cents, at which price many men who are incapable of doing a maximum day's work, are engaged. If the city decide to adopt a standard wage of twenty-five cents as suggested, they will not do so unconditionally. A graduating scale of wages will be drafted to suit the class of labour employed. At the present time the city are employing a number of old men, who if thrown out of employment, would become a burden upon the municipality. It is considered better business to provide these men with light jobs at a minimum wage rather than sacrifice them for better men who would expect a maximum wage. This is one difficulty that will have to be met if a standard wage is adopted. The matter will come up at an early meeting of the City Council.

Mysterious Death of Colborne Farmer

Was Found Dead on a Side Road —Inquest Held

GODERICH, Ont, April 27.— What appears to be a murder was disclosed when word reached Coroner Dr. Hunter that Robert Bean, a farmer of Colborne township had been found dead on a side road north of this town.

The motive could not have been robbery as the victim's pockets still contained money and had not been interfered with.

Little is known in town of Dean's habits, but it is not thought he had an enemy who would wish to do away with him.

Charge of Theft Was Withdrawn

County Police Magistrate Langley and Crown Attorney Hatton were in Havelock yesterday in connection with a case of horse theft that was to have come up for hearing. The charge was withdrawn and Crown Attorney Hatton agreed that the interests of justice would be served if the horse was returned to its original owner, and costs paid by the defendant, John Sanford. The difficulty arose out of a horse trade that eventually proved unsatisfactory for the defendant, who, it is alleged took it upon himself to recover the horse in question, with the result that a charge of theft was preferred.

Tedford McPherson, of Blairton, is the man who is alleged to have lost the equine, and the animal in question was recovered by County Constable Elias Williams, after a 70-mile run in his auto.

TWO LEGGED COLT BORN NEAR ESTEVAN

Estevan, Sask., April 27. — An equine freak has aroused great interest in Estevan. The freak is a two-legged colt, born on the farm of L. A. Gould, 8 miles to the north of Estevan.

The little animal is perfect in every way but entirely lacks the two fore legs. There is not the slightest growth in any way from the shoulders, except that the joints can be felt under the hide. The colt is perfectly healthy, and is now under the care of Veterinary D. J. Rooney. The barn was soon thronged with a crowd of curious sight-seers, and the owner already has had several offers for his property, but has accepted none of them up to the present.

Veterinary Rooney is in communication with the department of agriculture at Regina to see if their veterinary department wants to examine the freak in the interests of science. The mother of the colt is seven years old, and this is her third colt. The sire is an aged stallion, Dakota Chief.

Report From City's Arbiter

His Worship Mayor Buller and City Solicitor Gordon were in Toronto yesterday in connection with matters pertaining to the recent arbitration between the city and the Peterborough Light and Power Company. They received a report from Mr. R. A. Ross, the city's arbiter, citing the grounds upon which the award was made and giving some suggestions respecting the city's proposal to enter an appeal. The report will be submitted to the next meeting of the City Council, which will be held on Monday night next.

To meet the demand for a small light for all night service a tiny incandescent lamp has been invented that carries a current transformer in its base.

Was Sentenced to 20 Days' in Gaol

TORONTO, April 27. — Twenty days' imprisonment was the sentence given Thomas Beard, who sold a horse representing it to be sound and youthful, when it was 18 years old and lame in the off hind leg. He sold it for $175, when a veterinary stated its value to be about $40.

Beard sold the horse to Allan Payne of Warsaw, Peterborough County.

Examiner Received Regularly by Peterboro Boys in Trenches

Sergt. Major Howarth Says Major Bennett's Men Were Specially Mentioned by Smith-Dorrien After a Review by Him.

Sergt. Major Fred Howarth, writing from France to his wife on April 12th mentions their review by General Smith-Dorrien. On the previous day, after returning from divine service, they received orders to prepare for the review and it was then understood that the Canadians were about to be moved. They furbished all their accoutrements and uniforms, and Sergt. Major Howarth writes that every man was looking his best. General Smith-Dorrien not only congratulated the general body of men upon their appearance, but specially mentioned Major Bennett's men and Sergt. Major Howarth soldierly bearing.

Sergt. Major Howarth says the men receive the Examiner regularly. Among the items of special interest to them was one from Lieut. Ackerman in which he mentioned his men as being first into the trenches. Quite an argument ensued among Major Bennett's men and Sergt. Major Howarth contends that they were positively the first Canadians to reach the trenches. Another item he mentions is the 3rd contingent's complaints of the food and quarters at Belleville. The men discussed that article most of all and remarked, Sergt. Major Howarth wrote, that they should have shared the food at Salisbury Plain last winter, and as for quarters they might have felt more satisfied with their bunks had they seen the first Canadians sleeping as best as they could in the mow during their turns in the trenches.

Private Jimmy Bills has almost fully recovered and is expected to return to his company in a short time. Sergt. Major Howarth writes that the men have acquired a distaste for the billets on account of the inactivity. They prefer to be up in front where, as they say, there is generally something doing.

Identifies Deadly Gas

Fumes Are From Liquid Chlorine

LONDON, April 27.—At least one distinguished British scientist has no doubt as to the nature of the widely-discussed thick yellow smoke which has been emitted from advanced German lines, and which an official French communique describes as producing with effect of complete asphyxiation upon our troops, which was felt even in our second line of positions."

Sir James Dewar, president of the Royal Institution, asserted to a Daily Chronicle representative in terms that left no room for doubt or uncertainty that this latest and most diabolical German weapon to be directed against the allies is liquid chlorine. He said:

"For some years Germany has been manufacturing chlorine in tremendous quantities. The Germans undoubtedly have hundreds of tons available for this terrible purpose. If, say, several tons of the liquid are allowed to escape—into the atmosphere, it immediately evaporates and forms the yellow gases referred to in the official report and if the wind is blowing in a favorable direction, it is the easiest thing in the world for the Germans to inundate the country with poison for miles ahead. The fact that gas is three times heavier than air makes escape from its deleterious effect almost impossible, for it drifts like a thick fog along the surface of the ground, overwhelming whom it overtakes."

A SHAMEFUL EXHIBITION OF CRUELTY

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Have we got a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It is sorely needed. Yesterday morning, at nine o'clock, on Hunter Street, I saw a junk-waggon, apparently heavily loaded, dragged along westward by an animal that looked like a horse. The shape and skin and bones of a horse were there, but mighty little flesh. He didn't seem to have a sound leg to limp on. He was very lame in the near hind foot, which seemed to have a heavy dose of elephantiasis. It was bigger than an elephant's foot—about the size of a beer keg. The poor brute dragged along this hypertiophied foot painfully, at least painfully to the onlookers. The suffering brute wobbled along his heavy load and two hulking men on top of it, apparently in agony at every step. If it was far to the boneyard he didn't seem likely to get there on his own crippled feet. It was a disgraceful exhibition of cruelty to animals. The police should get their eyes on this horse and its owner and about the poor brute (the horse) or put him out of suffering.

Yours truly,

Humanity.

Peace Hath Its Troubles

Governments Little Inclined to Assist the Delegates

THE HAGUE, April 27. — (Via London.)—Difficulties on all sides have been encountered even before the meeting of the International Women's Congress, which is scheduled to gather at The Hague this week to discuss peace.

The steamer Noordam, which was due Sunday with the American delegates, has not arrived.

The German authorities have refused to grants permits to the chief German delegates, and the British delegation, after having been cut by the British Government to one-sixth the original number, has been unable to cross the channel owing to the lack of shipping facilities.

The Swiss delegates telegraphed yesterday: "We have been prevented from coming." They give no explanation, but it is assumed that Germany has declined to allow them to pass. The French women from the outset have declined to participate.

Two Linemen Are Electrocuted

Horrible Accident Near Chatham This Morning

Special to The Examiner:

CHATHAM, April 27—Samuel Ford and Louis Bechard, two linemen of the local hydro system, were electrocuted at the Ontario hydro electric sub-station, just outside the city this morning. One of the men slipped and the ladder fell against a wire carrying 26,000 volts of electricity. The juice immediately killed both men. The pulmotor was brought into use but life in both men was extinct.

Between them Australia and Argentina pasture one-third of the world's sheep.

Because some London streets are too narrow for motor omnibuses to be turned around vehicles are being tried with controlling apparatus at each end.

The Saloon vs. Business

A well-known business man of Puget Sound, who is neither a church member nor a total abstainer, recently made the remark to a few friends with whom he was taking lunch. Talking of business losses he said, "The only cure for such conditions is total prohibition."

When asked for his reasons for such a statement he replied substantially as follows:

"For some years I was a resident in a Colorado City of about 15,000 people, my business being in connection with a department store in that place. There were ten saloons in the city, all of which were respectable places as no dives were permitted. This department store had among the many names carried on its books 800 debtors whose account were marked off as 'bad.'

"There came a time when the saloon was voted out and the city became 'dry.' Within sixty days of the date on which the saloons were closed, 260 of those whose accounts had been marked off as uncollectable voluntarily came in and paid their accounts in full. Within an additional brief time 300 more came in and 'made good.' Thus in a short time 560 of these 800 creditors paid their debts, and their credit was re-established when that city became dry."

That is what happens in nearly every place when the temptation to drink is removed. Why don't business men as a measure of self-defence take this matter up?—H. Arnott, M.B., M.C.P.S.

Nicholls Oval Tennis Club Ready For Season

The annual meeting of the Nicholls Oval Tennis Club was held in the Board Room of the Y.M.C.A. on Saturday, April 24th. The following officers were elected:

Hon. Pres., Mr. C. E. Brewer.
Pres., Mr. Roy Turner.
Vice-Pres., Mr. C. E. Smith.
Sec.-Treas., Miss L. Elliott.
Executive Committee — Miss B. Mowry, Miss E. Dawson, Miss Elimbeth Thomlison, Messrs. Maurice Park, A. A. Perrin and F. E. Kerr.

The courts wil be ready for use next week and the officers of the club hope that all the members will take a keen interest this season.

Aunt—"You have counted up to eight nicely, dear. But don't you know what comes after eight?" Elsie—"Bedtime."

Bringing Up Father

"Bringing up Father" is one of the few genuine hits of the season. Gus Hill's elaborate production of George McManus' reigning cartoon success, "Bringing Uf Father," is proving one of the most substantial musical comedy successes of the theatrical season. This assertion is substantiated by the fololwing criticisms from the leading critics of Philadelphia, Pa.

The Evening Star says: "A lively and amusing entertainment finely presented by a company of clever and versatile vaudeville artists."

The Evening Telegraph: "Delighted an audience that filled the Walnut St. theatre to overflowing. Uproariously funny from rise to fall of the curtain, yet always clean."

The Evening Bulletin: 'Convulsed the audience at the Walnut St. theatre last night. Splendid chorus, singing and dancing."

The North American: "It was a success! Just as if Father, Mother and Daughter had stepped right out of the funny pictures."

The Philadelphia Press: "Shouts of laughter. Capacity audience laughed long and loudly."

The Philadelphia Record: "Bringing up Father" is just one good laugh after another. The rippling of one laugh melted into another.

What more can you ask? Every newspaper voices the same opinion, that "Bringing up Father" is a riot of laughter. Good music and pretty girls. Watch for the date; it is coming your way.

Grand Opera House Saturday, May 1st, matinee and night. Reserved seats on sale at box office Thursday morning at 9 a.m.

Markets Have Upward Trend

NEW YORK, April 27.—Pronounced strength in U. S. was the feature of the second hour, and it produced good effect upon the whole market. There appeared to be large short interest in that stock, and in conservative quarters it was argued that the earnings for the quarter to be published after the close to-day had been discounted, the large interests being now inclined to look forward to substantial improvement in the trade. There was some selling of Central Leather on quarterly statement, which showed earnings equal to less than one per cent. compared with more than 2 per cent. for same period a year ago, but the stock met support in neighbourhood of 40.

1.15 p.m.—All the markets sold of from ½ to four points up to about 2.30, when they rallied tarong.

Grandson of Col. Miller is Wounded

Listed Among the Canadians Who Stopped the Huns at Langemark

Among the Canadian wounded is listed Lieut. Fred W. Miller, of Brantford, grandson of Col. J. W. Miller, of this city. No details are given of his injuries. He is just mentioned as one of the many wounded in the 4th Battalion. Lieut. Miller was on the staff of the Nielson's Bank, Brantford, when war was declared. He immediately resigned and enlisted, and a few weeks ago he was raised to a captaincy in his regiment, the 38th of Brantford.

Col. Miller said that his grandson had frequently visited him, and, last year, was here for a holiday, which was largely spent at Stoney Lake. Lieut. Miller's father is a paymaster in the Third Contingent, and is located at Hamilton.

MEETING OF THE CENTRAL CHARITY BOARD

Cheques Will be Issued For War Tax—List of Accouts Ordered to be Paid

Cheques for war stamps and postage stamps, when required by the Central Charity Board, will be issued upon the certificate of the Chairman, Mr. H. Rush. This was decided upon at a meeting of the Board which was held last evening.

A letter was read from Mr. R. W. Travers, Manager of the Bank of Montreal, saying that the balance at debit of the Board's account on March 21s was $1,742.10.

The following statement of orders was read:

| | Since last meeting. | During 1915. |
|---|---|---|
| Groceries | $193.00 | $1,417.00 |
| Wood | 32.62 | 84012 |
| Tickets | 61.15 | 65.05 |
| Homes, sundries | 616 26 | 1,917.28 |
| | $903.03 | $4,239.45 |

The following accounts were presented and ordered to be paid:

Canadian Pacific Railway, $17.85; J. R. Bell, $8; Mrs. Mary Bowman, $9; Bank of Montreal, $1.55; R. C. Braund $6, Peter Connal & Son, $2, C S. Curran $2, M. J. Dunsford & Son $6, W. H. Hamilton $8, F. Drake $6.80, W. G. Freeburn $12, J. E. A. Fitzgerald $3.90, J. M. Fanning $8, M. Flaherty $6.40, R. Hicks $3.90, B. Heard $6, Bert Hunter $6, J. J. Johnston $4, John James $2, D. H. Kernaghan $16, John Kerr $12, J. J. Lynch $6, Mitchell's Grocery $6, E. F. Mason $4, T. B. Maniece $2, F. W. Miller $1, G. Oliver $2, O'Donnell Bros. $4, E. Ruttick $14, J. Penrose & Son, $8, Peterborough Protestant Home $152, D. S. Parks $10, N. Boutley $6, W. J. Boutley $8, J. H. Say[illegible] Spence (Woodstock Hospital for Insane) $84.29, G. F. Toone $12, P. S. Whiee $3, T. S. Yonge $6.

Letters were read from Mr. R. J. Doak, Reeve of Millbrook, and J. J. Preston, Clerk of Manvers, regarding James Saunders. The matter was left with Relief Officer Miller to deal with. There is some doubt as to what municipality is responsible for the maintenance of Saunders.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

A meeting of the Peterborough Utilities Commission will be held this afternoon at four o'clock.

Property Committee.

The Property committee of the City Council will meet to-morrow evening. Ald. McIntyre, chairman of the committee, who has been absent from the city for some time, has returned.

Paving Repairs.

The paving contractors are making repairs to some of the concrete gutters that were constructed in the year 1913. Several sections have been relaid.

Fever is Spreading.

That the spring housecleaning fever is spreading is evidenced by the fact that the windows in the police court chamber have been cleaned. This may help to throw more light on the judicial enquiries that are held there.

Committee Meetings.

The Finance committee of the City Council will meet to-morrow afternoon at four o'clock. In the evening the Board of Works will meet following the meeting of the Property committee.

Sunday Street Watering.

Sunday street watering will not come into force until after the next meeting of the City Council, which is scheduled for next Monday night, when the Board of Work's recommendation will come up for adoption or rejection as the case may be.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

Headed the Parade.

The Mayor and City Council of Stratford visited Guelph and headed a parade of the 34th Battalion to church.

The Brantford House of Refuge board appointed Mr. and Mrs. Storey Onondaga, farmers, as superintendent and matron of the Brant House of Refuge.

First Policeman.

Miss Lilian Clearihue, travelers' aid at Montreal, has been sworn in as the first policewoman in that city.

Woodstock's Tax Rate.

Woodstock's tax rate will be 25 mills.

To-day's Military News

A Rush to Recruit.

CALGARY, April 26.—Stirred by the stories of the Canadians in action, when recruiting for the 50th Battalion, fourth contingent opened to-day, five hundred men clamoured to be taken on. The band of the 103rd Militia Regiment joined to a man. At the close of the day Col. Armstrong announced that one hundred and thirty men, as many as could be handled by the recruiting officer in a day, had been examined and accepted.

Horse and Buggy Has Disappeared

There was stolen on Wednesday night, April 11, 1915, from the livery stable of Wesley Knight, Bowmanville, the following described horse: A light bay mare, about 15½ hands high, age about 7 years, in good condition, nice looking driver, black main and tail, two white hind feet; also one cushion tired top buggy, all black, no boot on back of buggy, a set of rubber-mounted single harness, all but the bridle which is nickle trimmed, breast collar, overdraw check.

Description of thief, Harry Smith. Age about 25 to 30 years old, dark complexion, height about 5 feet, 7 inches, dressed in dark brown coat and cap. If found, arrest and wire all information at my expense.

Local Dentist Elected To Board

The Board of Directors of the Royal College of Dental Surgeons, in annual session, elected officers for the ensuing year, as follows:

President—Dr. W. C. Davy, Morrisburg.

Vice-Pres.——Dr. W. W. McGuire, Waterford.

Registrar—Dr. M. A. Morrison, Peterborough.

Treasurer—Dr. W. C. Trotter, Toronto.

Secretary—Dr. J. B. Willmott, Toronto.

The other members present were: Dr. H. R. Abbott, London, and Dr. D. Clark, Hamilton. Dr. C. E. Sale of Goderich, the remaining member of the board, has gone to the front as an officer in the 18th, battalion.

To prevent a door being unlocked from the outside a pin has been invented to be inserted in a hole in the bar of the lock when it has been locked.

Man Confesses He Became a Thief For Love

PORTLAND, Ore., April 27.—A modern Jean Valjean, whose impulses, goading him on to deeds akin to crime, were not unlike those of the character in Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables," is under arrest in Portland. In this case, however, it was a bottle of milk instead of a loaf of bread, he stole, and there was no kindly clergyman at hand to turn the tide of misfortune.

'Good heavens,' I didn't want to steal. I am young, strong and willing to work, but haven't been able to find any employment. The food I have taken has meant life to me."

This is the only defence of the modern Valjean, Harvey Wray, twenty-five, arrested with Mrs. Mary Richardson on burglary charges. According to his confession, Wray turned thief to support Mrs. Richardson, whom he wants to marry; her two-year-old baby girl and her mother, Mrs. Emeret Thorp. Mrs. Thorp is a widow and eighty-four.

The arrest explains many petty thefts that have annoyed residents has been milk, stolen from porches in pint and quart amounts. Wray confessed to taking more than six gallons of milk and cream in this way, the police say.

Wray's home is in Long Beach, Wash., but he has been in Portland since October, staying with Mrs. Richardson, who had been housekeeper for his father and himself in Long Beach. Though married, Mrs. Richardson has been endeavouring to obtain a divorce, but she has not had the necessary funds. She has lived in Portland many years, being a familiar figure years ago when she rode show horses. She is about thirty-five.

City detectives investigated the case and reported that the young man tells a straightforward story, and that they believe his statement that this is the first time he has ever been under arrest and that he stole not from desire, but because of the force of circumstances.

The photographer—"I don't like these photographs one bit. Why, they make me look like a monkey." The Photographer—"You should have considered that before you sat for them!"

NEW YORK GIANTS FINALLY WIN GAME

Tesreau's Fine Pitching Gave McGraw's Gang a Decision Over Brooklyn---Reds and Cubs Have a Weird Game --Yankees Make it 2 Out of 3 from Senators

AMERICAN.

NEW YORK, April 26.—The New York Americans made it two out of three from Washington here to-day by a score of 9 to 2. The Yankees beat Boehling with long hits, Pipp tripling with the bases full in the third inning, while Cook hit a home run with two on the bases in the seventh.

| Score: | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Washington .. ..002000000—2 | 6 | 5 | |
| New York .. .. ..00300132x—9 | 12 | 0 | |

Batteries—Boehling and Williams; Fisher and Nunamaker.

At Boston—Weakness shown by the visiting pitchers and opportune batting by the locals enabled Boston to defeat Philadelphia by 9 to 2 in a seven innings game to-day. Rain stopped the contest at the end of the seventh. Score:

|---|---|---|---|
| Philadelphia.. .. ..0100010—2 | 5 | 4 | |
| Boston.. .. .. .. ..0051120—9 | 7 | 1 | |

Batteries—Davies, Harper, Bressler and McAvoy; Ruth and Carrigan. Called on account of rain.

At Detroit—Austin's single after two men were out in the ninth inning drove in two runs, and gave St. Louis a 3 to 2 victory over Detroit to-day. Jacobson, a pinch hitter, made a three bagger, and scored the Tigers' only run on Bush's long fly. Score:

NATIONAL.

BROOKLYN, April 26.—Jeff Tesreau checked the Giants' losing streak by winning the final game of the series with Brooklyn by 3 to 0 to-day. He allowed the locals two hits. Players Daubert, Stengel and Snodgrass were put off the field for objecting too strenuously to the umpire's decisions. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| New York .. .. ..100000011—3 | 6 | 2 | |
| Brooklyn. .. .. ..00000000—0 | 2 | 3 | |

Batteries—Tesreau and J. Meyers; Dell and Miller.

At Philadelphia—Alexander to-day pitched Philadelphia to victory over Boston for the third time this season, the score being 7 to 4. The visitors bunched all of their hits in three innings, but Alexander fanned ten batsmen. Strand was hit hard, and both of Boston's' errors were costly. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Boston .. .. .. ..100000120—4 | 8 | 2 | |
| Philadelphia. .. ..08020002x—7 | 10 | 2 | |

Batteries — Strand and Gowdy, Whaling; Alexander and Killifer.

At Cincinnati—After Chicago had managed to overcome a nine run lead Cincinnati by steady playing and consistent hitting in the seventh and eighth innings tied up and passed the visitors, eventually winning by 13 to 12 to-day. Cincinnati's big inning came in the first, when with five hits, two bases on balls and two sacrifices, intermingled, they scored seven runs. Chicago was not to be outdone, however, and in the sixth with five hits, two men hit by pitcher, a base on balls and two sacrifice hits, they tallied

Several Trades May Be Put Through At Canuck League Meeting

OTTAWA, April 26.— At the schedule meeting of the Canadian Baseball League to be held next Tuesday at Toronto, it is likely that several trades will be put through. The Ottawas have abandoned hope of signing Rogers, Lage and Gero and will place all three on the market.

The Hamilton and St. Thomas clubs have both made offers to the Ottawas for "Dusty" Bullock, and the Ottawas are ready to trade him to St. Thomas for Outfielder Merlin Kopp or to London for Ed. Lamy. In fact, they would give Bullock and Lage for Lamy. They are after a catcher, and will endeavour to get Harkins or Fisher from Manager Lee, of the Guelph club. In addition they will endeavour to hook a third baseman to replace Bullock, who is anxious for a change of scenery. It is likely that Bullock will be found with the St. Thomas club, as that is his home town. Rogers and Gero have announced that they would play independent ball for this season, but might be induced to play elsewhere.

Fred Bramble, the Kansas City pitcher whom the Ottawas bought from Fort Wayne at the close of the season, signed with the Senators to-day, thus completing the pitching staff. If the Ottawas fail to land Kopp they will use Shaughnessy and Powers, and one of their pitchers regularly in the outfield. Catcher Billy Schneider, formerly of Fort Wayne, has accepted terms and will report at Chatham. The Ottawas will gather there on May 10. Their squad is now made up as follows: Catcher, Schneider; pitchers, Bramble, Shocker, Kubat, Peterson and Roberts; first base, Dolan; second base, Smykal; third base, vacant; shortstop, Mitchell; outfielders, Powers and Shaughnessy.

Frank Baker Says Feds Offered Him $15,000

When Frank Baker broke his silence last week and volunteered to an interviewer that for $10,000 yearly he would leave his farm and return to the Mackmen, he roused the hope of the fans that a way might yet be found to restore to the Athletic infield one of the stars who was responsible for the $100,000 valuation placed on it.

Baker is quoted as saying that he didn't want to play but that he might not be able to resist the lure of a big advance. He said that he had been offered $15,000 by a Federal League club but preferred not to jump from the ranks of organized baseball.

In some quarters there has been manifested a disposition to criticize the owners of the Athletic club for not at once acceding to the terms of the star third-sacker, but an examination of the facts will show that it is out of reason to expect the club to permit Baker to violate his contract, one year of which he has already filled, and to insist on a new one at a big advance.

Baker receives a far bigger salary than he is credited with getting. Next Collins he was highst salaried man on the team. The contract under which he played during the season of 1914, was made at the end of the season of 1913.

At that time there was a conference between Manager Mack and Baker. Baker said he thought that he was worth more money than he was getting.

"What do you think would be a right place?" asked aMnager Mack.

Baker replied and set the figure that he would consider right for a three-year contract. The salary was granted. No attempt was made to get the player for any lower price. He had stated his own terms and they were accepted. The club now stands ready to fulfil its bargain and expects Baker to do the same.

It is only lately that it has developed that Baker is holding out for for money. In his first announcement that he would not play he stated that money had nothing to do with the proposition. He was tired of baseball, he disliked travel, he had saved enough money to live in comfort, and he preferred life on the farm to work on the diamond.

In his letter to Manager Mack he made no complaint about his salary.

Many of his team-mates believed that it was only a desire to avoid the spring training trip that caused his reported retirement, and they predicted that the start of the season would find him in line at Shibe park.

LACROSSE WILL BE POPULAR THIS SUMMER

HAVELOCK, April 27.—Miss Faye McCleary of Trent River, is visiting her sister in Montreal.

Miss Maye Smith of Toronto, visited friends in town last week.

Mr. C. A. Ghent was in Trenton on Monday and Tuesday last on business.

Mr. Michael McCarthy of Perth, attended the wedding of his daughter, Mrs. Arthur Pacquet on Monday last.

Mrs. J. Clamer of Kingston, was the guest of her sister, Mrs. John Burnett last week.

The amids of Havelock are holding a "shirt waist" dance in the Town Hall on Wednesday evening, April 28 inst. Invitations have been issued for the event. Mr. R. D. Green of Campbellford, will be the pianist.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence G. Copp of Harrowsmith, are the guests of the former's parents here. Mr. Copp, who is the C.P.R. agent in Harrowsmith, greatly surprised his friends when he introduced his wife to them, his marriage on Jan. 21st to Miss Ida Irene Boyce of the town not being generally known here. Clarence is being kept busy receiving congratulations of his many friends here.

Mrs. Clarence Long visited her sister in Campbellford last week.

Mr. Wm. Weese of Toronto was in town on Tuesday last.

Mr. Richardson of Norwood was in town on Thursday last.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Pacquett of Trenton, were in town last week attending the nuptials of their brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Art Pacquet.

Mrs. Edw. Fennel spent Sunday with her sister, Mrs. F. W. Wood of Campbellford.

Mr. Arthur Pacquet of town and Miss Katherine McCarthy of Perth, were married at the Church of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel on Monday morning, Rev. Father Galvin performing the ceremony. The young couple were attended by Miss Eva Lynch and Mr. Roly Quinlan. They will reside in town and the many friends of the groom join in extending hearty congratulations.

Mr. Albert Woodbeck has purchased a five passenger Ford from the local agent, Mr. Ray Phillips, for use in his livery.

The Girls' Guild of St. John's church held their weekly meeting at the home of Miss Mabel Beatty on Thursday last.

The clever three-act farce "Oh, Susanah," will be heard in Marmora on Friday evening, the 23rd inst., when the Havelock artists will endeavour to furnish an evenings amusement for the village of Malmora.

Dr. and Mrs. Crawford of Marmora, motored to town on Thursday last.

Mr. P. J. Lally of Cornwall, visited Havelock on Monday last accompanied by Mr. T. A. Coughlin of Hastings and addressed the obys of the Public and High school upon the ethics of the lacrosse game and the mural and physical benefits that accrue from playing lacrosse. Mr. Lally especially emphasized the duty of work before play and while he would like to see every boy play lacrosse, he admonished them to do their studies first and so develop into men of brainy purpose, well fitted to battle in the game of life. Rev. C. W. Holdswirth and T. P. Lancaster also spoke briefly to the boys, endorsing Mr. Lally's lacrosse ideals, and Principal D. T. Andrews in a reminiscent talk on the value of sports for boys, lauded lacrosse as being his ideal.

An organized club has been formed at the school, and as Mr. Lally expressed it, it looks as if lacrosse was going to hum in Havelock this year.

The Havelock juvenile team play the Madoc juveniles in that town on May 24th.

The following juveniles are requested to turn out to practice every night: J. O'Brien, P. O'Brien, W. Copp, M. Borwne, J. McGill, H. Haughton, C. Rose, T. Barnett, C. Bohan, P. Wright, C. Kelly, H. Maxwell.

Mrs. J. W. Bryans spent a few days in Peterborough last week.

Mrs. McCutcheon and baby are with friends in Toronto.

Mr. Ray Merrill of Kingston is at his home here.

Messrs. A. Waters, H. Black and A. Smith of Campbellford, motored to town on Sunday last.

Mr. C. Davidson of Campbellford, spent Sunday last in town.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Monday evening the Bible Study examinations conducted by the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. was held. Nineteen boys took part. The subject was the 'Life of Christ,' by Davis. The papers will be sent to headquarters at Toronto, where they will be examined. Every boy that passes his examination will be presented with a beautiful certificate by the National Council of the Y.M.C.A.

Thursday afternoon at 4.15 the members of the Boys' Department will visit the Brinton Carpet Co., when the boys will be shown through the factory.

Wednesday evening at eight o'clock the Employed Boys' Club will elect their officers for the year.

Special swimming lessons will be given to any members of the Boys' Department who is unable to swim, commencing May 3rd to 8th. There will be no excuse for any member of the "Y" not to learn to swim, as this week is for their benefit.

Members of the Boys' Department are asked to come to the Central Park Wednesday night and watch the Seniors play lacrosse and learn how the game is played. Teams will be organized for boys and the greatest of Canada's games is to receive a great boost in the 'Y' this year.

The boys will have their first practice Saturday morning. The older boys will practice Saturday afternoon.

Ottawa Athletes Enlisting

OTTAWA, April 26—Though Ottawa athletes have suffered heavily so far at the front there has not as yet been any falling off in the enlistments. Jack Williams, captain and centre-half of the St. Patrick Football Club, left last week for Halifax to join the Army Service Corps, and was followed to-day by Eddie Phillips, President of the Interprovincial Amateur Football Union, who has gone to another division. In the 38th battalion and in the Mounted Rifles many of the best athletes of the city are training.

D. J. O'Donohue of the Ottawa football and rowing clubs, is going with the third contingent, also F. Campbell, of the Ottawa Cricket Club, Capt. Billy Woods, former heavyweight boxing champion of the city, and Capt. E. R. McNeill, president of the Britannia Boating Club.

St. Peter's Young Men Arrange to Begin Athletics Right Away

There was a large attendance of the men and boys of St. Peter's Parish, last night, in St. Alphonsus' Lyceum, when the following committee was appointed to assume control of sports —Messrs. Ernie Reynolds, Ab. Quinlan, Sam Houlihan, Ed. Dillon and Gerald McFadden.

Rev. Father Phelan presided, and gave the young men and their elders every opportunity of expressing their preferences. One thing is assured, namely, an inter-parish Catholic baseball league. In regard to lacrosse an effort will be made to form a team from which it is hoped some members will graduate to the O. A. L. A. [illegible] may be used every night is one of the serious problems, but the new committee meets to-night with authority and instructions to get busy. It has been suggested that the Saturday games might be played at the T.A.S. park if one of the boats could be secured and a week-end outing provided. Members from the Sacred Heart and Immaculate Conception parishes were present, and explained what they had already done.

LACROSSE

All the men who are going to turn out with the Y.M.C.A. lacrosse team must be at the "Y" to-morrow night ready for business at 6.30.

Steel window guards have been invented that can be removed easily while a window is closed, but are locked in position to exclude intruders if it is opened.

Coachman Wore His Master's Socks

NEW YORK, April 27.—Edward N. Breitung, the millionaire father-in-law of Max Frederick Kleist, gardener-coachman-miner, on the witness stand testified concerning his famous socks, which figured largely in Kleist's $250,000 suit against Breitung for alleged alienation of the affections of Kleist's wife, Juliet Bretung Kleist.

Breitung had previously charged that Kleist wore his socks. Kleist's answer was that he had not stolen the socks, but that they had been given him by Juliet.

"When did you find out for the first time that the boy (Kleist) was wearing your socks?" Breitung was asked.

"When he first came to our suite at the St. Regis," said Breitung. "I don't remember the date."

"Did you speak to your daughter about the annulment of the marriage?"

"Yes; we talked it over," said Breitung. "She favoured an annulmet. I should say that she seemed ashamed the way the marriage was performed. Her idea was that to be legal it should be annulled and performed over again.

Men Who Are Bald Should Turn to Music

LOS ANGELES, April 27. — "Just where the mysterious affinity lies it is beyond me to tell, but the fact is that music stimulates the growth of hair. I will not go so far as to say that a bald-headed man may be sitting nightly in the front row at a musical comedy and recover a full shock of hair, but I do maintain that one with a musical temperament is not likely, ever to get bald."

This statement was made by Dr. Colvin J. Neville, a physician of New York, who has been staying in Los Angeles. He has just left for San Francisco, where he intends to make a study of the hair of musicians of different nationalities.

"In this matter of hair," he said, "I believe there lies an avenue of anthropological research that will, when undertaken to a great extent, yield abundant material for consideration by the medical world.

"It is not vanity or eccentricity, nor even carelessness that cause most musicians to wear their hair long. They are conscious of their ... to a greater extent than is the man with no ear for music, and they cannot bear to go about with a close-cropped head.

"Take it with all artists and sculptors, the same thing holds true. It is the artistic temperament and its concomitsant manifestation in hair.

"The subject might even be carried a step further to whiskers and there many new and interesting points would shed light upon the topic, but I am not prepared to go into that now. I hope by my observations at the fair in San Francisco to gain much valuable information.'

Married in January's hoar and rime,
Widowed you'll be before your prime.
Married in February's sleety weather,
Life you'll tread in tune together.
Married when March winds chill and roar,
Your home will lie on a foreign shore.
Married when bees o'er May blooms flit,
Strangers around your board will sit.
Married in month of roses—June—
Life will be one long honeymoon.
Married in July, with flowers ablaze,
Bitter sweet memories in after days.
Married in August's heat and drowse,
Lover and friend in your chosen spouse.
Married in golden September's blow,
Smooth and serene your life will flow.
Married when leaves in October thin,
Toil and hardship for you to begin.
Married in veils of November's mist,
Dame Fortune your wedding ring has kissed.
Married in days of December's cheer,

After a Lapse of 46 Years

By Strange Coincidence Mr. J. J. Turner Gets into Communication With Former Ship-mate Not Heard of For Nearly Half a Century

NOW IN AUSTRALIA

Truth is indeed often stranger than fiction. Early in January Mr. J. J. Turner, Sr., impressed by a picture of a yacht owned by Mr. D. MacTaggart of Brisbane, Australia, which appeared in Toronto Saturday Night, wrote a letter to the Australian. To-day he received a reply, and to his astonishment found that Mr. MacTaggart was an old shipmate of his, that in fact forty-six years ago the Australia man had been a cabin boy on the "Ramsey," a vessel on which Mr. Turner was at that time sail-maker. They had heard nothing of each other for nearly half a century, and Mr. Turner had no idea, when he wrote, that the owner of the yacht he admired had one time been a member of the same crew as himself. Mr. MacTaggart, who is now a produce maker and a stock and station agent, writes in part as follows:

Hamilton, Brisbane,
March 20, 1915.

Dear Mr. Turner,—Your letter of 19th January is one of the strangest incidents in my life. You were induced to write to me by the picture of my yacht, the "Niobe," and by memories it awakened of Moreton Bay and that yacht-like sail we had in it in the old "Ramsey" on Thursday, 21st of January, 1869, after a voyage of just under 95 days "from pilot to pilot". Captain Weekes in charge, with Mr. Huxtable as Chief Officer, and Miss Wills as matron of the immigrants. No doubt you will remember the lad that used to be a good deal with the Captain, doing writing for him, working out the ship's position, etc., who used to assist in arranging the concerts, at which I see by my diary, the "sail-maker" assisted, and who led Father Neptune's party around the deck when crossing the line, and also acted as signalman during the voyage and, especially on the day we sailed up Moreton Bay. Well, that lad was Dan MacTaggart, owner of the yacht "Niobe."

Mr. MacTaggart gives an interesting sketch of his life in Australia, and says that one of his sons is a Sergeant with the Australian Expeditionary Force.

Christian Science Church Re-opened

The Trustees of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, met last night and considered the two weeks the Church had been closed awaiting for volunteers to take up the work which Mr. Todd had laid down. After the reading of two official letters from Boston they at once decided to open the Church for public services next Sunday and go on as usual, with bright hopes of the future, being encouraged and inspired by the letters from headquarters. (See Church notices in the papers Saturday night).—Com.

LIVE STOCK MARKET

As an advertising novelty there has been patented a rocking chair with glass arms, under which advertisements are placed so the chair is rocked.

Intermediate Church Basketball League

The Intermediate Church Basketball League got away to a good start last night. All six teams were on deck, and even though it was a little warm, the boys all thoroughly enjoyed the sport. Most of the teams had not played together before, and considering this the brand of ball was very creditable and this opportunity for the boys to get together will have a tendency to hold them till they can get playing baseball, as well as giving them a taste of the indoor game so they can get into it early next fall and develop this league to a larger extent.

The first game was between George Street and Murray Street, and the former hadn't any trouble in emerging their Baptist brethren. Both teams played hard, but the Methodist boys were the better shots and this won them the game. The first half ended 6—0, while the final score was, George Street 17, Murray Street 1. Copp was high scorer: Line-up:

George Street—Copp, Helson, Head, Thorndyke, Hamilton.

Murray Street—Routley, Lapp, Lewis, Webb, Pringle.

Charlotte Street and Knox boys had to play an overtime game and Knox won out by two points. This was the best game of the evening. The score was close all through, neither team at any time having more than a three-point lead.

In the first half the checks stuck very close and there was very little scoring, but in the second half the boys on both teams got started, and it was nip and tuck right to the finish. When time was up the score was ten all. In about a minute's overtime Knox scored the winning basket. Final score, Knox 12, Charlotte Street 10. Line-up:

Charlotte Street—Skuce, Lebar, English, Austin, Stuart.

Knox—Montgomery, Martin, Webster, Smythe, Clarke.

All Saints Down Mark Street.

These two teams showed that they have got material that will make basketball players. All they need is practice. These boys had never been together before, and Mark Street boys deserve a lot of credit for entering a team, as they have a very smart group to pick from. The Mark Street team worked the ball down to the basket many times, but failed to cage it. The All Saints' group also made a fine showing. These boys are just getting organized and they show the right spirit by getting out a team. They will develop and make a good showing before the league is over. Final score, All Saints' 8, Mark Street 3. Line-up:

All Saints—Blake, Webster, Lebar, Gollop, Murdiff.

Mark Street — Lipsett, McIntyre, Nellist, Gillespie, Hagerman.

Referee, Carson; scorer, Thornrkye; timer, Gumpricht.

At the Theatres

THE EMPIRE.

"The Warrens of Virginia," a thrilling story of the U. S. Civil War, hold the interest through its entire six reels. The war scenes are very realistic and the dramatic scenes are intense. It is one of the best films shown at the Empire, and some declare it the best. House Peters and Blanche Sweet play the main roles splendidly.

Agatha Warren, daughter of the aristocratic Southern General Warren, has, before the Civil War, fallen in love with Ned Burton of New York. With the beginning of hostilities, Gen. Warren takes command of many of the Southern troops and Burton, enlisting in the Union Army, becomes a Lieutenant, the lovers being separated by their different sympathies.

Most of the action of the drama—which is, beyond question, the most superb battle spectacle ever produced—takes place during the closing days of the war, when Gen. Warren's soldiers are suffering from the lack of supplies. Burton is forced by his superior officers to use his intimacy with the Warren family in carrying a ruse which leads to the defeat of the supply trains coming to the relief of the Confederate army. When he is captured, Agatha, still loving him in spite of herself, offers him the means of escape which he is too proud to accept. The timely surrender of Lee at Appomatox is all that saves him from being shot.

The sequel to these stirring events is the ultimate reunion of the lovers. "The Warrens of Virginia" ran for more than a year at the Belasco Theatre in New York City and is acknowledged to be one great classic of the American Civil War, showing the true motives of both sides and the sorrows of fratricidal warfare.

THE ROYAL.

"The best physical culture act I have ever seen," said one of Peterborough's prominent athletes after witnessing The Vagges at the Royal last night. Bag punching is the special feature and it is given in a manner that will please everybody. The big picture is a vitagroph production, "The Old Flute Player," in three reels—a tender little story of modern society life. One of the funniest comedies shown here is "Suspicious Characters," showing Arthur Hausman and William Wadsworth. The other films are all good.

THE TIZ-IT.

Mary Pickford, Owen Moore and Hugh Dougal are three movie stars in a breezy comedy entitled "Mary's Patients" at this theatre. A three-part feature "The Toil of the Warpath" has a beautiful setting, a pretty story running through it, and stirring action in western country. The new ventilation system is a big improvement and is much appreciated by patrons.

An old grey nag, with a droop and drag,
Drew up at the curb to-day;
And, as horses talk, as well as balk,
We heard the old steed say:

"Where are the friends, the good old friends
I knew in the days gone by?
The Bills and Petes of the city streets
Are gone—but here am I.

"The motor rage of this speed-mad age
Has driven them all away,
Till now I'm classed with the hazy past
And known as the Lonesome Grey.

'I gaze to the right and my only sight
Is motors of divers style:
I look to the left and my soul's bereft
Of even an old pal's smile.

"And now I hear — with loss of cheer —
They're to have a motor show
Like the horses had in the golden, glad Old days of the long ago.

THE BABY'S WELFARE A MOTHER'S DREAD

A fear clutches at the heart of the mother that her own little one may not live long. She dreads its second summer, or that it may never wake from its sound sleep. All mankind loves a mother—loves to see a mother love her child. A baby and its mother are insured against ill-health if the mother takes Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription, a tonic for women that Dr. R. V. Pierce invented nearly a half century ago for women's ills. This is a vegetable tonic, made only of the herbs' roots with glycerine, which puts the female system into perfect, healthy action.

Many mothers of families in the United States have reason to be grateful to the person who recommended Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription. It is put up for the single purpose of curing disease of women. It has sold more largely on this continent than any other medicine for women. Another point in its favour: it is a temperance remedy and does not contain a single drop of alcohol nor of any narcotic.

Young mothers who preserve the charms of face and figure in spite of an increasing family and the care of growing children are always to be envied. Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription gives the strength and health upon which happy motherhood depends. It enables the mother to nourish the infant life depending on her, and enjoy the hourly happiness of watching the development of a perfectly healthy child.

LOST TERRITORY EXPECTED TO BE SOON RETAKEN

Casualties Among Canadian Officers Were Very Heavy

Peterborough Officers Numbered Among The Killed and Wounded

Major Geo. W. Bennett Killed in Gallant Charge---Was First Reported Wounded---Lieut. Harold S. Matthews Among the Wounded.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, April 28—A further list of 30 Canadian officers killed and wounded reached the Department of Militia to-night. There are five new names of officers killed in action, one officer reported killed who was previously reported as wounded, and one officer previously reported as killed is now reported alive and well. Two officers are reported as wounded and missing and 22 as wounded.

Ontario men figure largely in these additions to the roll of honor. Major G. W. Bennett of Peterborough; Capt. Walter Lockhart-Gordon of Toronto, Lieut. H. N. Klatz, of Toronto; Lieut. C. W. Day, of Kingston, and Lieut. W. Doxsee being among the killed.

There is little definite news in the possession of the department as to the number of Canadians in the hands of the Germans. The Minister of Militia has information pointing to the capture of 32 Canadians, but considerable doubt exists as to the possible extent of this list. The casualty list to-night brings the total of officers to 130 or thereabouts, and it is possible that some additions will come during the next few days. The 2nd, 3rd, 5th and 8th battalions were the chief sufferers in the list to-day.

To-day brought to the department more news of the rush for enlistment following the battle of last week. It brought also more congratulatory messages, including one to the Minister of Militia from Judge Barron, an old-time political opponent.

Offensive in France And Belgium Is Now In Hands of Allies

Despite the Strength of the German Line it is Wavering Under Repeated Attacks at Certain Points

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, April 28.—(Special cable.)—The offensive in France and Belgium passed into the hands of the allies.

Advices from half a dozen points to-day indicate that despite the strength of the German line, it is wavering under repeated assaults at certain points. The weight of the Belgian-French-British combined force in Northern France is being thrown against the elbow in the German new line around St. Julian, which, it is believed Sir John French has determined must be recaptured. The Germans have not been able to do more than dig themselves into new positions, their sappers having been unable to construct permanent entanglements, and military experts at the War Office declare that it will be possible to retake all of the lost territory without too enormous a loss of life.

The fighting along the northern line continued last night, according to reports received here. It is essential for the morale of fresh troops engaged that the German rush be discounted and fresh troops have been thrown into the line, while regiments that bore the brunt of the initial assaults are being held in reserve.

Many Canadians Died of Gas Poison and Were Not Wounded

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, April 28.—A reliable report received in London places the Canadian casualties at 2,000 in the fighting of last week, with 30 officers killed and over 160 wounded.

The British War Office in a statement last night supplementing its previous charges that the Germans in their fighting are using noxious gases says:

"Medical evidence shows that Canadian soldiers have lost their lives in the recent fighting not from wounds, but from poisoning by gases employed by the enemy."

CANADIAN REINFORCED.

A large draft of reinforcements for the Canadians has been safely landed in France, including the troops which remained at Salisbury from the first contingent, and some of the second contingent, which arrived some weeks ago at Shorncliffe.

Lady Drummond, who has been in London since the early winter engaged in Red Cross work, received late on Sunday the news that her son, Lieut. Guy Drummond, of the Montreal Highlanders, had been killed in action.

Lady Drummond, with her son's wife, has been staying at Brown's Hotel in Piccadilly. Her son's death was the second bereavement. Lady Drummond has sustained during the war, her brother, Lieut. E. W. Parker, having succumbed to pneumonia in London, while engaged in Red Cross work.

The Germans themselves declare that had it not been for the Canadian troops the allies would have had to retreat along the entire Flanders front.

The Canadians upset all the German calculations. The Kaiser's troops expected their coup to result in the quick fall of Ypres, and the capture of all the important points along the canal. Their expectations would have been fulfilled if the Canadians had not smashed into their advancing line, throwing eleven entire regiments into confusion.

Since early yesterday morning trainloads of wounded, including a number of Canadians, have been despatched to various parts of England. Reports from the hospitals say most are doing well. The most seriously wounded remain on the continent at the bases. A remarkable feature noted here is that when first the news was known on Saturday Canadians on leave rushed back to their depot anticipating that reinforcing drafts would be called up.

MAJOR GEO. W. BENNETT LED CHARGE

Was Mortally Wounded---2nd Battalion Held Position Until Relieved

Special Cable to The Examiner:

TORONTO, April 27.—A special cable late this afternoon describes the gallant charge of the Second Battalion — all Ontario men — at Ypres.

Creeping up in the early morning to within fifty yards of the German trenches, they charged.

Major Geo. W. Bennett, of Peterborough, who led the charge, fell mortally wounded. Lieut. C. W. Day, of Kingston, fell dead, with other officers and men.

The regiment was decimated, but won the trenches, driving the Germans out.

The Second Battalion held the position until relieved, though suffering terribly from wounds and lack of food and water.

The British papers say this charge will live in the annals of British history for ever.

The other Ontario regiments also did well, according to the cable.

Wounded men say the Third Battalion distinguished itself at St. Julien.

When the roll was called after the Sixteenth Highland Battalion advanced on Friday, only 300 out of 1,200 answered names.

French Cruiser "Leon Gambetta" Has Been Sunk

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, April 28.— The big French armoured cruiser Leon Gambetta of 12,352 tons displacement was tropedoed and sunk, presumably by an Austrian submarine in the Adriatic off Otrante. It is not known as yet how many of the crew were drowned, but the Minister of Marine believes some were saved.

The report of the sinking of the cruiser was contained in an official communique made public by the Minister of the Marine. It is stated that the warship was torpedoed on Monday night and that details were lacking. The Gambetta was built at Brest in 1901. She carried a crew of 725 men and had a speed of 23 knots. The armament consisted of four 7.6 inch and sixteen 4.5 guns.

Accurate measurements of ball bearings on the axles of a street car in New Jersey that had travelled about 15,000 miles, showed that they had resisted abrasion almost perfectly.

The Argentine national department of health has refused to permit telephone operators of that country to work one hour a day more than the regulation time to add to their pay.

So that automobiles can be run on railroad tracks flanged steel rims have been invented that are attached by deflating the tires and then inflating them until they grip the rims.

FOR THE KIDNEYS
A Guaranteed Treatment, Money Back If It Fails

Kidney diseases are more prevalent than is generally supposed, and are not always recognized as such. What was at first but a slight derangement of the kidneys often results in indigestion, rheumatism, anaemia, chronic and very painful headache, neuralgia, eye weakness, and other diseases of a most aggravating type. Therefore it is highly important and absolutely necessary that the kidneys and the urinary system be kept in an active and healthy condition.

After a thorough experience with the most successful forms of kidney treatment, we are confident that the one remedy which embraces the most desirable, safe and efficacious curative qualities, so necessary to the successful treatment and positive eradication of kidney diseases in general, is Rexall Kidney Pills.

We are so positive that Rexall Kidney Pills are unexcelled, and that they will do all we claim, that we sell them with our own personal guarantee that they shall not cost the user a cent if they should fail to give entire satisfaction.

We particularly recommend Rexall Kidney Pills, for kidney ailments that resist ordinary treatment. We believe, if taken according to directions with regularity and persistency for a reasonable length of time, they will positively remove all symptoms and effect permanent relief.

Surely we could not more strongly demonstrate our faith in Rexall Kidney Pills, and our generous guarantee should convince the most sceptical that we would not dare make such a statement except we know what we are talking about. ## In Defence of The Union Jack

(By E. S. H.)

Ye sons of this glorious Empire,
Your flag is imperiled by the foe.
Let the deeds of your forefathers inspire
Your hearts to arise and go.
The path of duty lies before you,
Make haste to beat the foeman back,
Like heroes who have gone before you,
In defence of the Union Jack.

Tho' mighty and strong be the foeman
Who rouses the lion from his lair.
The flag we surrender to no man,
And let the spoiler take it if he dare.
He'll find that every man is ready
To stand 'neath the banner back to back,
And every heart is true and steady
When shielding the Union Jack.

The fields may be bloody and gory,
Tho' conflict and foe be fierce as hell,
We'll fight for the honour and glory
And to protect the land we love so well.
'Tis not for might, or pomp, or power
That we are fighting back to back,
But to free the yoke of foreign power,
The friends of the Union Jack.

Then here's to the flag of old England,
The emblem of freedom, love and right,
There's Canada, Scotland and Ireland,
Australia and Wales are in the fight.
They all flock to get her as a nation,
And stand 'neath the banner back to back
And give to all hearts an inspiration,
When shielding the Union Jack.

Chorus—
In defence of the Union Jack,
In defence of the Union Jack,
For justice, liberty and homeland
We'll fight 'neath the Union Jack

Tune—'The Red, White and Blue.'

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed-up with a cold or nasty catarrh—Relief comes so quickly.

Warsaw Night Life Is Gay Amid Grewsome Reminders of the War

The Prager Tageblatt prints a letter from Ferdinand Tuchy telling of conditions of life in Warsaw, and indicating that the residents of the Polish capital are by no means worried about the war or the battles raging near them.

"It is a half hour before midnight," he writes. "The whole evening we have been sitting in the palatial 'Kwas,' listening to the dreamy music of the gypsy band, which affects one like opium. The whole scene is like the third act in a modern operetta — the brilliantly lighted restaurant, the brightly coloured uniforms of the Russian officers, that seem to harmonize with the beautiful gowns of the pretty Polish women; the laughter and the singing—all, in fact, form a scene not to be forgotten.

"As we leave the restaurant a little after midnight we find ourselves in a broad thoroughfare alive with automobiles and pedestrians in evening clothes. The officers who left the trenches at the front a few hours before are now again entering their automobiles to return as quickly as possible to the scene of the conflict.

"A gay life is led in the restaurants of Warsaw; it is somewhat similar to the scenes that took place behind the front in the Russo-Japanese war. The officers of the Czar want to taste life to the uttermost before they face death.

"Warsaw is bright and happy; and so different from London, where I found the streets dark after nine o'clock and the whole atmosphere depressing. The people here are not depressed by the war. The papers give daily the names of thousands of casualties, and wounded soldiers are seen constantly in the streets; the hospitals are filled with victims of malignant diseases, and almost daily German aeroplanes drop their deadly bombs in the city. But despite all this the people have a care free manner, and laugh and joke and eat and drink, visit the opera or go to see the rollicking comedy at the Newski Theatre, which is a great attraction for the soldiers who are on leave.

"Warsaw has accustomed itself to the war, to the German aeroplanes and to the battles raging all round the city. If bombs are thrown on the city, who cares? What a contrast there is here to England, where the war is regarded as a very serious business?

POSTAGE STAMPS.

Romances of Some of the World's Rarest Issues.

THE "DEATH MASK" MYSTERY

Curious Case of the Servian Stamp Issued After the Murder of King Alexander and Queen Draga—The One Cent British Guiana Stamp of 1856.

Not a little of the fascination which the study and collecting of postage stamps holds for enthusiasts lies in the fact that the story of their origin and subsequent history is in many cases of an exceedingly romantic character.

The single known copy of the rarest stamp in the world, valued at $10,000—the one cent British Guiana issued in 1856—was discovered by a young collector in the colony among some old family papers stored away in an attic.

Knowing nothing of its scarcity and not being favorably impressed by its appearance, he sold it to another collector for a trifling sum, the purchaser being also ignorant of his great bargain. Ultimately it found its way to Europe and now reposes in the collection of M. Philippe de la Renotiere of Paris, who purchased it many years ago.

The value of $7,250 is placed upon the famous "Postoffice Mauritius" stamp, which was crudely engraved on a small copper plate by a local watchmaker of Port Louis and issued on Sept. 21, 1847. A total of only 500 copies of each of these stamps were tediously printed off one at a time from the plate, and the majority of these were used on invitations to a ball sent out by Lady Gomm, wife of the governor of the colony.

It was not until nearly twenty years after their issue that the first two copies of these rarities were brought to light by a young stamp collector of Bordeaux. The most perfect used copy of the 2d. Postoffice Mauritius was sold by auction in 1904, and is now included in King George's collection.

To the story of the watchmaker who designed this stamp may be added that of the baker's boy who engraved a stamp of the republic of Corrientes, now forming part of the Argentine federation.

In 1855 it was decided by the authorities to issue stamps, but they could find no engraver to cut the die or prepare the plates. While one of the officials was discussing the situation with the head of the state printing office on his veranda one morning a baker's boy arrived with the daily supply of bread and, overhearing the conversation, volunteered to undertake the work, stating that before emigrating to South America he had been apprenticed to an engraver in Italy.

Ultimately the boy was given the work to do, and he turned out a stamp which, although crude, served for all the postage stamps issued in Corrientes from 1855 to 1880.

Probably few people are aware of the fact, by the way, that King George of Britain (then Prince of Wales) was responsible for the design of the 1903 postage stamps of Canada, universally acknowledge to be the most artistic stamps of the last reign. About the time of the late king's coronation the postmaster general of Canada, then on a visit to England, took the opportunity of consulting his royal highness on the subject of the proposed new issue of postage stamps for the Dominion.

The prince at once took the keenest interest in the work, designed the stamp in conjunction with a member of the Royal Philatelic society and superintended the preparation of the "master die" in England. The Edwardian stamps of Canada can therefore lay claim to the distinction of being designed by a king.

A stamp around which centers one of the foulest political crimes of modern history is the so called "death mask stamp" of Servia, issued in 1904 to commemorate the accession of King Peter I. The dastardly assassination of King Alexander and his queen, Draga, by military officers on June 11, 1903, wiped out the Obrenovitch dynasty from the throne of Servia and paved the way for the present king.

After the tragedy one of the most famous of French stamp engravers was commissioned to prepare a stamp from a design by a Servian artist, showing on a single plaque the twin profiles of Kara George, the founder of the dynasty which bears his name, and King Peter, his descendant.

The stamps were issued at the time of King Peter's coronation, in 1904, and hardly had they got into circulation when it was discovered that the "death mask" of the late King Alexander had been skillfully and subtly introduced into the design and, on the stamp being inverted, could be plainly traced in the reversed features of the two heads.

This discovery at once caused an outcry, the stratagem being ascribed to ex-Queen Nathalie, mother of the murdered king, and her supporters, but all connivance in the plot was indignantly repudiated by the engraver, and the mystery of this extraordinary happening has never been satisfactorily cleared up.—London Strand.

Wagging the Ears.

You will rarely find that a man who can wag his ears suffers from deafness. The reason for this is very simple. Wagging one's ears exercises them just as much as walking exercises the muscles of the legs. A great deal of deafness is caused by the muscles of the ears becoming stiff and refusing to respond quickly to the sound waves. Quite a large proportion of children can move their ears, just as they can move the skin on their forehead up and down, but as they grow up they lose their power through want of practice. It is a mistake to let a child lose this power, for it may mean the difference between good and bad hearing in after years. Dr. M. Fernet, the famous Paris doctor, has even gone so far as to suggest that people should be trained to wag their ears, just as they are trained to exercise any other muscles of the body.—San Francisco Chronicle.

AN EASY WAY TO GET FAT AND BE STRONG

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on dragging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract assimilates the food you eat.

Thanks to the remarkable new scientific discovery, it is now possible to combine into simple form the very elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This master-stroke of modern chemistry is called Sargol and has been termed the greatest of flesh-builders. Sargol aims through its re-generative, reconstructive powers to coax the stomach and intestines to literally soak up the fattening elements of your food and pass them into the blood, where they are carried to every starved, broken-down cell and tissue of your body. You can readily picture the result when this amazing transformation has taken place and you notice how your cheeks fill out, hollows about your neck, shoulders and bust disappear and you take on from 10 to 20 pounds of solid, healthy flesh. Sargol is absolutely harmless, inexpensive, efficient. Leading druggists of Peterborough and vicinity have it and will refund your money if you are not satisfied, as per the guarantee found in every package.

Caution:—While Sargol has given excellent results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles it should not be taken by those who do not wish to gain ten pounds or more.

COLOSSAL CANOPUS.

If It Were Our Sun It Would Take Over Eight Hours to Rise.

Of all the twenty first magnitude stars the inherent glory of Rigel and Canopus is the greatest. Only two are farther than they, while the other sixteen are very much nearer.

Estimates give the light of Rigel as equal to that of 22,000 suns and that of Canopus as 55,000.

Assuming that their general surface brilliancy is the same as that of the sun and recalling that Rigel has at least 22,000 and Canopus 55,000 times the light of the sun, the square root of these figures gives us Rigel's diameter as 150 and Canopus' 235 times that of the sun.

Whereas the sun's diameter, as seen in the sky, measures one-half a degree, Canopus', at the same distance, would measure 117½ degrees of the 180 that reach from horizon to horizon, and its disk would cover 55,225 times the sky area occupied by the sun. Canopus would be nearly eight hours in rising.

With such a globe brought so near, all life on the earth would instantly perish, seas would be converted into steam, and the very mountains would melt with fervent heat and flow like molten iron. Beside such facts our corner of the universe seems diminutive, dull and insignificant.

These two marvelous orbs have been found among a group of twenty to which they belong. Out of the million million stars known to exist only twenty, for aught we know, might yield similar specimens. Nothing proves that such worlds are rare.—Scientific American

MOHAMMED V. TIRED.

Sultan of Turkey Wants To Abdicate If Capital Is Moved.

PARIS, April 17. — The Dedeaghatch, Bulgaria, correspondent of The Temps sends the following despatch regarding a Turkish imperial Council, held in Constantinople:

"An Imperial Council, over which the Sultan presided, was held at Constantinople. The possibility of the transfer of the capital was discussed.

"Crown Prince Yussef Izzeddin severely criticized the policy of Enver Pasha and the Young Turks and their actions shortly before the war. The Sultan was greatly dejected. He said he owed to the Young Turks and their revolution his accession to the throne and would rather not have reigned than see the country go to ruin.

"The Sultan declared that he had decided to abdicate in case a transfer of the capital became necessary, in fact preferred now to be relieved of power, and would be happy if Prince Yussef Izzeddin could succeed him immediately.

"Other members of the dynasty expressed the opinion that the present was unfavorable for a change, as the accession of the prince who was hostile to the policy of Enver Pasha could provoke grave interior complications."

DEADLY SUBMARINES.

Menace of the Machines That Strike the Enemy in the Dark.

Submarines have many elements which make them a dangerous menace, but there are also many weaknesses which partially offset their offensive qualities. Traveling under water, they are invisible from ships except as the periscope is shot above the surface to reconnoiter. But they are quite easily seen from air craft, even when maneuvering at a great depth. They are unattackable by gunfire, except when they come to the surface, when their frail structure makes them particularly liable to sudden destruction. As they cannot be seen, they cannot be attacked by torpedoes from the ships they are after, but if the periscope comes up and the submarine is thus located she is liable to gunfire and torpedo attack and to being rammed or run down.

The limited view from the periscope, due to its restricted elevation above the water surface, makes it almost hopeless to attempt an attack in darkness. But the little vessel can travel long distances at night and be ready at break of dawn to spread destruction broadcast. The submarine can easily avoid a blockading fleet by passing beneath it. As its motions cannot be followed with the eye, the submarine possesses to an unusual degree the essential elements for delivering a surprise attack.

One of the chief means of dodging submarines is to keep continually on the move, changing direction frequently and keeping a sharp lookout for the spying periscope.—Leslie's.

NERVE IN GOLF.

Vardon's Shot That Won a Match That Was Considered Lost.

In the American Magazine Jerome D. Travers writes on Vardon, whom he calls the greatest golfer. One year Vardon played over a hundred grilling matches over the longest and toughest British courses and averaged 74 for the season. In the following extract Travers describes what he considers Vardon's best shot:

"Except with the putter there seemed to be no shot in golf beyond Vardon's magic. I will explain with one striking example just what I mean: In one of his championship battles he had come to the seventeenth hole at a tie with one of his rivals for the top. His drive here traveled a trifle farther than he had calculated and found a deep rut in a road crossing the course. His opponent, playing first, was nicely on the green in two for a sure four. It seemed that Vardon was beaten to a certainty. His ball was six inches below the top of the ground in a deep, narrow rut. And the green was 140 yards away.

"Vardon took out a heavy niblick and, in place of playing to one side to be sure to get out, took his stance in the direction of the pin and brought his club down with terrific force. To the wonder of the big gallery, the ball rose almost straight in the air and then, with the forward spin imparted, sailed on to within ten feet of the cup. The other man got his four, but Vardon got his three, winning a match that had been practically lost."

Filipinos and Chickens.

The fact that no Filipino of the common class regards himself equipped for living without at least one male chicken explains why the islands, although raising so many chickens, still import millions of dozens of eggs. As in all cockfighting countries, the fighting bird in the Philippines is a personal pet which the owner carries about during practically every idle moment of the day and on which he lavishes enough care to raise many laying hens. Duck eggs are rarely found in the market except as "balutes"—that is, eggs on the point of hatching, boiled, a form in which eggs are commonly eaten by the Filipinos. They are sold for lunches at all railway stations and at other points where crowds gather.—Argonaut.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Grey, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural colour and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or grey; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this old, famous recipe, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the grey hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

EQUALITY IN TRENCHES

Future King Hands Around His Tobacco Pouch Generously

Reports from the front state that the Prince of Wales is continually in the trenches amongst the Tommies, with whom he does not hesitate to share the contents of his tobacco pouch. In this he is only following in his father's footsteps, as many an old Bluejacket could relate.

Many years ago the present King was a lieutenant on board H.M.S. Alexandra, at that time flying the flag of his uncle, the late Duke of Edinburgh, commander-in-chief of the Mediterranean fleet. Prince George, as he was then, was very fond of seining, and never missed an opportunity of taking the gun-room officers away on a seining excursion. On one such occasion, somewhere round the Grecian Archipelago, the cutter was laying alongside full up with the young bloods of the gun-room, of whom the present Vice-Admiral Sir David Beatty was one.

The "blood boat" (jolly boat) was laying astern with the seine net neatly coiled down on gratings fixed over the stern sheets, all ready for casting as soon as the boats reached shore. Everything was ready, and the party only waited for the Prince, when the coxswain of the cutter ent running up the accommodation ladder evidently with the intention of going inboard; at the top of the ladder he ran into the Prince, just coming out.

"Hullo," said the future king, "where are you going?" "Just to get my pipe and baccy, sir," replied the petty officer. "Oh! we can't wait for that now," replied Prince George, "everybody is ready." Then seeing the look of disappointment on the man's face, he put his hand in his pocket and pulled out his cigar case, with, "Help yourself out of this." And now apparently the present Prince of Wales is doing exactly the same kind of thing!

Cash With Victoria Cross

The Victoria Cross carries, in the case of private soldiers or non-commissioned officers, a special pension of $50 a year, and this, by a comparatively recent regulation, may be increased to $250 if the holder is incapacitated from work at any time.

THE DESTROYERS

As the name implies, torpedo boat destroyers were originally built to combat the smaller torpedo boat, which had become such a serious menace to the battleships and the large cruisers that searchlights and rapid fire guns could not be depended upon for protection. Gradually, however, the duties of the destroyer were extended until they included all that was formerly done by the torpedo boat and much besides.

The mere fact that a modern destroyer is three or four times as large as one of the earlier boats renders it so much more seaworthy and capable of carrying so much more fuel that the radius of action of torpedo boat craft has been enormously increased, and they have become more and more dangerous to an enemy's fleet.

The duties of a modern flotilla may be tabulated in this way:

First.—Scouting. This comprises locating and reporting the position of the enemy and keeping in touch with him as long as may be necessary.

Second.—Protection of one's own fleet from night attacks of the enemy's destroyers. This includes not only locating and reporting the position of the hostile torpedo craft, but, if necessary, attacking them with your guns and sinking or driving them away before they can force home an attack against battleships.

Third.—Attacking the battleship of the enemy with your torpedoes. This is, of course, the paramount duty of every vessel in the flotilla.

Fourth.—In addition to the above "regular" duties, destroyers are frequently used in what might be called "gunboat work"—patrolling the enemy's coast, running up his rivers where the big ships cannot go, overtaking and capturing his merchant vessels and firing on troops and field batteries ashore.

Meat For the Empire

It is stated that the Australian Commonwealth could in itself undertake to furnish all the meat needed by the British armies for the next year or two, and, given fair seasons, soon recover from such a drain upon her livestock resources. There are at present upwards of 90,000,000 sheep and some 12,000,000 cattle in Australia.

Could Hardly Straighten Up For The Pain In Her Back.

Many women suffer from an excruciating pain in the back. They are not even able to look after the common duties of their housework, and cannot even walk at times.

The whole trouble is that the kidneys have become affected, and when the kidneys get "out of kilter" the whole system becomes deranged. On the first sign of a weak, lame, aching back you should not neglect it, for if you do, you may be sure that some serious kidney trouble will follow.

What you want is a kidney medicine, for kidneys only. This you will find in Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's Kidney Pills know nothing but kidney disorders, because they're made for kidneys only.

Mrs. George Craigie, Rose Valley, P.E.I., writes: "I am writing to tell you what a wonderful cure Doan's Kidney Pills did for me. I was suffering with a lame back, and for several days I could hardly straighten up for the pain. I had used quite a lot of other kind of pills, but received no relief. Just then my sister told me about what "Doan's" had done for her, so I decided to try them. I used three boxes and I am completely cured. I do not hesitate to recommend them to all."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c a box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

USING THE BAYONET

Careful Instruction Given the Boys in Khaki by Experts

The British soldier excels in bayonet fighting because he is so thoroughly trained in the use of the bayonet. In the army each bayonet instructor only trains four pupils at a time, so that he can give every man individual tuition.

"Tommy's" first lesson with cold steel is to prod a padded jacket hung on a wall. He thus learns to thrust or parry and to jump forward or back. It also instils in him the important rule of always keeping his foe outside his steel blade, for once the enemy gets "inside" the point of the bayonet the soldier is practically helpless. In bayonet fighting, in fact, the whole of the rifle must be kept in front of the body, and the soldier never draws his weapon back before making a thrust.

After learning to attack, the soldier is taught how to defend himself against an onslaught by bayonet. He has to move his rifle quickly from right to left to throw aside a bayonet thrust at his chest. If the attack is made low he swings down his rifle to parry it, his bayonet being slightly embedded in the turf. One of the most difficult forms of bayonet attack to combat is that known as the "Throw point." The soldier throws himself down on his left hand or his knee and gives an upward thrust with his bayonet, generally with disastrous results to his foe, unless the latter unarms his adversary with a sharp blow from his own weapon.

At first recruits find it difficult to make the quick, short jabs characteristic of bayonet fighting, but their clumsiness is overcome by means of an ingenious machine. A square frame of wood about 10 feet high is erected in the ground, and down the centre runs a wire on which are threaded a number of balls composed of thickly-woven straw. A mechanical device releases them, and as they travel down the guide wire in rapid succession the man with the bayonet has to stab each one of them with a quick movement, withdrawing his instrument in time to hit the sphere following closely behind. The advantage of this machine is that not only does it teach accurate bayonet work, but it develops the muscles of the wrist necessary to withdraw the weapon immediately it has completed its deadly work.

SAW DUEL IN AIR

Bombardier Steele of Peterboro' Watched Aviators Battle

Corporal J. Coppock, of the Peterboro' company of the 39th Battalion, received a letter from his friend, Bombardier Steele of the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, C.F.A., First Contingent, in which Bombardier Steele said: I guess you know I cannot let you know what part we are in, but anyway we are here all right. We are staying on farms, sleeping in lofts and anywhere we can get. We all try to get the softest spot, you bet your life on that. There is a little excitement going on out here at present. I saw an aeroplane duel yesterday that was worth seeing. It was between a German and a Frenchman, and the latter was one too many for the German and brought him down. The kitchen of the farm where I am staying is full of bullet holes, where the English drove out the Germans. You see some awful things here, I can tell you. I am writing this on my saddle within sound of the guns which are popping off some.

PLEASED THE CZAR

Badly Scared Tailor Made a Uniform Under Strange Circumstances

An amusing account is given of the circumstances that attended the ordering of a military uniform by the Czar of Russia from a little Jewish tailor. The Czar wished to wear the uniform of the Crimean Dragoons, but did not have one with him. He noticed, however, that the colonel of the regiment wore a uniform that fitted beautifully, and learned that the name of his tailor was Khaim Kurichkess.

There was still time to have a uniform made, and the Czar commanded that the tailor be brought to him. When a handsome motor car stopped outside the Kurichkess door, there was surprise and alarm in the household, which consisted of father and mother and nine children. A cloaked officer descended, and said in staccato sentences to the dumbfounded tailor:

"You must come with me! Don't be frightened! You'll know later where I'm taking you! You'll be away for several days! I can't leave without you; we've lost time already! Get dressed quickly!"

Kurichkess obeyed. He was driven to a house where a general of gendarmerie, who showed a surprising knowledge of his antecedents, cross-examined him as to his identity.

When the excited tailor was ushered into the Royal study, the Czar looked up from a document he was reading, and said:

"Oh, you are here already. You are Khaim Kurichkess, the tailor. I want you to make me a uniform of the Crimean Dragoons. Do your best, and see that it is a good fit."

When his work was finished, and the Czar was pleased with the fit, Kurichkess refused to accept anything in payment, but the colonel insisted that, according to law, he was obliged to receive fifty roubles for his expenses. Moreover, the Minister of the Court was aware that Kurichkess was in debt, and had ordered the officer to give the tailor an envelope containing three hundred roubles.

Kurichkess was driven home in a motor, and some days later an Imperial messenger brought to his shop a case containing a gold watch and chain. The double eagle was engraved on the watch, which also bore the inscription, "To Khaim Kurichkess, for zeal."

A MAGNETIC TORPEDO

Deadly Missile Which, it is Claimed Will Follow Its Prey

It is said that the belligerent nations are much interested in the recent invention by a young American of a torpedo which, according to its maker, is more effective than any other ever used. By means of a magnetic electrical device, which is affected by any great mass of metal, the rudders guiding the torpedo are also affected in such a way that it will steer in that direction. So sensitive is this device that if the missile be discharged at a ship at a range of two or three or even five miles that ship is doomed. The torpedo has two arms of nickel silver attached on either side, projecting at right angles. At the ends of these arms are wire magnetic coils, about four inches in diameter. Upon these magnetic coils hinges the success of the torpedo. A high-frequency current passes through them, and the presence of any great mass of metal charges the self-induction which affects the electrical relays, and these in turn operate the motor controlling the rudder. So the torpedo will follow its target, and will steer for it, no matter how often the target may change its course or position.

SOLDIERS' NIGHTMARES

Dreams of Live Shells and Night Alarms Disturb Fighters' Rest

The terrific strain imposed on the nerves of fighting men, which nowadays is rendered greater by the deafening explosions of high-powered shells, causes soldiers, and especialy those wounded, to suffer from torturing nightmares. An ambulance worker who has studied the subject of soldiers' nerves states that a common form of nightmare is for a soldier to dream that he is wandering through endless trenches as complicated as an artificial maze, or that he is picking his way through forests whence all but him had fled. At night the slightest noise during sleep calls up visions of exploding shells or the tramp of armed men to the unnerved soldier, and he will cry out in terror, although when actually in the firing line he displays great courage. Dreams of night alarms trouble his sleep, and in this connection the soldier has terrifying visions of being unable to find his clothes or weapons when the imaginary call to arms flits across his troubled brain.

Another common night terror to the soldier is to dream that a live shell is lying in his bed and about to burst, and with such nightmares the victim imagines himself powerless to move his limbs in getting rid of the projectile.

One of the most terrible nightmares which afflicts the nerve-shattered soldier is that in which he imagines that he is unable to withdraw his bayonet from an enemy's body, although he desires to use it to keep off menacing forms all around him.

Pen Mightier Than Sword?

The editor of the German paper, The Fatherland, published in New York, is vociferous in his upholding of the German cause. Yet about five years ago he published a book, "The Confessions of a Barbarian," in which he said: "Somewhere in Germany there is a warrant sworn out for my apprehension. Somewhere the public prosecutor peers across the sea with a spy-glass. The German Empire, strangely enough, regards me still as her subject. She clings to me with the tenacity of a woman. I think she accuses me of desertion. A uniform, spick and span, and with brass buttons, is waiting for me, but I don't want it." And he apparently still retains that dislike for the German uniform.

whose name might easily lead one to think he was a Frenchman, is commander of a German infantry brigade.

KITCHENER'S FAVORITE

A well known soldier once said, "If Kitchener ever has to send for anybody in a hurry it will be Rundle," and these words proved true when "K. of K." instructed Sir Leslie Rundle, the Governor of Malta, to return to England to take command of the Fifth British Army. No one was surprised, for the War Secretary Commander-in-Chief had long been an admirer of the military genius of the soldier who was his righthand man in the Soudan. Sir Leslie, like his brother-in-law, Sir Francis Wingate, and Sir Archibald Hunter, spent many years of his career under the guidance of Kitchener. Possibly this is why he has much of the Kitchener manner.

Sir Leslie Rundle has had nearly forty years of soldiering. Although his ancestors, who date from the Elizabethan period, were mostly sailors—his father was a naval captain and his mother a sailor's daughter—the commander of the Fifth Army made up his mind to be a soldier almost before he left the nursery.

He was trained at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, and later was drafted into the Royal Artillery. He fought in the Zulu War, the Boer War of 1881, and the Garnet Wolseley campaigns in Egypt, and was Adjutant-General under Kitchener during the Khartoum Expedition. In the last South African War Sir Leslie commanded a division, and it is interesting to note that in this campaign Sir Archibald Hunter outstripped Sir Leslie Rundle in the race for promotion after a rivalry of many years. Rundle and Archibald Hunter became brevet majors, brevet lieutenant-colonels, brevet colonels, and major-generals each on the same day as the other.

Although in military circles Sir Leslie has earned a reputation as a grim, unsentimental campaigner, he is a popular society "lion," and in the past he has been the delight of many a country house party, keeping everyone amused by his practical jokes and endless fun.

OWES HER LIFE TO "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

Cured Both Stomach Trouble and Headaches

PALMERSTON, ONT., JUNE 20th, 1913.

"I really believe that I owe my life to "Fruit-a-tives". Ever since childhood, I have been under the care of physicians and have been paying doctor's bills. I was so sick and worn out that people on the street often asked me if I thought I could get along without help. The same old Stomach Trouble and distressing Headaches nearly drove me wild. Sometime ago, I got a box of "Fruit-a-tives" and the first box did me good. My husband was delighted and advised a continuation of their use.

Today, I am feeling fine, and a physician meeting me on the street, noticed my improved appearance and asked the reason. I replied, "I am taking Fruit-a-tives". He said, "Well, if Fruit-a-tives are making you look so well, go ahead and take them. They are doing more for you than I can".

MRS. H. S. WILLIAMS.

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box. 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

HINTS FOR THE HOME.

When steaming potatoes put a cloth over them before puting the lid on. They will take much less time to cook, and be much more mealy than when done in the ordinary way.

A piece of white oilcloth placed at the foot of dark stairs will warn those who are descending that the last stair is reached, and thus save an unpleasant fall or jar to the system.

Before using a new saucepan add a lump of soda and some potato peelings and let it boil for some hours. Then wash out thoroughly, and all danger from poisoning from the tin lining will be gone.

A man should begin to push himself forward in the world when he is young. The roads to success in life are open to every youth, and it entirely depends upon himself whether he gets on well or not.

When lemons are hard cover them with boiling water and stand them aside to cool. They will then appear fresh and full of juice. Neither will the juice seem in the least diluted by any water absorbed.

THE CONGESTION FROM A BAD COLD LOOSENED UP IN ONE HOUR

If Rubbed on at Night You're Well Next Morning.

Nerviline Never Fails.

When that cold comes, how is it to be cured? This method is simplicity itself. Rub the chest and throat vigorously with "Nerviline". Rub it in good and deep. Lots of rubbing can't do any harm. Then put some Nerviline in the water and use it as a gargle; this will ease the cough, cut out the phlegm, assist in breaking up the cold quickly.

There is no telling how quickly Nerviline breaks up a hard racking cough, eases a tight chest, relieves a pleuritic pain. Why, there isn't another liniment with half the power, the penetrative qualities, the honest merit that has made Nerviline the most popular American household liniment.

A large 50c bottle of Nerviline cures ills of the whole family, and makes doctor's bill small. Get it to-day. The large size is more economical than the 25c trial size. Sold by all dealers everywhere, or direct from the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

Germans Free French Captives on Promise to Work for Peace

The sending back to France of French prisoners by the Germans, and supplying them with money on the promise that they urge a demonstration for peace is one of the things charged against the Kaiser by the French. In support of this contention they give the name of a petty officer who told them of the scheme, as well as the man who sent him. In telling the story the Figaro says:

"Among the many various methods employed by the Kaiser to urge peace upon us one of the strangest was told to us by a French petty officer. This man was made a prisoner in December near Saint Mihiel, and recently he arrived at Pontarlier, free, armed with false Belgian papers and supplied with money from the Germans. Here is the story:

"After having been taken a prisoner to Metz some one arranged for him to have a talk with a German socialist named Sudekum. This man said that France was merely serving the interest of England, while she could have an understanding with Germany. This could be easily done through the medium of the socialists. A common letter, he said, could be sent to the proletariat of both countries.

"The petty officer agreed to return to France. He was told that if the first trip was successful he would be sent out again to organize a campaign for peace by means of pamphlets and placards. Then he was to look into the possibility of starting a revolutionary movement in Mid-France. After certain indications that the petty officer favoured the scheme he was told of others who had been sent back to France with the same object.

"Every day, like Charlemagne, William II. has sent these 'missi dominici.' If all those engaged in the scheme of the agent Sudekum are recruited from among the French prisoners it will at least have the advantage of making them very happy. What good fortune for a petty officer who has the evil outlook of a wet and frozen prison camp before him to be charged with such a mission.

"We cannot be too much in sympathy with those of our unfortunate compatriots who work themselves into the good graces of Herr Sudekum and seize quickly on the opportunity of coming back bringing the lesson which has been taught to them by this most interesting man. The Germans are giving enough evil proofs of their rotten methods by a ruse of such a sort that it would not be countenanced in decent warfare."

MAKE THE BEST OF THINGS.

When wearied with household cares and disgusted with your lack of time for more congenial affairs, don't forget that the one business of life with most men is to provide for current expenses, and that many men work early and late at it, who find it difficult to keep under control the strong desire to be something more than mere money-making machines.

I say it is no more than right that the wives of such men should carry burdens also; and that it would be manifestly unfair to expect to be relieved from even household drudgery until the husband is relieved from office or shop drudgery.

The people who accomplish the most in any department of life, are not the complaining ones, but those who cheerfully put their shoulder to the wheel and push; who know how to direct work, because they know how to do the work themselves.

It in no sense lowers one's dignity or lessens one's power, to do work in one's own house. It is imperative that the work be done, and if not able to afford a housemaid, then do it yourself and bring to your daily tasks executive ability. Such a life has its advantages, as well as its drawbacks, and such a housewife can at least congratulate herself upon being rid of directions and putting up with unruly servants.

If there were more practical housewives, able hired girls to do their own housework, some would not be so overbearingly independent.

A life saving buoy invented in Germany is hammock shaped and large enough for a man to lie in and paddle himself along.

SEIZED WITH PARALYSIS COULD NOT WALK

Most Extraordinary Cure Effected by the Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

To have the nervous system paralyzed, to be unable to walk and scarcely able to talk, and then to be completely cured, is not a usual experience, but Mr. Hyatt tells in this letter what he passed through. Doctors told him that his case was hopeless, and when they gave up he turned to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and obtained complete cure.

Mr. Avery Hyatt, blacksmith, St. Anns, Lincoln Co., Ont., writes: "I am a blacksmith by trade and ten years ago became afflicted with paralysis. I could not walk or read or write, and could talk with difficulty, so that it was a hard matter to understand anything that I would say. Being only a young man I was nearly discouraged. Two doctors told me it was brought on by overwork, and that my case was hopeless.

"One day my father read about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and advised me to try it. I bought 12 boxes, and when the fifth was used I saw that I was getting better. By the time the 12 boxes were used I was cured. I am well and strong and working every day, thanks to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

This statement is certified to by Mr. Elmon J. Hodgkins, J.P.

No ailment is more dreaded than paralysis. And yet how few people realize that paralysis of the nerves is only the natural result of neglected nervous troubles.

At first you do not sleep well, have nervous headaches or indigestion, find yourself easily irritated and annoyed, can hear noises which in good health you would never notice. You do not consider yourself sick, and yet you lack the usual energy and vigour and feel out of sorts.

Restore the nerves by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. All dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

SIMPLE, SMART SHIRT WAIST.

By Anabel Worthington.

Hardly anything nowadays is smart without being simple, and this waist is no exception. Much of its good effect will depend upon the material selected. In crepe de China, pussy willow taffeta or satin it would be exquisite; but among the wash fabrics there are a number that could be used quite as successfully, such as organdy, voile, linen and lawn. Most of these cotton wash fabrics can be obtained this year with printed designs or stripes, and these are lovely for shirt waists. In fifteen cent lawn or voile this waist could be developed at a price not exceeding fifty cents.

There are two plaits each side of front, held in place by the shoulder seam of the back, which comes well forward. The collar terminates at this seam, leaving the front of the neck open and unrestricted, a feature which will be appreciated later in the season particularly. The pattern, No. 7,095, can be obtained in sizes from 34 to 44 inches bust measure.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 15c.

Went For Cat; Got Bad Shock.

FORT WILLIAM, Ont., April 27.—Norman Taylor, chief engineer of the tug Morrison, is in the hospital in a very serious condition as a result of burns and shock received when he came in contact with an electric power line containing 22,000 volts, late Sunday night.

Taylor climbed one of the high poles for a cat which had run up to the cross arms. When he reached the top he placed one hand on the cat at the same time his foot came in contact with a ground wire running down the pole. He was knocked off and fell horribly burned. The cat was burned to a cinder.

Warnings To Italy.

ROME, April 27.—(Via Paris.)—An energetic campaign is being conducted in the Italian press on behalf of the allies. Every day there appear telegrams from Petrograd warning Italy that if she does not soon intervene she will lose everything. It is said the allies have decided to give nothing, in case they are victorious, to a neutral power which, in the words of Jules Cambon, the French diplomat, "rushes to succor the victor."

The newspapers also publish long reproductions from the French press stating that Italy's participation in the war is imminent.

THIERFELDER GIVES UP.

Captain of Kronprinz Wilhelm Will Intern His Ship.

WASHINGTON, April 27. — Lieut. Captain Thierfelder, commander of the German commerce raider, Kronprinz Wilhelm, late yesterday informed Collector of Customs Hamilton, at Newport News, Va., that he would intern his ship for the war in American waters.

The commander presented this note: "Herewith I have to officially inform you that I intern."

No explanation accompanied the communication, but later the German commander said he had intended to attempt a dash past the allied warships off the Virginia Capes, but that the illness of more than sixty of his sailors with beri-beri would make that impossible before expiration of the time that the U. S. Government granted to make his cruiser seaworthy.

Argentina To Extend Trade.

NEW YORK, April 27. — The establishment of a new steamship line between New York and Buenos Ayres, financed by business men of Argentina and subsidized by the Argentine Government, has been provided for, according to Ricardo Coll, editor of The Buenos Ayres La Razon, who reached New York yesterday aboard the British steamer Tennyson.

Mr. Coll said the project would be discussed at the Pan-American financial conference to be held in Washington May 24.

Word was received here yesterday to this effect.

MAKING FOR HALIFAX.

German Fleet On Way to Bombard Port, Says Capt. Brauch.

PORTLAND, Ore., April 27.—Headed for the Atlantic coast of Canada is a German squadron, bent on bombarding important cities and fortifications there, according to a letter received yesterday by Capt. Carl Brauch, master of the German bark Dalbek, interned here since July 23, from a friend who is a deck officer of the German navy.

"Eight days before the German fleet bombarded Scarborough, Hartlepool, and other ports, received a letter from the same friend telling me that the German fleet would strike for the British coast, and I thought that statement was laughable," said Capt. Brauch. "Since it came to pass I am convinced that the move of the squadron to the Canadian coast may not be a myth." The letter has been on the way since March 24.

Austrians Fighting Desperately In Uzok Pass Region.

PETROGRAD, April 27. — Operations in the eastern theatre of the war are now confined for the most part to the Carpathian region. Few and unimportant movements are possible in Poland because the roads are impassible.

Defeated in their repeated attempts to turn the Russian flanks, the Austro-German forces, under Gen. Litzinger, are now concentrating their attacks on the Russian centre in the region of the Uszok, the village of Polena being the key of the position. While the Austrian official report announces the defeat of the Russians in their attack on the heights of Ostry and before the Uzok Pass, the Russian official despatch last night reports a victory over the enemy.

WHY ITALY HESITATES

Following is an extract from a new book, "Germany's Isolation," by Prof. Rohrbach, which has just been translated by Paul H. Phillipson of the University of Chicago and published by A. C. McClung & Co. The author is a professor of colonial economy in the Commercial academy of Berlin.

(By Paul Rohrbach.)

A glance at the may of Italy and the balance of her foreign trade will suffice to explain her compliant attitude to England's demand. The Italian coast is exposed to the attack of every hostile navy which is superior to that of Italy.

The most important Italian railroad lines, the arteries of her traffic on land, run along the coast. Her whole industrial life can be vitally affected by a superior naval force of her enemy. Italy's exports amount to about $500,000,000; her imports, according to official statistics, to $700,000,000, more or less. Her greatest trading activity is the oversea countries.

Among the articles of import are grain and seed valued at $90,000,000; cotton and cotton textiles at $80,000,000; coal at almost $60,000,000; meat and vegetable food products, except grain, at $40,000,000; raw material, except coal, at $100,000,000.

From these figures it seems plain that Italy faces economic ruin if her supply is cut off. But, above all, Italy has no coal mines, all her coal for industrial purposes, for railroads, and navigation being supplied by England. In the light of these facts her motives for acquiescing in England's threatening demands may be clearly understood. Of course, a daring and far-reaching policy might have safely offset all scruples and risks by the great thought of an Italian North Africa.

Italy's net loss by emigration within the last five years averaged almost a half million souls annually—a number large enough within a decade to settle the present French North Africa with Italian colonists. This and nothing else constitutes the plan of a future greater Italy, cherished by all far-seeing Italians, an idea far loftier and greater than the time-worn Italia Irredenta, the unredeemed Italy, which is inhabited by Italians under foreign, particularly Austrian, rule.

The question, no less than all others, will be automatically settled in the great accounting to which all Europe has been subjected. And yet Italy ought to consider that only as a friend of Germany and Austria-Hungary she is likely to attain the goal of her one desire.

An English-French victory would not let her rise above a second or even third rate power in the Mediterranean sea, while as a member of the triple alliance she may become a world power. However, great fortitude is demanded to attain great ends.

It cannot be too often repeated that the strength of the two allied powers, above all that of Germany, depends upon the army, which derives its power from the perfect union of government and governed, upon the excellence of the army itself, and upon the impossibility of reducing Germany and Austria-Hungary to starvation.

Germany raises sufficient farm products and her supply of live stock is more than ample. All necessary minerals, such as coal and iron ore, are dug from her own mines. Gas, electricity, and steam power can be generated as required; arms and munitions of war can be manufactured without foreign help and in unlimited quantities. Petroleum and similar products are supplied by Galicia and Roumania in sufficient quantities for military purposes.

The shutting down of extensive industrial activities and the subsequent unemployment of millions of workmen are, of course, a grave calamity. It must be repeated that a danger of complete paralysis can grow out of these distressing conditions only if those who even during the war draw an income from either property or labour fail to shave it with their less fortunate countrymen. If for reasons such as these Germany is compelled to conclude a disastrous peace, she does, indeed, deserve no better fate.

But the Germans may face the future with calamness and intrepidity; for it is impossible to break the armed forces of a power such as united Germany and Austria-Hungary. To bring this about, the Germans would have to be faced by enemies who are their superiors in point of number and at least their equals in political uniformity, national enthusiasm, all around excellence of military institutions, and in the moral strength of their reason for war.

HOW TO PREVENT ACID STOMACHS

AND FOOD FERMENTATION.

By a Stomach Specialist.

As a specialist who has spent many years in the study and treatment of stomach troubles, I have been forced to the conclusion that most people who complain of stomach trouble possess stomachs that are absolutely healthy and normal. The real trouble, that which causes all the pain and difficulty, is excessive acid in the stomach, aggravated by food fermentation. Hyperacidity irritates the delicate lining of the stomach and food fermentation causes wind which distends the stomach abnormally, causing that full bloated feeling. Thus both acid and fermentation interfere with and retard the process of digestion. The stomach is usually healthy and normal, but irritated almost past endurance by these foreign elements—acid and wind in all such cases—and they comprise over 90 per cent. of all stomach difficulties—the first and only step necessary is to neutralise the acid and stop the fermentation by taking in a little warm or cold water immediately after eating, from one to two teaspoonfuls of bisurated magnesia, which is doubtless the best and only really effective antacid and food corrective known. The acid will be neutralised and the fermentation stopped almost instantly, and your stomach will at once proceed to digest the food in a healthy, normal manner. Be sure to ask your druggist for the bisurated magnesia, as I have found other forms utterly lacking in its peculiarly valuable properties.—F. J. G.

New York to Wage War on the Quacks

hTe country-wide chain of quacks, dominated by amillionaire chicago family, which has been duping thousands and is declared to have cleared $1,000,000 a year, has been the subject of conferences with United States authorities following wholesale arrests in the city's raids.

Pitiful stories of extortion have been brought out by the arrests. Victims have come forward from all parts of the city and told how, in many cases, they gave up life savings and all the money they could borrow on promises to be cured of all the diseases known to medical science.

Besides the paraphernalia of natural history museums and fake appliances, the authorities have seized quantities of medicine distributed. Most of its is harmless, but in some cases heroinn and cocaine are declared to have been found. This is expected to be made the basis of separate charges.

Four Out on Bail.

New disclosures are expected at the hearing on Wednesday of four of the fifty-seven men caught in the city's dragnet. They have been released under bail furnished by a bonding company.

Patients who were exploited were heard by Dr. George Whiteside, of No. 27 William street, counsel for the County Medical Society. They told of paying sums ranging from $5 to hundreds of dollars for "treatment."

A woman patient of Dr. Henry J. Schierson, of No. 315 Madison avenue, was told she could be cured of cancer in three months for $60. She paid $56, $50 of which was borrowed. The woman's husband is a stableman earning $13 a week.

A girl was "suffering from a bad nerve in the back of the neck," and underwent treatment four months for $125 at the Schierson place, she said. Ninety dollars was paid without benefit to the patient's health.

'A bad case of kidney trouble" was undertaken for $60. The patient was out of work and borrowed the money.

One Man Confesses.

The police and medical society officials also supplemented their evidence against the arrested "physicians" by a confession from Dr. Frank Thompson Brough, of Hackensack, N.J., arrested in the museum of Dr. Franklin P. Hannon, No. 46 East Fourteenth street.

Brough was closeted with Mrs. Marian K. Clark, chief investigator for the State Bureau of Industries and Immigration, for hours. Secrets of the medical specialists' trust were divulged.

"The Hannon office and th eoffice of Dr. Ward, at No. 216 West Thirty-fourth street, were operated from Chicago,' it was said at Mr. Whiteside's office "A man named Dick Williams managed the places in New York.'

Mr. Whiteside said a charte of the city, with 100 suspicious physicians located thereon, has been drawn by the County Medical Society. The gathering of evidence against these man is now under way.

Regular Physicians Employed.

Registered physicians are hired to run the Williams medicine offices, at salaries ranging from $50 to $75 a week. If the office does not take in a minimum of $4,000 a month it is promptly shut down.

FOD THE HOUSEKEEPER.

To remove white spots left by hot dishes on the dining table, use camphorated oil, rubbing it in well.

If boiled drinking water is ordered, it may be freshened by pouring it briskly from one jug to another half a dozen times.

After polishing brasses in the kitchen coat them with the oil used for mixing gold paint and they will stay clean much longer.

A flat button can be used to outline scallops for embroidering, choosing different buttons for the different scallop sizes needed.

Do not put coal on a hot fire when fixing it to keep. Take off the lids and cool it a little, by this means you save the fresh coal.

When mixing thickening for gravy, add a pinch of salt to the flour before adding the water or milk — it will be less likely to lump.

For cleaning woodwork, put into a pan of hot water a little good washing powder and two tablespoonfuls of kerosene oil. Apply with cloth and dirt will vanish like magic. Also wash windows with a cloth dampened with water to which a little kerosene has been added. Wash carefully then polish qquickly with clean, dry cloth.

USING SOAP SPOILS THE HAIR

Soap should be used very sparingly, if at all, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), it's cheaper and better than soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

TO BLEACH OUT COLOURS.

Wash the dress and place it in water to which has been added washing soda to the proportion of a lump the size of an egg to each gallon of water. Boil until the colour has entirely disappeared, rinse through several clear waters and hang in the sun to bleach.

Or give the gown a bath in javelle water, which is made as follows:

Dissolve half-pound washing soda in one pint boiling water. Add quart of boiling water, in which quarter-pound chloride of lime has been dissolved. Stir; let it settle, pour off clear, bottle and keep dark; use one cup to gallon of water in which clothes are boiled. Rinse in water to which diluted ammonia has been added.

OILCLOTH OR LINOLEUM.

After washing oilcloth and linoleum be sure to dry it properly. If left damp it will speedily rot and soon become totally ruined. It is a great mistake to use too much water for washing. The cloth should be wrung out and passed lightly over the surface.

DID CHILD WAKE UP CROSS OR FEVERISH

Look, Mother! If Tongue is Coated Give "California Syrup of Figs."

Mother! Your child isn't naturally cross and peevish. See if tongue is coated; this is a sure sign its little stomach, liver and bowels need a cleansing at once.

When listless, pale, feverish, full of cold, breath bad, throat sore, doesn't eat, sleep or act naturally, has stomach-ache diarrhoea, remember, a gentle liver and bowel cleansing should always be the first treatment given.

Nothing equals "California Syrup of Figs" for children's ills; give a teaspoonful, and in a few hours all the foul waste, sour bile and fermenting food which is clogged in the bowels passes out of the system, and you have a well and playful child again. All children love this harmless, delicious "fruit laxative," and it never fails to effect a good "inside cleansing". Directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups are plainly on the bottle.

Keep it handy in your home. A little given to-day saves a sick child to-morrow, but get the genuine. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of California Syrup of Figs," then look and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

Well Known Peterboro' Man Dies Hero's Death on Battlefield Leading His Men in a Charge That British Papers Say Will Live Forever in British History---One of the Most Zealous Efficient and Popular Officers of the Rangers Has Died for Freedom.

NO PARTICULARS ABOUT LIEUT. MATTHEWS

MAJOR GEO. W. BENNETT, 57th REGIMENT, KILLED IN ACTION.

LIEUT. HAROLD S. MATTHEWS, PETERBOROUGH, WOUNDED.

The war came home to Peterborough last night when the wires brought the messages recorded above. Up to that stage the feeling in the city had been one of anxious waiting. When the first casualty lists after the Langemarck battle did not contain the names of any Peterborough officers there was a sensation of relief which was heightened by the reports that the 2nd Battalion had apparently not suffered severely. Then shortly before six o'clock came a special cablegram to the Examiner, telling the story of a glorious charge of the 2nd Battalion, and announcing that Major Bennett, who led, had fallen badly wounded. The Examiner's extra, out shortly afterwards, gave what what particulars were available at that time, and the anxiety of friends and relatives of Peterborough's brave soldier lads was once more at fever heat. At midnight came still sadder news to the Examiner—the casualty list contained the names of Major Bennett; killed and Lieut. Harold Matthews; wounded. That Peterborough must be braced for further sorrowful intelligence is only too evident. The casualties among the officers and the thrilling recital of the grand charge of the second Battalion when they hurried to the front on the retreat of the Algerian troops, shows that the rank and file must have suffered severely.

Gloom in the City.

The news of the death of Major Geo. W. Bennett has cast a gloom over the entire city and district. There was no more popular officer in the 57th Regiment, or no more highly respected citizen than Major Bennett. The news was on every lip last night. "He fell as we know he would have liked to fall, leading a charge," said one of his friends to the Examiner. "The story of the heroic charge of the 2nd Battalion and of how Major Bennett led the Ontario men is just what we expected of them and of him."

Major Bennett was one of the oldest members of the 57th Regiment. For over twenty-five years he had been an officer of the Rangers, one of the most zealous, enthusiastic and capable among the officers. He always played the militia game seriously and was always up in his work taking every opportunity to perfect himself. For a number of years he was a subaltern, then he was promoted to the command of No. 5 company which, under his direction, became one of the crack companies of the Regiment. A few years ago he obtained a field officer's certificate and became a Major in the Regiment. Some months ago the militia department promoted him to brevet Lieut.-Colonel in the Canadian Militia.

When war broke out, Major Bennett was among the first officers to volunteer for services overseas. The writer remembers a conversation with the dead officer just before he left with the 57th detachment for Valcartier last August. "I don't know what rank or position I will get at Valcartier," remarked Major Bennett, "but I am going to the front if I have to go as a private. We have been playing at the soldier game a long time and now we have it in earnest." And that was the spirit of Major Bennett all through. At Valcartier he was given command of A Company of the 2nd Battalion, the company including not only the 120 Peterborough boys, but detachments from the Lisgar Rifles, Prescott, the 9th Mississauga Horse, Toronto, and other Eastern Ontario units. His company gained a great reputation for efficiency and was repeatedly praised by reviewing officers at Valcartier, Salisbury Plain, and more recently in France.

Hero With His Men.

With his men, Major Bennett was a hero. In their letters home they have repeatedly referred to him as being just like a father to them, while on the other hand the men in his company were always spoke of by Major Bennett as "my boys." One can imagine in the early dawn of last Friday morning as the Algerian troops reeled back from the front, nearly unconscious from gas fumes, Major Bennett calling on "his boys," and springing out in front of them, leading them into the hail of shrapnel, machine gun and rifle fire until he was struck down.

Only a few days ago a local friend receved a card from the dead hero in which he said:

"We are doing everything we came here to do and hope to get through safely. Chances seem "fisby" many times, but "there is lots of life in the old dog yet.

At the Armouries.

The earlier intelligence that Major Bennett had fallen in a gallant charge, caused great regret when it became known at the armouries last night during the weekly drill of the regiment. The worst was not known then, but the news was bad enough to throw a gloom over officers and men. As the Regimental Band played "The Boys of the Old Brigade,' many of those in the hall thought of the boys of the old 57th Brigade, of Major Bennett and the lads who a year ago were out in their red coats in the armouries and who now—." At the conclusion of the drill, Lt.-Col. Walker, officer commanding the 57th Regiment, read the story of the charge of the 2nd Battalion as given in the Examiner extra, to the men of the Rangers.

"It is with mingled sorrow and pride that we receive this news of the gallantry and sacrifice of our comrades," remarked Lt.-Col. Walker in the course an eloquent address. "We who knew Major Bennett, know that he was every inch of him a soldier and a man. When we read of this heroic conduct, when we realise what sacrifice our boys at the front are making, we surely must be impressed with the necessity of doing our duty here at home and of preparing for the further calls upon us, which will be made."

2ND BATTALION HAS LOST 17 OF ITS OFFICERS

Five Have Been Killed and Twelve Wounded According to Casualty Lists—Altogether 131 Canadian Officers Have Fallen

STILL COMING IN

OTTAWA, April 28.—The casualty list among Canadian officers to date totals 131. Of these 28 were killed in action or succumbed to wounds, and 103 are wounded, several severely. The list is being supplemented every day and scattered members of the rank and file are filtering in. From the standpoint of straight losses, regardless of whether killed or wounded, the fourth western battalion sugered most heavily, no less than 29 out of the probable complement of 32 being out of commission. The 16th Highland Battalion from Western Canada is a close second with 19 officers killed and wounded. The 2nd Battalion, composed of Eastern Ontario men, has 17 officers killed and wounded. The first composed of Western Ontario men, has 9, the Third Ontario Battalion, mostly from Toronto, has a total of eight. The second Battalion has the largest roll of honour, one major, one captain and three lieutenants being dead on the field of battle. The third and fourth each have four officers killed. On the list of killed there are three lieutenant colonels, three majors and nine captains and thirteen lieutenants, and of wounded are one lieutenant colonel, 14 majors, 32 captains and 59 lieutenants.

Have you helped yet in the necessary work of hospital equipment?

A Call To Peterborough

THE HEROES OF YPRES AND LANGEMARCK MUST BE AVENGED. MAJOR BENNETT, OF THE 57TH REGIMENT, AND NO DOUBT MANY OF HIS BRAVE LADS, HAVE GIVEN THEIR LIFE-BLOOD TO STOP THE HUNS' ADVANCE TOWARDS THE SEA. THEY HAVE DIED IN A HEROIC ATTACK AGAINST GREAT ODDS THAT THE BRITISH PAPERS SAY WILL LIVE IN HISTORY. SURELY THE GLORIOUS STORY MUST SEND A THRILL OF PATRIOTISM THROUGH EVERY CITIZEN, AND JUST AS SURELY THERE MUST BE A RED-BLOODED DESIRE FOR REVENGE IN EVERY TRUE CANADIAN, EVERY TRUE BRITISH HEART. THE GAPS IN THE RANKS MUST BE FILLED. THE SECOND CONTINGENT WILL SOON BE ON THE FIRING LINE; THE THIRD IS PREPARING, AND NOW THE CALL GOES OUT FOR THE FOURTH. ALREADY SOME THIRTY PETERBOROUGH YOUNG MEN HAVE HEARD THE SUMMONS. THE NEWS THAT CAME LAST NIGHT SHOULD BRING A RUSH OF NEW RECRUITS TO THE ARMOURIES. MORE PETERBOROUGH BOYS MUST COME FORWARD NOW, ALTHOUGH HUNDREDS HAVE GONE. AND THE PARENTS MUST MEET THE SITUATION—MUST MAKE THE SACRIFICE. MANY BOYS HAVE STAYED AT HOME BECAUSE THE PARENTS REFUSED TO GIVE THEM PERMISSION TO GO. NOW THESE FATHERS AND MOTHERS MUST SEE THAT THE MORE MEN THAT RUSH INTO THE RANKS, THE SOONER THIS CRUEL WAR, THE SOONER THIS TERRIBLE SLAUGHTER MUST END. PARENTS MUST BE BRAVE, AS WELL AS BOYS. RECRUITS MAY APPLY AT THE ARMOURIES AT 11 A.M., 3 P.M. and 8 P.M. DAILY. FILL UP THE GAPS. THE HEROES OF YPRES AND LANGEMARCK MUST BE AVENGED.

The Gallant Charge of 2nd Battalion

Dash of the Eastern Ontario Men Will Live in History With Some of the Finest Exploits of the British Army--Story of the Action in Which Major Bennett of Peterboro' Was Killed.

LONDON, April 27.—How any of the Canadians lived through the inferno of asphyxiating gas and enfilading fire on front and flank as they charged right up to the guns north of Ypres is a mystery to the wounded men who lived through the fight. That the praise bestowed upon the Canadian troops for their dash and bravery is well deserved is the opinion of all who have had an opportunity of hearing from the men themselves the story of the two charges that will live in history with some of the finest exploits of the British army.

Ling in a London Hospital, wounded in five places, Company Sergeant-Major J. Grant of the 10th Battalion related to a correspondent his experiences of the charge in which the guns were recaptured and in which his battalion led:

"Last Thursday, when many of us were in our billets, we were suddenly called out. Only a short time before we had been relieved in the trenches by another portion of the Canadian contingent. When Jack Johnsons began falling about Ypres we knew something was doing. We were told the French had fallen back, that the Canadians found it necessary to do the same, and that our duty was to regain the position and at any cost take a particular wood in front.

Saw Frightened Children.

"We marched toward the spot at which we were to charge the German position. We saw women and children who, frightened by the German shells, were moving away as rapidly as possible from the artillery fire. The cry had gone forth that the Germans were coming. We saw faces full of fear as they passed, hurrying from the danger zone. I believe the pathetic sight was in itself a stimulus to many. It must have been midnight before we were arranged for the charge. About 600 yards in front was the bush concealing the German position. We moved quietly in excellent order. Everything went well until we got within about 200 yards of the wood. Then what impressed my memory was the mass of machine guns that began to fire upon us. Immediately we made a rush when we were told to advance. We had been cautioned to go quietly, and not to cheer, but who could be quiet now! 'This way, 10th!' exclaimed an officer. We cheered and shouted. How we lived in front of those machine guns is a mystery to me.

Charge of the Second Battalion.

The charge of the 2nd Battalion will also live in history. On Thursday evening, when the Algerians were smoked from their trenches north of Ypres and left the line to that town open, the Second Canadians were stationed in Ypres and on the western side of the canal some three or four miles northward.

Soldiers of the 2nd Battalion could see from Vlamertingue asphyxiating shells bursting in front about six kilometres away, looking like one long sheet of fog.

Algerians Fall Back.

Canadians Advanced.

Soon after 4 in the morning, just as day was breaking, the command was given to advance in extended order on the German position some hundred yards ahead. Major Bennett, who led the charge, fell. Lieut. Day fell back killed.

Other officers were picked off right and left. The whole front became one line of shambles. The battalion reached within ten feet of trenches, but at incredible cost, and then could advance no farther.

To-day's List Of Casualties

Special to The Examiner:

TENTH BATTALION.

Seriously Wounded — Private William Thomas Lastman, Winnipeg, Man

Dangerously Wounded—Private Ray Christopher Herold, Wheatsheaf, Alta.

CONTINUED PROGRESS MADE BY THE ALLIES

Official Reports Declare French and British Are Making Gains---Germans Lose Severely in Both Men and Materials---Belgians Inflict Terrible Losses When Foe Tried Gas Trick Again.

Examiner Special:

PARIS, April 28.—To-day's official reports from the front declare that the French and British continue to make progress against the Germans north of Ypres. The Germans, it is stated, are losing heavily in both men and materials.

TRENCHES CAPTURED

PARIS, April 28 --- The war office announced semi-officially to-day that in yesterday's operations in the north, inside the Belgian frontier, where the Belgians, British and the French are co-operating, several lines of German trenches were captured. The German loss was 600 killed and wounded. and 200 men and six rapid firers captured.

TO-DAY'S CASUALTIES

OTTAWA. April 29.---The following list of additional casualties has been issued at noon to-day:

First Battalion, Wounded, Pte. John David Cooke. 205 Central Avenue, London, Ont.

Sergt Robert C. Andrews, Mass., U.S.A.

Pte. Allen Smith, Berlin, Ont.

Lance Corporal Walter Taylor, Chatham, Ont.

Pte. Thomas R. Murray, London W., Ont.

Seriously wounded, Sergt.-Master, Tailor, Alexander White, Detroit, Mich., U.S.A.

Fourth Battalion, Wounded, Pte. E. N. Ernest Wilcox, Edmonton, Alta.

Pte. Walter James Hare, Toronto, Ont.

Lance Corp. John Grundy Church, Freeman P. O., Ont.

Seriously wounded, Lance Corporal Wm. Henry Peaks, Milton, Ont.

Pte. Nanthan F. Montour, New Credit, Ont.

Second Battalion, Wounded, Pte. Frank Herbert Mason, Toronto.

Lance Corporal William John Skewis, Toronto, Ont.

WORD FROM COL. CURRIE

TORONTO, April 28. --- Delayed for three days, the unfailing weekly cablegram from Lt.-Colonel J. A. Currie, M.P.. in command of the 15th battalion (whom rumour had prisoners) was received this morning by Mrs. Currie. The cable reads: "I am safe."

This cable was sent from Hazebrock and dated April 28. Hazebrock is about 20 miles south west of Ypres. and the big battle was fought just north of Ypres. Hazebrouck is back of the Canadian line of trenches and it is possible that the 15th battalion is at present there in reserve.

BITTER DENUNCIATION

LONDON, April 28. --- Even the believers in an early peace seem to have lost hope to-day following the bitter denunciation of Germany by nearly every prominent member of parliament. It is agreed that the treatment of British prisoners of war, as outlined by Earl Kitchener and Winston Churchill, has inflamed the British sentiment against Germany far more than the Belgian outrages did. The newspaper comment generally throughout the country to-day is intensely bitter. Meanwhile there is a growing feeling that the War Secretary is about to demand conscription to get sufficient

Immediately we made a rush when we were told to advance. We had been cautioned to go quietly, and not to cheer, but who could be quiet now! 'This way, 10th!' exclaimed an officer. We cheered and shouted. How we lived in front of those machine guns is a mystery to me.

Charge of the Second Battalion.

The charge of the 2nd Battalion will also live in history. On Thursday evening, when the Algerians were smoked from their trenches north of Ypres and left the line to that town open, the Second Canadians were stationed in Ypres and on the western side of the canal some three or four miles northward.

Soldiers of the 2nd Battalion could see from Vlamertingue asphyxiating shells bursting in front about six kilometres away, looking like one long sheet of fog.

Algerians Fall Back.

Canadians Advanced.

Soon after 4 in the morning, just as day was breaking, the command was given to advance in extended order on the German position some hundred yards ahead, Major Bennett, who led the charge, fell. Lieut. Day fell back killed.

Other officers were picked off right and left. The whole front became one line of shambles. The battalion reached within ten feet of trenches, but at incredible cost, and then could advance no farther.

To-day's List Of Casualties

Special to The Examiner:

TENTH BATTALION.

Seriously Wounded — Private William Thomas Lemmon, Winnipeg, Man

Dangerously Wounded—Private Ray Christopher Herold, Wheatsheaf, Alta.

CONTINUED PROGRESS MADE BY THE ALLIES

Official Reports Declare French and British Are Making Gains---Germans Lose Severely in Both Men and Materials---Belgians Inflict Terrible Losses When Foe Tried Gas Trick Again.

Examiner Special:

PARIS, April 28.---To-day's official reports from the front declare that the French and British continue to make progress against the Germans north of Ypres. The Germans, it is stated, are losing heavily in both men and materials.

TRENCHES CAPTURED

PARIS, April 28 --- The war office announced semi-officially to-day that in yesterday's operations in the north, inside the Belgian frontier, where the Belgians, British and the French are co-operating, several lines of German trenches were captured. The German loss was 600 killed and wounded. and 200 men and six rapid firers captured.

TO-DAY'S CASUALTIES

OTTAWA. April 29.---The following list of additional casualties has been issued at noon to-day:

First Battalion, Wounded, Pte. John David Cooke. 205 Central Avenue, London, Ont.

Sergt Robert C. Andrews, Mass., U.S.A.

Pte. Allen Smith, Berlin, Ont.

Lance Corporal Walter Taylor, Chatham, Ont.

Pte. Thomas R. Murray, London W., Ont.

Seriously wounded, Sergt.-Master, Tailor, Alexander White, Detroit, Mich., U.S.A.

Fourth Battalion, Wounded, Pte. E. N. Ernest Wilcox, Edmonton, Alta.

Pte. Walter James Hare, Toronto, Ont.

Seriously wounded, Lance Corporal Wm. Henry Peaks, Milton, Ont.

Pte. Nanthan F. Montour, New Credit, Ont.

Lance Corporal William John Skewis, Toronto, Ont.

WORD FROM COL. CURRIE

TORONTO, April 28. --- Delayed for three days, the unfailing weekly cablegram from Lt.-Colonel J. A. Currie, M.P.. in command of the 15th battalion (whom rumour had prisoners) was received this morning by Mrs. Currie. The cable reads: "I am safe."

This cable was sent from Hazebrock and dated April 28. Hazebrock is about 20 miles south west of Ypres. and the big battle was fought just north of Ypres. Hazebrouck is back of the Canadian line of trenches and it is possible that the 15th battalion is at present there in reserve.

BITTER DENUNCIATION

LONDON, April 28. --- Even the believers in an early peace seem to have lost hope to-day following the bitter denunciation of Germany by nearly every prominent member of parliament. It is agreed that the treatment of British prisoners of war, as outlined by Earl Kitchener and Winston Churchill, has inflamed the British sentiment against Germany far more than the Belgian outrages did. The newspaper comment generally throughout the country to-day is intensely bitter. Meanwhile there is a growing feeling that the War Secretary is about to demand conscription to get sufficient

MAJOR BENNETT.

There seems to be no doubt of the death in battle of Major Bennett, commanding officer of A Company, 2nd Battalion. His death was worthy of his life, whether in a civil or military capacity. His watchword was duty, and he lived up to it with a large capacity for giving it effect. He was one of us; a native of Peterborough, and so well-known in personal and military relations that his death is like a personal loss to hundreds of our citizens. For at least a quarter of a century he was connected with the [illegible] and was an enthusiastic and faithful soldier and officer. When the call to arms came he was one of the first to drop the duties of his civil position, Overseer of Highways for Ontario, and join the first contingent. He was appointed officer commanding A Company in the 2nd Battalion of the Canadian expeditionary force, which comprised principally 57th and other Peterborough men, and was with our men to the last, and it was for Major Bennett a glorious last. He died in the way of duty—at the head of his charging company; and outside of relatives left bereaved, there will be none to more deeply mourn Major Bennett than the remnant of the men under his command, to whom he was more than an officer. That he was a good soldier and a though disciplinarian, was evident in the whole course of his military career.' At the same time, without relaxation of discipline, he was as a father to his men who idolised him for a double reason—as a soldier and a man—a capable and trusted officer on duty and off parade, a comrade counsellor and friend. That Major Bennett was also a brave soldier is shown by the manner and place of his death—leading his men into the thick of the fight, at the post of duty and danger. That his gallant command were also brave men was shown by their willingly and enthusiastically following his leading, ready, for the sake of duty, to die with him, as it is to be feared many of them have done. We all mourn the death of Major Bennett, because a strong arm has been palsied, a good soldier lost, when good soldiers are sadly needed. We mourn his death because hundreds have lost an acquaintance, hundreds a friend and companion, and the country and community a man who was as good a man and as good a citizen as he was a soldier. If he had had the choice of his ending, he would doubtless have wished to die as he did die, in defence of the interests of humanity, of right, of Canada, and the Empire. We can well say to Major Bennett, "hail and farewell." He died gallantly and gloriously. He died as he lived, doing his duty, and we can well say—

Nothing in his life
Became him like the leaving it.

COMFORT WITH CALAMITY.

The object of the latest "German drive" was Calais. But this object was defeated, because several thousand Canadian soldiers charged a whole German army and held the enemy in check till reserves completed the check—"The Canadians," as the War Office officially declares, "saved the situation." But at a terrible cost, which we yet cannot realize. The Canadians' baptism of fire, as the despatches, one after another bring out the truth, was one of the fiercest and most terrific encounters of a particularly sanguinary war. We are proud of our Canadians, but sad to say we must count many of them among the "unreturning brave." Words cannot picture the agony of suspense, that racks many a woman's, and many a man's heart in Peterborough to-day; and there are no words with which to speak comfort, except the thought that our Canadian soldiers have not only done their duty, but have gloriously distinguished themselves. We expected death and wounds, but the sudden accumulation of appalling casualties, has surprised and unnerved us; but if we show courage and spirit equal to those of our soldier boys, we shall brace ourselves to meet the shock that the despatches of a few hours may bring us.

UNIVERSAL SYMPATHY.

Unviersal sympathy will go out to Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Matthews and family in the case of the wounding in action of their gallant son, Lt. Harold Matthews; as well as to the relatives, fellow officers, and the many friends of Major Bennett. While we can feel for them we cannot feel with them, for no heart but the heart smitten can know the bitterness of death and the sorrow for suffering by our own.

SOCKS AND GLORY.

This is a prosaic world after all. The little things, the humble things, rub shoulders with the great things at every turn of life. Socks and glory are in idea far asunder; but they are intimately related in the military sphere. Socks are as necessary to a soldier as boots, and both are in the matter of efficiency as necessary as the rifle and ammunition. In another place is printed a despatch stating how the Kingston Daily Standard last night formally closed a "socks campaign," which resulted in providing for our soldiers 9,000 pairs of socks, thought to be the largest number provided by any city in Canada.

Here is a lesson to us—to our Peterborough people and the Canadian people. In face of the heart-splitting news that come to us from the battle front, with it is feared worse to come, we seem stunned and helpless, wringing our hands in unavailing sorrow. But this terrible news is, or should be, only an incentive to action. The sadly depleted ranks of our little Canadian army have to be filled, and we are thankful that there are thousands ready to fill the breaks in the ranks, if not breaks in battalions and brigades. And there is work for Canadian civilians to do. For our soldier dead we can only offer tears; but for our wounded Canadian soldiers we can help provide Red Cross comforts, hospital dressings, bandages, etc. For the soldier in the battle fields we can provide what they need most for marching comfort and general campaigning, thick, comfortable socks. With comfortable feet, good socks, and good boots, the fighting efficiency of a soldier is greatly increased. He has no distraction from his work by crippled feet. We can help as the Kingston Standard has done, by providing so prosaic a necessity as socks. Wearing Canadian socks, Canadians have covered themselves and Canada with glory. We need not be helpless in the face of the disastrous news we get; there is work for us all to do. In waging successful war the knitting needle has its place as well as the recruiting sergeant, or the gun-maker.

AN EXPLANATION FROM MR. TODD

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I have now decided to make Peterborough my home and shall continue my work here. The services in the Church will be resumed next Sunday, May 2nd. In my former letter I said if I took up the Church work again I would start with a clean sheet. To that end we start with a new roll-book, and henceforth only those who subscribe to the new regulations and are in harmony with the local society will be recognized as proper Christian Scientists. I want to say to the general public that a number of people have for years been circulating statements about myself and the Church, which are absolutely false, and they refuse to meet and discuss the same, and have ignored all our letters. It is but fair that the stranger who is not acquainted with the facts, should know that I am prepared at any time in either civil or religious court, prepared to meet every charge in a proper way.

Certain of people circulating falsehoods for ten years may have had weight with some people. However, I am pleased to say I have lived through it, in good health, body and mind, and will go on in the strength and guidance of that God which has protected, sustained, and supplied to the present time.

I had hoped that this old, erring condition would have worn itself out ere this, that these people had been redeemed, and got into the right line of work, to help us. Since this is not the case, we can only leave them in the care of divine Love, and the following quotations:

The first is attributed to Abraham Lincoln—

"You can fool some of the people all of the time, and all of the people some of the time." Also Mrs. Eddy, in Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures; pages 448, 192, 464: "It is Christian Science to do right, nothing short of right doing has any claim to the name." We are not Christian Scientists until we have left all for Christ"; "Falsity has no foundation." The hireling fleeth because he is an hireling, and care not for the sheep.

Neither dishonesty nor ignorance ever founded, nor can they overthrow a scientific system of ethics."

Peterborough must move onward, sideward, outward and heavenward.

Thanking you for valuable space.

Yours sincerely,
R. J. Todd.

On Monday afternoon last, while playing at the home of Mr. William Kempt, the five-year-old son of William Wedlock, Jr., was bitten by a dog belonging to Alfred Kempt. The little lad went to pet the dog when it bit him on the face inflicting several bad wounds. Dr. Harrison was called and gave him medical attention. We are pleased to state that the child is getting along very nicely.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

The Manufacturers' Committee, Board of Works and Property Committee, all meet this evening. A meeting of the Finance Committee is being held this afternoon.

Car Will Be Lettered.

The new motor truck recently purchased by the Utilities Commission will be lettered with the inscription of the department to which it belongs. It will also be insured on the usual basis of one cent and a half per hundred.

Street Lighting.

The Utilities Commission is continuing the installation of tungsten lights throughout the city for street lighting purposes. Those already installed are giving excellent satisfaction.

Installing Service.

Six and eight electric light services a day are being installed by the Utilities Commission. Many of them are for vacant houses. This is taken as an indication that the list of vacant houses is growing smaller.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

Debentures Sold at Good Price.

It was announced that $686,000 worth of debentures had been sold to Wood, Gundy Co., Toronto, the price being 96.06, which is considered to be exceptionally good.

Theatre License Raised.

The City Council of Woodstock has increased the annual license rate on theatres to $300 from $75. Houses run as movies will pay only $25.

Police Raid.

The Owen Sound police raded a Chinese gambling joint, and Charles Lee, the keeper, paid $300 and costs, and three frequenters, Mark Ling, Lock Wing, and Mark Gee, paid $20 and costs each.

LAKEFIELD TRAIN SERVICE.

New German Submarines Show Great Advance Over Old Type

"There is every reason to believe that since the outbreak of hostilities Germany has launched and fitted out at least nineteen of what can only be termed subersible cruisers of super-submarines, one at least of which is fitted with engines of nearly 7,000 horse power. These vessels are of from 800 to 1,000 tons displacement, their length is from 213 feet to 230 feet, and they have a beam of 20 feet. Of this class of vessel is the U-36, which recently captured the Dutch vessel Batavier V. It has been remarked, regarding that submersible in particular, that her very size exposes her unduly to danger in the Narrow Seas, and the opinion was vouchsafed that she would ultimately fall a victim to a destroyer that could easily have been evaded by a smaller and more easily handled craft.

"It is not clearly shown why this should be the case, and against the assumption it may be mentioned that the boats Germany possessed before the outbreak of hostilities had a surface speed of only from fourteen to sixteen knots and a submerged speed of ten knots. The new type have a surface speed of from twenty to twenty-four knots and an underwater speed of at least twelve knots. They are also fitted with engines which can be reversed from full speed ahead to full speed astern in ten seconds, and it would seem, therefore, that such vessels would be more likely to escape from a destroyer attack than one of the older craft. It may be mentioned here that these new submersibles are armed with four tubes, two forward and tow aft, firing 19 1-2 inch torpedoes with war heads charged with trinitro-toluol. In addition they are fitted with an anti-aircraft gun and two 14-pounders. These are mounted on disappearing carriages, which are automatically drawn below the surface of the deck as soon as the pumps are set to work to submerge the vessel.

"Germany has always aimed at obtaining the most powerful engines possible for their size for her submarine service, as well as at securing for her boats the greatest possible radius of action. For months before the war broke out Krupp's and the Machinenfabrick Augsburg-Nurnberg A.-G. had been experimenting with the Diesel engine with a view of evolving a type which should be eminently suited for use in submarine craft. Krupp's has worked principally on a two stroke engine, in which, as there is no scavenging stroke, as it is called, the scavenging, or cleasing, of the cylinder from the burnt gases is effected by a separate compressor and a system of valves in the cylinder head. The design of the engine is quite away from usual lines; three working cylinders are fitted at each side of the high pressure compressor, and two double acting pumps for scavenging are placed at the extreme end of the bed.

"The M.A.N. firm also is elaborating a two stroke Diesel engine at Nurnberg, and several of the German super-submarines are believed to be fitted with engines turned out from their works. The engines are of the eight cylinder 2,000-horse power type, and two engines are fitted in each boat.

"But it is not only in speed and size that developments have been made. The 'sight' of the submarine has been greatly improved and the modern periscope is fitted with a compass by means of which it is possible for a helmsman to steer to fractions of a degree instead of, as hitherto, to quarter points only. By this the accuracy with which a torpedo can be fired from the officer who is watching the periscope and telltale when they are in use can himself fire the torpedoes without leaving his post.

Signalling is done on a submarine in the same way as on board a surface ship, but when the vessel is submerged it is carried out by messages sent by a modified form of submarine bell, the vibrations of which are picked up by microphone. Submarines are exceptionally noisy when submerged, and in order that messages may be sent or received correctly the operator sits in a soundproof compartment.

"Attention may be drawn to the fact that a submarine of the modern type which is rammed by a merchantman, or even war vessel, may quite easily be uninjured; indeed, it is a most difficult thing to sink a submersible cruiser by ramming her. They are fitted, it must be mentioned, with double hulls, the outer skin being comparably thin, while the inner hull is stout as it has to stand the full hydrostatic pressure. The space between these hulls is subdivided by numerous compartments, and while some of the spaces are water tanks for sinking purposes, in others the heavy fuel oil used with the engines is stored. And two of these spaces— in some boats more than two—could be flooded without the rising powers of the boat being impaired. Consequently when a merchantman rams a submersible of the latest type and reports that a film of oil rose to the surface at the spot where the undersea boat disappeared, the great probability is that the latter was uninjured and that all that has been done has been to pierce her outer skin and allow the contents of one of her fuel tanks to escape."

Woman Places Her True Love Above the Law

LOS ANGELES, April 28—Admitting that her love for Braman H. Loveless, scion of a wealthy family of Wheaton, a suburb of Chicago, was so great that she defied law and convention, Miss Alice Swanson, arrested on the telegraphic orders of the authorities of Rockford, Ill., appeared before Judge Grant Jackson, with her two-year-old son and calmly listened to arguments that resulted in her release on a writ of habeas corpus.

Simultaneous with her arrest the police of San Francisco placed Loveless under arrest, thereby clearing up a fifteen-year-old disappearance mystery that startled Chicago when Loveless, following a Grand Jury investigation in connection with a civil service scandal, suddenly departed for the West, leaving his wife and two small sons. Mrs. Loveless is the sister of Charles Hadley, State's Attorney of Du Page County.

At the time he left Chicago Loveless was attorney for the Civil Service Commission. Suddenly it was discovered that questions to be used at an examination for policemen had been stolen and copies placed on sale at a pawnshop conducted by two men who were prominent in politics.

Tells the Story.

The adventures of Loveless, who after undergoing more than 100 operations for a tubercular affection, came to Los Angeles cured, and his "soul mate" arrangement with Miss Swanson, whom he met in a hospital near Denver, were related by the young woman, who announced her intention of going to Sacramento with her attorney, Guy Eddie, to block an attempt to exradite Loveless to Illinois.

"It is true that for six years I have lived with Mr. Loveless as his wife without the authority of either the law or the Church," Miss Swanson admitted.

"I believe I have a better right to bear his name than the woman in Chicago who deserted him in his adversity and refused to accompany him West because she feared she would contract tuberculosis.

"The love of a good woman supersedes all human-made law, all the canons of churches, all conventions. I met Mr. Loveless in a hospital where he had been sent to undergo a series of desperate operations. I was there, suffering from a tubercular affection in one of my feet.

"Those were certainly gray days for both of us. Mr. Loveless was not expected to survive, and they told me that I scarcely had the vitality to recover. Then almost miraculously we both began to be restored to health.

Wife Feared Disease.

"Mr. Loveless told me that he had a wife who regarded him almost as if he were a leper. He showed me pitiful letters he wrote begging her to join him. The doctors told him he could not live in the Eastern climate.

Mrs. Loveless refused all his petitions. Both of us often cried as we read over her replies.

"Then Mr. Loveless said to me:

"'We belong to each other,' and we started for California. Mr. Loveless's father and mother followed us, and we were happy. For a long time Mr. Loveless disliked the idea of divorcing his wife. He still loved his sons. But a few months ago he began plans for securing a divorce so that we could get married. These plans were broken up when Mr. Loveless's father died, leaving an estate worth about $100,000.

"About this time Mrs. Loveless heard for the first time of me and our little boy. Mr. Loveless said she insisted on him giving her $2,500 before she would consent to a divorce.'

Judge Jackson summarily granted the writ of habeas corpus.

"You have no right to put women in jail because someone back in Illinois requests it by telegraph," the Judge said to Deputy District Attorney Selph."

Never Caught.

Waiter—Oh, yes sir — the fish is quite fresh. It was caught this morning.

Soldier—Go on!—that was never caught—it came itself up!

LEADER OF ANTI-WAR PARTY NOW AT FRONT

The summoning of Carl Leibknecht, the German Socialist leader, to serve in one of the Landsturm regiments in French Lorraine, has excited much comment among his followers, according to Dutch papers. Liebknecht is a member of the Reichstag, and is therefore exempted from military service while the imperial legislature is actually sitting, but his exemption ceases when the house adjourns, and the military authorities have decided that henceforth he must serve at the front for the whole period of each legislative adjournment. The purpose of this, Liebknecht's friends assert, is to keep him away from contact with other Socialists and under military discipline.

Herr Liebknecht is 43 years old. He served as a young man in a regiment of engineers, doing his full three years, and thence passing successively into the Reserve and Landsturm. The other men of his particular class have not been called to the colours.

The government lost no time in sending Liebknecht away once this move had been decided upon. On the very evening of the day on which the Reichstag adjourned, a soldier in uniform appeared at the Socialist leader's residence in Charlottesburg with an official order directing Leibknecht to report himself "for inspection" at the headquarters of his Landsturm regiment the next morning.

Liebknecht promptly donned his uniform and presented himself as directed. The officer in charge received him with great courtesy, asked him the customary questions, and passed him on to the medical inspector. The Socialist was found sound and healthy and was drafted without delay for active service in Lorraine, somewhere east of Verdun.

The man who had been the leader of the little anti-war group in the Reichstag was now a simple soldier, under strictest military discipline, and occupied day and night with the tasks allotted him by his officers.

FOR CLEANING MARBLE.

Common dry salt is said to be one of the best agents for cleaning marble, such as wash basins, sink fixtures and the like. It requires no preparation and may be rubbed directly upon the tarnished surface, removing any incrustations or deposits at once, leaving the marble shining and clean. This is well worthy of remembrance, as it is often found to be provokingly hard to clean the marbles thoroughly without injuring the surface.

FIGHTING IN CARPATHIANS RESUMED WITH GREAT FURY

Special Examiner Cable.

LONDON, April 28.—Fighting in the Carpathians, which for some days had slackened owing to the weather conditions, has been resumed with great fury, the Austro-German forces having taken the offensive at a number of points on the front in the hope of dislodging the Russian troops from their strongholds along the crest of the mountain chain above the Hungarian plains.

The Russian official statement issued in Petrograd last night reports that the enemy on Sunday and during the following night made a determined attack against one of the heights held by the Russians. The infantry assault was preceded by a long and heavy bombardment but the charge of the Austrian and German troops nevertheless was stopped short by the wire entanglements in front of the Russian position, where, the statement says, "they were mowed down by our fire."

Fruitless attacks also were delivered by the enemy at points to the east and to the north-west of the Uszok Pass, while further on, in Eastern Galicia, stubborn fighting is proceeding in the Stry region. Here, the Russian report announces, a complete battalion of Austrians, or about 1,000 men, surrendered yesterday.

No important engagements have yet developed in North Poland, though there are signs of increasing activity on that front. Petrograd reports success for the Russians in a skirmish on the left bank of the Vistula. Russian aeroplanes, it is announced also, have been busy, and have achieved success in several expeditions.

"The Russians have made a fresh attempt to invade Bukowina," says the Times' Bucharest correspondent. "After the fighting on April 22 and 23 they drove the enemy back toward Malenki and made prisoners of two officers and 180 men. A concentration of Russian forces also is reported at Bojan, in Northern Bukowina, where an attempt is expected to be made to force a passage over the River Pruth."

NEARLY 300,000 MEN ARE LANDED AT DARDANELLES

Turks Said to Have Constructed 500 Miles of Trenches to Oppose the Allies' Advance

LONDON, April 28.—A joint War Office and Admiralty statement issued last night on the Dardanelles operations, says:

"After days of hard fighting in a difficult country the troops landed on Gallipoli peninsula are thoroughly making good their footing with the effective help of the navy. The French have taken 500 prisoners."

The statement appends the following which, it says, is officially published at Cairo:

Ian Hamilton have effected a landing on both sides of the Dardanelles under excellent conditions. Many prisoners have been taken and our forces are continuing their advance."

French troops have occupied the village of Kumkaleh, on the Asiatic side of the entrance to the Dardanelles.

This announcement was made officially in Paris:

"During the disembarkation Sunday of the allied forces at the Dardanelles, French troops, comprising infantry and artillery, had been designated particularly for operations at Kumkaleh, on the Asiatic side. This mission was completely and successfully fulfilled.

"Aided by the cannon of the French fleet and underneath the fire of our enemy, our troops succeeded in occupying the village, and have continued its occupation, despite seven counter-attacks at night, supported by heavy artillery.

"We took five hundred prisoners, and the losses to the enemy appear to have been considerable.

Nearly 300,000 men of the Anglo-French forces have been landed on the Gallipoli peninsula, says a despatch from Saloniki yesterday. This expeditionary force comprises, it is reported, veterans drawn from the French front, where they have been replaced by drafts of Earl Kitchener's army. This story the British censor refused to confirm, but allowed it to be published without guaranteeing its authenticity.

Turks have constructed 500 miles of trenches to oppose the allies' advance, according to the Athens correspondent of the Daily Mail. The correspondent, telegraphing Monday, says:

"The bombardment of the interior forts of the Dardanelles, which began Sunday, continued yesterday and resulted in heavy damage to the forts. It is reported that the forts on the coast near Symrna also were bombarded, but this report has not been confirmed."

The Daily Mail's Athens correspondent, telegraphing Monday, says:

Work Resumed On The Canal

Seeding Operations Around Hastings Well Advanced—Fall Grain Looking Good

Special to The Examiner:

HASTINGS, April 27—The weather is unusually warm for the month of April and the growth in consequence, is exceedingly rapid.

Seeding operations are well advanced, and the fall grain is making a handsome showing.

The funeral of the late Mr. Jones, who met his death while at work on the railroad, was held from the G. T. R. Station, here, upon the arrival of the train from Lindsay, where the unfortunate man resided for the past few years, removing to that town from Hastings. The funeral was well attended by his fellow employees on the G.T.R. as well as his relatives and friends. The deceased leaves behind him a sorrowing wife and a family of small children, who will feel their loss very keenly, and who have the sincere sympathy of a large circle of friends in their sorrow. The body was interred in the Trent Valley cemetery here on Friday last.

A number from here attended the funeral of the late Mr. Robert Humphries of Keene last week, among them being his brother, Mr. Ad. Humphries.

The rubber social in connection with the Epworth League of the Methodist Church which was held on Monday night in the basement of the Church, was quite a success. A good programme was given by the members and quite a sum was realised by the sale of ice cream and home-made candy. The admission to the social was a quantity of old rubber.

Mr. John Lumley, an aged resident of Percy, died at his home on Saturday and the funeral was held on Monday morning to the R. C. cemetery. He is survived by his widow and grown-up family, some of whom reside in Western Canada.

The friends of Mr. Ed. Lynch who has been seriously ill of pleuro-pneumonia, will be pleased to know that his condition is shewing marked improvement, and his attending physican pronounces him out of danger.

Mrs. J. Stevenson and Master Stanley spent Sunday with her mother in Norwood.

The Cadets marched around town on Saturday and called forth a number of comments from the interested spectators. They were under the direction of Mr. Walter Thomson.

Mr. Staples, principal of the Public School, spent the week-end with friends near Peterborough.

Mr. J. J. English is erecting a new verandah around her residence which will add greatly to the appearance.

Mr. Spooner has a gang of workmen busily engaged putting a wall under his house and otherwise fitting it up for occupation.

Mr. and Mrs. L. O'Neil spent Sunday with friends out of town.

Mrs. G. Buchanan of Trent Bridge has been visiting her mother, Mrs. J Carter, Sr.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Morton, former residents of Hastings, but late of California, were here last week renewing old acquainances.

Mr. E. Tate took a trip to Peterborough on Thursday.

Mr. Squire of Norwood gave us a call on Monday.

Mr. L. Lynch has purchased a car and is enjoying the fine weather.

Mr. W. Runnels was in Norwood on Wednesday.

Quite a severe electrical storm passed over on Sunday evening, but not much rain fell.

Work has begun on the canal and everything has put on a summer appearance.

The ladies who so generously contributed to the comforts for the soldiers at the front, will be pleased to know that the socks have reached their destination and are highly appreciated by the boys.

MAPLE WALNUT CAKE.

One and one-quarter cups granulated sugar creamed with one-half cup butter; add one cup sweet milk, two cups flour which have been sifted five times, with four level teaspoons baking powder. Add pinch of salt and a few drops of vanilla. Fold in the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs and bake in two layers. Stir sufficient confectioner's sugar into three-quarters of a cup of maple syrup to make frosting stiff enough to spread. Put between and on top. Then sprinkle broken walnut meats over the cake.

Was Troubled With Eczema.

Would Nearly Yell With Pain.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS CURED HIM.

Mr. R. J. Swales, Harriston, Ont., writes: "I have been a great sufferer with eczema. I tried all kinds of salves, but they did me no good. Sometimes I would nearly yell with the pain, and would pass little white worms. I was told to get at the blood, so I used four bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters, and it has made a complete cure."

All skin diseases such as eczema or salt rheum, itching or burning rashes, boils, pimples, eruptions, ulcers, etc., are all caused by the blood becoming impoverished, and while not usually attended with any fatal results, they sooner or later develop into some serious blood trouble, and the entire system become affected.

Burdock Blood Bitters will cleanse the blood of all its impurities and by this means cure all skin and blood troubles.

This valuable preparation has been on the market for the last forty years, so you do not make any experiment when you give it a trial.

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Rip Van Winkles of Sea Laid Up in Hoboken Harbor

NEW YORK.—"Rip Van Winkles of the Sea" is the new name given the dozen big German liners tied up and interned at Hoboken. Hoboken itself is a "Sleepy Hollow." The cessation of commerce at the German piers has hit a hard blow at Hoboken's business.

When the war is over the "Rip Van [illegible] according to the vigilant agents of Uncle Sam, who watch day and night to see that none of the interned liners slip out to sea.

Cap. Moller, the grizzled old sea dog who is superintendent of the North German Lloyd piers, growls and grumbles over stories that the German passenger fleet is waiting for a chance to "sneak out."

Ships Down he Bay.

A every gate stands a customs guard. Down the bay are vigilant members of the navy's mosquito fleet, and even larger war vessels stationed to head off the German ships, or any others which seek to leave New York harbour without permission of Uncle Samuel.

There are six boats tied up at the North German Lloyd docks, all splendid boats. But there isn' a one that hasn't cobwebs and rue on it. Lack of exercise seems just as bad for boats as for human beings.

Brushing cobwebs off boats isn't such hard work. But the sailors hate to brush cobwebs at reduced rates. When the war broke ou and the company saw that it was going to forced to lay its boats up the Captains offered their crews part pay to keep on working. Most of the men declined.

But those who accepted are all living comfortably on board the ships except those who preferred to leave. They get their sleeping quarters and their meals for nothing, but they brush no cobwebs.

2,200 Men an Ships.

There are about 2,200 men living on the company's ships, and perhaps one-third of these are still on the pay roll. Each ship maintains a small fire, just enough to keep the electric machinery going. The ships do not depend on their own engines to get them out of the docks in case of fire. The piers themselves are equipped with cables and donkey engines to haul the boats out in a jiffy if necessary.

Japan Holds to Demands.

PEKIN, April 28.—President Yuan Shi-Kai and his councillors were in conference yesterday concerning the demands presented to the republic by Japan. No information yet is obtainable concerning the decisions reached by them. The reply of the Chinese Government to the latest Japanese communication will be given within a week, the Chinese wishing to give Japan no excuse for a repetition of the charge that they are procrastinating. There are no indications of Japan withdrawing from her attitude as already made known.

His Clincher.

At a town meeting a large taxpayer rose up to protest against building a new schoolhouse in a certain part of the town. "What's the good of it? They are an ignorant set down there anyway."—Argonaut.

Bandying Secrets.

Alice—When I told you of my engagement I said it was a secret, and you told Kitty about it.

Ella—Why, no, I didn't. I merely asked her if she knew about it.—Boston Transcript.

A Passing Vision of Maj. Bennett

It seems only yesterday that Peterborough's first quota of volunteers marched out. This morning's glorious light visualized their farewell and departure, the quiet solemn scene at Central Park, the brief intercessory service, the officers and their boys, Major Mills, Bennett, Ackerman and the others; the swinging march to entrain through proud but significantly silent files of citizens. This morning as you stood in George Street, that other morning last summer was suddenly inserted like a film before your vision. Your imagination even includes the time-worn Tipperary, and while you see again smiling faces of the friends in the ranks or the confident "non-coms," Howarth, Griffin and the rest, that handful of officers in the van recur with persistent frequency, Ackerman, Bennett, Mills and Clegg. That self-same imp of misgiving that stirred in the depths of your emotions on that memorable day, it even now returns to your mental picture and brings up sharply the distressing present. And there, before you on the bulletin board, or in your newspaper headings is the unwelcome realism of your first disturbing doubt of departure. Bennett. You see him drilling the recruits on Central Park, or standing stalwart, strong and bare-headed when the Mayor said farewell from the citizens, or that last, fading picture at the station. Bennett. And you see him, too, in those who have gone, or will go, until the task is completed.

First Marchout of the Season

The first regular march-out of the 57th Regiment was held last night, with a big turnout, and the Regiment made a good showing as it marched down George Street, headed by the signallers and by the twenty-five members of the fourth overseas contingent. On the return to the armouries company drill was practiced. The following orders were read:

Headquarters, Peterborough, April.

Orders by the Officer Commanding

57th Regt., Peterborough Rangers:

No. 1—The following extract from Militia Orders is promulgated for the information of the Regiment.

M. O. 148—March 25, 1915. Certificates. Lieut. C. R. Cameron, 57th Regiment, machine gun.

M. O. 181—April 12, 1915. Capt. A. P. McLean, 57th Regiment. Field officer.

No. 2—Owing to the fact that a number of the officers of the Regiment have volunteered for overseas service or have left the limits, and promotions are pending, it is found necessary to re-arrange the personnel of the command. Until further orders the following will be the arrangement of the officers:

No. 1 Company—Capt. Hall, Lieuts. M. Turner and W. Stratton.

No. 2 Co.—Capt. Watt, Lieuts. F. Turner and D. Shook.

No. 3 Co.—Capt. Park, Lieuts. Tomlins and V. Eastwood, Jr.

No. 4 Co.—Acting-Capt. Hagerman, Lieuts. Gemmell, Cameron and Harstone.

No. 5 Co.—Capt. Langford, Lieuts. Meyers, W. Worth and H. Hill.

No. 6 Co.—Acting-Capt. Lech, Lieuts. Comstock, Campbell and H. Munroe.

No. 7 Co.—Capt. Higgins, Lieuts. Cook and E. Worth.

No. 8 Co.—Capt. McPherson, Lieuts. R. Munroe, W Eastwood and C. H. Rogers.

No. 3—Detail of duty for the week ending May 4. Captain for the week, Capt. Langford; next for duty, Capt. Higgins. Subaltern for the week, Lieut. Meyers; next for duty, Lieut. W. R. Turner.

No. 4—The C. O. has been pleased to make the following promotions:

B. Co. — To be sergeant, Corporal Moore.

To be corporal provisionally, Pte. A. Lazure.

By order—

A. W. McPHERSON, Capt.,
Acting-Adjutant.

HON. PRESIDENT TO BE HERE

The Honorary President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Canada, Mrs. A. O. Rutherford, will address a public meeting in Charlotte Street Methodist Church, on Thursday evening, April 29th, in the interests of the work of the W. C. T. U. of Peterborough. It is hoped that those interested in temperance and the welfare of our city will be at that meeting.

A good programme is being prepared. Silver collection will be taken.

LAKEFIELD NEWS

Special to The Examiner:

LAKEFIELD, April 28. — Mr. John Todd, of Peterborough, was visiting friends and relatives in the village on Thursday last.

Major A. T. LeFerre, of the Canadian Pacific Overseas Construction Corps, St. John, N.B., spent a few days last week in the village.

The members of B Company, 46th Regiment, and the High School Cadets, attended Divine service at the Methodist Church on Sunday morning.

Mr. Beresford Hamilton, of Peterborough, was visiting friends in the village on Tuesday last.

Mrs. Otter Stuart has returned to the village, after spending two weeks in Toronto.

Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., was in the village on Thursday last.

Mrs. Osborne and daughter returned to the village last week, after spending a few days in Toronto.

Miss Lillian Deane has returned to Peterborough, after spending the past month in the village.

Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Tate returned home last week, after spending a few days in Toronto.

Lieut. Geo. F. Hilliard, of Kingston, spent the week-end visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Hilliard, at "Cowley."

The members of the Anglican Young Peoples' Association were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Fitzgerald on Tuesday evening last. About forty members were present, and a most enjoyable evening was spent.

The death of Mr. H. F. Baims, which took place on Saturday, April 17th, at St. Michael's Hospital, Toronto, is much regretted by his many friends in Lakefield. Deceased had been employed on the staff of the local branch of the Royal Bank for the past year, and during that time had made a number of friends here. He had only just recovered from a severe attack of pneumonia, and had gone to visit his brother in Toronto in order to recuperate, when he contracted hyphoid fever, which was the immediate cause of his death.

Mr. Leonard, of Peterborough, spent the week-end visiting his daughter, Mrs. Hewitt, at "Uplands."

Mr. Playter Sherin, of Albert College, Belleville, is visiting at his home in the village.

The steamer Islinda made her first trip of the season on Thursday last.

Judging from the number of automobiles that have been purchased by our citizens lately, it looks as if there was grave danger of horses being entirely superceded in the village. Dr. J. R. Fraser, Messrs. J. Hendren, A. E. Graham, P. Spence, and Theo. Crawford, have each purchased a Ford car.

MAN'S LOVE FOR READING SAVES HIS SON'S LIFE

TOPEKA, Kan., April 28. — The habit Dr. C. F. Menninger has of reading at home in the evenings saved the life of his son, Edwin.

Some time ago the doctor saw the description of a cure for gas bacilli infection, which is being used successfully by army surgeons in Europe. The article was complete and described, in detail, the symptoms of the disease.

A week after Edwin, Dr. Menninger's nineteen-year-old son, was injured in a chemical explosion at Washburn College. His hand was lacerated and became infected. It was necessary to amputate it. The loss of the arm was threatened.

The symptoms of the poisoning were identical with those described in the article Dr. Menninger had read. Under the direction of Dr. Milton Connor, bacteriologist, a test was made of the boy's blood. An almost perfect culture of gas bacilli was obtained.

Menninger's arm was stained above the elbow from the effects of gangrene poisoning, caused by the bacilli. The germs formed gas under the skin and between the muscles. This gas gradually crept up the arm and threatened to infect the body.

Oxygen was introduced under the skin and between the muscles through a hypodermic needle, beginning at the shoulder. The skin of his arm was inflated and oxygen forced into the blood vessels. The arm was also wrapped in cotton saturated with hydrogen peroxide.

Gas Bacillus infection is extremely rare, and only a few cases, none of them as severe as that of Menninger, have been known in Topeka. The germ which causes the poisoning is found only in the upper layer of the soil, imbedded just deep enough to be removed from the oxygen.

The poisoning has become common in Europe since the outbreak of the war. Wounded soldiers in trenches come in contact with dirt with which their wounds are filled. Surgeons have used the oxygen treatment with general success in these cases. The German automobile hospital corps carry oxygen cylinders.

That Edwin would have died had not the oxygen treatment been used is the conviction of Dr. Menninger.

INTERESTING CASE IN COUNTY COURT

Miss Head Claims $10.00 a Week For Attending Late Wm. Bennett During His Illness

MUCH EVIDENCE HEARD

In the County Court to-day His Honour Judge Huycke is hearing the Head versus Walkey case in which Miss Head claims wages for eleven months for attending the late William Bennett during his illness, at the rate of $10.00 per week.

Mr. F. D. Kerr is representing Miss Head, and Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., the defendant for the Bennett estate.

There are several witnesses to be heard and the case will likely occupy the time of the Court during the greater part of the day.

Miss Head was engaged to be married to the late Mr. Bennett about two years before he became ill with tubercular trouble, and claims she remained true to him until he died, spending eleven months looking after him for which he was to pay her $10 per week, and promised to remember her in his will, which she was led to believe that he had made. She has later learned that after he went to England, where he passed away, another will was made in which she was not a beneficiary.

The plaintiff in the witness box for examination stated that she has been residing in Toronto, and since October, 1914, has been employed as lady's ready-to-wear saleslady.

She remembered the deceased, Mr. Bennett, coming to her at the Peterborough Golf Links, where she was helping her sister-in-law, Mrs. Head. It was in the year 1911. She was in Toronto prior to going to her sister-in-law's at the Golf Links. Her brother-[illegible] where he was caretaker.

Was to Get $10 per Week.

Mr. Bennett went to see her several times, trying to persuade her to go and look after him. He was living in Otonabee. She was making $10.00 per week in Toronto and paying her own board. Mr. Bennett offered to give her the same wages as she was making in Toronto. She finally went to Otonabee to look after Mr. Bennett. When she went there he was in a tent by the riverside. There was another tent which she occupied. Her home was about a mile from the place where the tents were located. It was nearly the last of August, 1911, that she went there. The tents were occupied until after the snow had fallen, after which they went to her home. She prepared the meals, washed the dishes, made the beds, and kept the place clean and tidy. For the water she either went to the house or to a spring in the woods. For the milk she went home twice a day, and sometimes oftener. She got practically all the supplies at her home.

Sat on the Bank.

During all the time she was with him in the tents, Mr. Bennett was not to the house more than a couple of times. He used to sit on the bank where it was cool. He had a motor boat, but she did not allow him to use it very often as he was not strong enough. He was unable to crank the engine and she was accustomed to do it. Occasionally she read to him.

During that fall she did not do any work for her mother. She spent her time at the tents and could not help at home. She was up several times night after night attending to him. His coughing was pretty bad at times, and she was aware that the doctor considered his trouble tubercular.

His condition when they removed to her mother's place was about the same during the winter, and in the spring he became worse and he grew worse during the summer months. The attention required became greater as his condition grew worse.

Went to England.

In August he went back to England, leaving on August 3. She understood he died the following April. It was several months afterwards that she heard of his death.

Mr. Bennett told her that he would make his will and see that she would be left all right. She learned later that he had made his will, naming her in it. Over a year ago she learned that he had revoked his will, leaving her out of it.

Engaged to Employer.

To Mr. Moore, witness said she was acquainted with Mr. Bennett about five years before he went to the Golf Links after her. She became engaged to him about two years before he was taken ill, and remained engaged to him until his death.

Mr. Moore had a couple of letters, written by Miss Head to Mr. Bennett, Sr., and Mrs. Bennett, and put them in as exhibits 1 and 2.

She never asked anyone for her wages. She kept up a correspondence with Mr. Bennett while he was in England before his death. She was told that $450.00 had been left to her in the will. She did not look for it because she expected the estate to settle with her.

The case is being continued this afternoon.

DEATH OF BRAVE 57TH OFFICER

His Life in Brief.

Major Bennett was a son of the late Jonathan Bennett of North Monaghan, and was born in that Township about two miles southwest of the city. He was educated here and in Toronto and for several years afterwards was in business with his brother at Chatsworth, Ont. The greater part of his life was, however, spent on his farm in North Monaghan, and for a number of years he was Clerk of the township of North Monaghan. He was one of the best known residents of the district and had a host of friends to whom the news will come as a great shock. For the last few years he had held the position of Superintendent of Colonization of Roads for the Ontario Government, his work taking him for the large part of his time into New Ontario. Major Bennett never relaxed in his duties in connection with the 57th.

In politics he was a Conservative. He was a prominent Mason and will be greatly missed among the Masonic fraternity as well as in many other circles. He was unmarried. One brother, Mr. J. J. Bennett of Peterborough, and a sister, Mrs. Pope, of Montreal, survive. Another brother, Samuel Bennett of North Monaghan passed away since the war began.

Lieut.-Col. Walker's Tribute.

Lieut.-Col. Walker of the 57th Regiment is naturally greatly affected by the news. Major Bennett was not only a brother officer but a close personal friend.

"The friends of Major Bennett," said Lt.-Col. Walker to-day, "will find words inadequate to give expression to all the qualities which made him the man he was, genial and warmhearted, yet thorough and aggressive, he despised pretence and popularity unmerited.

[illegible] appealed to him, and he spared neither time, pains nor effort to make himself an efficient officer for which he was so well qualified by his power for organization and initiative by a commanding presence and by a strong sympathy for those entrusted to his charge. Though appalled with the tragedy of his death we are justly proud of his heroic sacrifice on the battlefield and believe that he himself would not chose an end more glorious. Personally, I lose a true friend of long standing. The officer of an esteemed and respected comrade, his company, a faithful and judicious commander, and the Empire, the services of one who was every inch a soldier."

Messages of regret have been received by Col. Walker from Major L. M. Hayes of Guelph, and Lieut. T. J. Wallace of Toronto, former officers of the 57th Regiment.

Mayor Buller's Views.

"He was a good citizen and a good soldier. He fell in a gallant fight. I have known the late Major Bennett for a number of years and regret as many others will regret, to hear of his demise."

This was Mayor Buller's tribute to the Peterborough officer who fell while leading the charge of the Canadians in the vicinity of Ypres. The Mayor expressed the hope that some day a monument would be erected in Peterborough in memory of those from this city who may fall in the present conflict.

Lieut. Matthews Wounded.

There will be every sympathy for Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Matthews in the message that reached them last night from the Adjutant General that their son, Lieut. Harold Stratton Matthews of the 2nd (Ottawa) Battery of the 1st brigade had been wounded in action. No particulars were given and Mr. Matthews has been unable to get any more information to-day as to how seriously his son was wounded.

Lieut. Matthews is a well known Peterborough young man. He was born here twenty-one years ago and received his early education in the local Public schools and Collegiate Institute, afterwards attending Royal Military College, Kingston, from which he graduated with high honours last spring. His educational career throughout was a brilliant success. In athletics, too, Lieut. Matthews was a well known figure. While in Peterborough he played quarter-back with the Collegiate Institute Rugby team, and left wing for the Junior O.H.A. team. At R. M. C. he continued his successes in sports, playing on both the senior rugby and senior hockey teams of the college.

At the beginning of hostilities, Lieut. Matthews secured a commission in the Ottawa battery and went to the front with that unit. Only yesterday his parents received a letter from him stating that his battery had been reviewed by Gen. Smith-Dorrien, who informed them that they were shortly to be moved to replace British batteries which had been so decimated by casualties that they had to be relieved. What they had seen up to that time was child's play to what was coming, General Smith-Dorrien stated.

Widow Obtains Judgment For $1,500

The following judgment of local interest has been handed down in Osgoode Hall, Toronto:

Sucee vs. G.T.R. Co.—E. C. Cattanach for plaintiff and Official Guardian. A. W. Langmuir for dependants. Action for damages for death of husband.

Judgment for plaintiff by consent for $1,500 and costs; $500 to be paid into Court to credit of widow, and invested for her until she wants it, and $1,000 to credit of infant.

The above refers to an action brought by Mrs. Annie E. Sucee, widow of Wilbert F. Sucee, who was killed at Midland in November last. Peck, Kerr & McElderry, Peterborough, have acted throughout for the plaintiff.

British Prisoners in Germany

From time immemorial prisoners of war have evoked pity and sympathy. The agony and humiliation of the British prisoners must be indescribably acute and galling. But from that state of suffering there can be no redress, it being part of the fortunes of war, but the lack of comforts and food stands in a different category. This want will grow in volume and intensity as the days go by.

As a result of an official organization having been created recently to carry parcels to the British prisoners in Germany, insuring proper transmission through a neutral carrier, the "Khaki" Magazine of Imperial House, Kingsway, London, has stated a Fund to supply food and comforts for those who have no relatives or friends to look after them, as it is known that these poor fellows are not getting a proper supply of food.

An appeal is made to you for Two Dollars only, as there are so many demands made upon you in other directions. This money will go for the direct benefit of the prisoners, as there is no cost of transmission and no waste of any description, information having been established showing the kind of food and clothing, etc., which can be sent without confiscation by the German Government.

This appeal should get a large response as there is no other Fund which deals with this particular condition.

The "KHAKI" Magazine and Cabled News Sheet was created primarily as a gift for the Overseas Soldiers, bringing them late news from their homes. It is now supplying, free of charge, in addition to the soldiers at the front and in training, the various Hospitals in England and France, as well as the Grand Old Fleet. It is a purely patriotic endeavour and in no way commercial.

When the "Khaki" Magazine was founded, amongst the many who gave their support and expressions of good will for the work it has undertaken were:

The Duke of Wellington, K.G.
The Duke of Manchester.
The First Lord of the Admiralty.
The Countess of Zetland.
Lady Leven.
Mrs. Leopold de Rothschild.
Lieut. General Sir Robert Baden-Powell, K.C.V.O.
The Right Hon. Austen Chamberlain, P.C.M.P.
Lord Desborough.
The Earl of Essex.
Viscount Bryce.
Lord Willoughby de Broke.
The Earl of Donaldshay.
Viscount Milner.
Earl of Kintore.
Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P.
Sir William Bull, M.P.
Mr. Evelyn Cecil, M.P.
The Right Hon. Sir Charles Johnston, Lord Mayor of London.
The Right Hon. J. E. Rayner, Lord Mayor of Liverpool.
The Right Hon. W. H. Bowater, Lord Mayor of Birmingham.
The Right Hon. James Taggart, Lord Provost of Aberdeen.
The Right Hon. Crawford McCullagh, Lord Mayor of Belfast.

All subscriptions will be published in this paper, and you are requested to send yours to any office of the ROYAL BANK OF CANADA, and mark it "KHAKI PRISONERS' FUND." The subscriptions will also be duly acknowledged in the Magazine and various newspapers in England from time to time. 2d-09-28-8

Germans To Buy Food For a Four Years' Siege

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 28—A telegram to the Evening News from Copenhagen quotes the German Counselor of State Herr Gottschalk as saying that systematic efforts were being inaugurated in Germany for the purchase of sufficient foodstuffs for a four-years' supply. This is being done, it is said, on instructions to German chambers of commerce from Dr. von Bethman-Hollweg, the Imperial Chancellor, on the ground that Germany "must be prepared for at least this length."

Herr Gottschalk is on his way to Sweden and Norway to organize a system for making these purchases.

Heavier Water Pressure For The West End

Is Assured by the Utilities Commission—The Salary Surplus

At a meeting of the Public Utilities Commission which was held yesterday afternoon, it was decided to instruct the Waterworks Superintendent to relay an eight inch water main on Hunter Street. This will provide for a heavier pressure in the west end of the city, as the main will be connected up with the ten inch main on Smith Street, which at the present time is not working up to full capacity. The work will be undertaken at an early date in order to prepare the way for street paving.

The Salary Question.

One of the clerks employed in the Utilities office put in an application for an increase in salary. This was considered by the Commissioners and at the suggestion of Mr. Fisk, manager of the Utilities Department, action was deferred. Mr. Fisk made passing reference to the advisability of introducing a percentage basis of increase for employees. Mr. Matthews and others were of the opinion that such a measure was not altogether practicable as it enabled some to obtain a raise when they were not actually entitled to it. Pay each individual on a scale compatible with the value of their services to the city, seems to be the policy in the minds of the Commissioners.

Substantial Surplus.

A statement was submitted showing the cost of operation of the electrical department of the Utilities Commission for the first six months or since it was taken over by the city in October last. While the exact amount is not known it is understood there is a substantial surplus. There are a few disbursements yet to provide for. When this is done the full text of the statement will be available.

Miscellaneous Fixtures.

Coffee percolators, electric light fixtures and a number of miscellaneous articles of electrical equipment that came into the possession of the city when the electric lighting system was taken over, will be put on sale.

Will Report.

The Waterworks Superintendent will be asked to furnish a report concerning the water service supplied to Number 197 and 199 Rink Street. It is claimed that the charge is excessive. It was pointed out that the main was laid on that particular section of the street upon condition that the houses so served pay for full house equipment. This was agreed to and has been carried out for a period of six years. Whether a reduction will be made, altogether depends upon the nature of the report asked for. The difficulty is that there do not sufficient houses on the street to procure the necessary ten per cent. revenue on the cost of construction and maintenance.

MacPherson's Sale of Electrical Appliances

The special sale which is now running at the F. J. R. MacPherson stove store, George Street, of "Canadian Beauty" electric appliances, comes at a very opportune time for all who desire a cool house in summer. By reference to an advertisement on another page, the particulars and illustrations of the electric appliances will be seen. They include electric irons, at $2.75, regular price, $4.50; disc stove, $3.15, regular price, $5.00; toaster grill, $3.15, regular price, $5.00; toaster; upright toaster, $2.75, regular price $4.50. These reduced prices make the present special sale a good opportunity to secure some of these economical, hand and cool appliances for summer use.

Five Graduates Received Their Diplomas and Medals at Exercises Last Evening

In Conservatory Hall in Connection With the Nicholls Hospital Training School for Nurses—Miss Empey Winner of Bandaging Prize.

MANY FRIENDS PRESENT

As their regard for a term of diligent work five young ladies were presented with their diplomas and medals last evening in the Conservatory Hall at the Graduating Exercises in connection with the Nicholls Hospital Training School for Nurses, taking affirmation as full-fledged Graduate Nurses. The personnel of the Graduating Class was as follows:

Miss Marguerite Hughes Hanmer, Miss Lila Cecilia Roberts, Miss Edith Gertrude B. Howson, Miss Gertrude May Fife, and Miss Effie Adaline Empey.

The Conservatory Hall, which was prettily decorated with flags and bunting for the occasion, was crowded with friends of the five young ladies, members of the Board of Trustees, and friends of the hospital, who followed with interest the proceedings and the splendid programme of speeches and music.

The stage, upon which were besides the five young ladies graduating, Richard Hall, Esq.; Rev. J. P. Wilson, Dr. N. H. Sutton, Dr. A. E. Hammond, Miss Elizabeth M. Beamish, Superintendent of the Nicholls Hospial Training School, and Miss S. A. Sanderson, Assistant Superintendent, was resplendent with bouquets of fine flowers and each young lady carried a large bunch of red roses, and with their chairs placed in a row with a background of roses and cut flowers the effect was very pleasing.

At the door the people were met by Mr. John Crane and Dr. Hammond, composing the reception committee, and each was presented with a programme, a souvenir of the occasion.

Upon Richard Hall, Esq., the veteran trustee, devolved the duties of chairman. In his address he congratulated the Graduating Class for 1915, wishing them success in their vocation. He called upon Rev. J. R. Wilson for an address to the audience and Dr. N. H .Sutton, who addressed the graduates.

Miss E. A. Empey was the winner of the bandaging prize, and Dr. A. E. Hammond made the presentation, congratulating her upon her success at this important branch of the work. Miss Empey took 90 per cent in her examinations, which is a particularly [illegible]

The musical programme was excellent, those taking part being Miss Dorothy Allan, Miss Ida Sanderson, Mr. Asa Huycke and Mr. Maurice Park. Mr. Park rendered a vocal solo, Miss Allan and Mr. Park a vocal duet, Miss Allan a vocal solo, Mr. Huycke a vocal solo, and Miss Sanderson a piano solo. The programme was as follows:

Richard Hall, Esq.—Chairman.
Address—Rev. J. P. Wilson.
Address to Graduates—Dr. N. H. Sutton.
Taking Affirmation, and Presentation of Diplomas and Medals.
Presentation of Bandaging Prize to Miss E. A. Empey—By Dr. A. E. Hammond.

Mr. Hall gave the graduates the Affirmation and presented the diplomas, and handed the medals to Miss Beamish who had the honour of pinning them upon the recipients.

After the usual congratulations luncheon was served, Messrs. Coleman Bros. catering, and the chairs were cleared away and those remaining danced to music supplied by Mr. Asa Huycke, until twelve o'clock.

Kaiser's Report of German Successes

To His Sister, the Queen of Greece —"Woe Betide Those Who Oppose Us"

Special Cable to The Examiner:

SOFIA, April 28.—The Kaiser has telegraphed his sister, the Queen of Greece, a detailed report of German successes on the battle fronts. He declares emphatically that at no point is the enemy able to advance and gives conviction that the triumph of German arms is in sight. "Woe betide those who oppose us." is his closing statement.

In as much as the message was sent in clear language and not in code, diplomats believe it is intended to influence neutral countries it traversed, en route to Greece.

Choir Concert At All Saints'

Was Thoroughly Enjoyed by a Large and Appreciative Audience —The Programme

To the choir of All Saints' church belongs the credit of carrying to a successful issue, one of the most enjoyable choir concerts of the season. Despite the uncertainty of the weather, the Parish Hall of All Saints' church was well filled last evening with an appreciative audience which quickly responded to the appealing merit of the numbers that were so ably rendered. The concert was under the leadership of Mr. George E. Chandler. His efforts combined with the vocal proficiency of the other members of the choir constituted a very satisfying programme. Miss Flowers as accompanist assumed a large share in the programme. Her accompaniments were played with a true sense of that demand.

The programme, which was of a semi-patriotic nature, was carried through with vigour and finish, while the choral work brought out the fact that the choir is well balanced and capable of performing to advantage. All the solo parts were well handled, also the glees which were effectively rendered and in sympathy with the musical qualities of the other numbers that rounded out a very complete and enjoyable concert.

Mr. George East supplied the trumpet part in the "Trumpeter." His work was of a high order and was thoroughly enjoyed. Each number on the programme was encored and while not always acceded to, the encores brought out a number of generous responses.

The Programme.

SPECIAL SELF-DENIAL WEEK FOR SALVATION ARMY

The Salvation Army has—as an organization—given both to the religious and philanthropic worlds many examples of what great things can be done by fixity of purpose and unity of effort; among them none more striking than its Annual Week of Prayer and Self-Denial.

We understand the period set apart for this purpose for the present year is from May 2nd to 9th, and we are not backward in commending the Appeal to the generosity of our readers.

In addition to being a great influence for good in this country, the Army is a huge Missionary Organization, operating in no less than fifty-two countries and colonies, and preaching the Gospel in thirty-four different languages.

From what we can gather, its extensive Social Scheme for the amelioration of the physical needs of the poor and the outcast is being carried on with much success in other lands. Take India, for instance, where its Famine Relief Operations, Savings Banks, and Co-operative Schemes are proving of great blessing, and are exceedingly successful.

The resident Officers Adjutant and Mrs. McElhiney, together with the local co-workers, are extremely anxious that the contribution towards the Home and Foreign Missionary and Social Funds shall be a liberal one, and donations may be handed to either the Officers or members of the Army.

OPENING OF NAVIGATION ON THE CANAL

Yesterday the slip above the Lakefield locks was filled with water, which will float J. E. A. Fitzgerald's fleet, consisting of the tug Ajax and three scows, which wintered there. These have been thoroughly overhauled and out in shape for another busy season. The boys on the Ajax never eat any idle bread. The J. B. McCaul and the famous "Bessie Butler" will also find their feet.

The temporary dam is being removed to-day, and next week the Life Lock at Peterborough will be ready for use, when it will be possible to make the through trip.

The Stony Lake Navigation Co., who purchased the "Manita" last fall, will place that steamer on the canal route this summer.

A process has been invented in India for producing saltpetre of about 94 per cent. purity.

It is reported that we are going to have a new station and ticket office at Sturgeon Street crossing.

Miss Edna Stewart is the guest of her brother, Mr. Thos. Stewart of Franklin.

DONT'S FOR CHURCHGOERS.

We are constantly reading of dont's for dancing and dont's for dining, don'ts for golfing and don'ts for gardening, so why should not a few don'ts for worshipping come in a trifle apropos? Even Peterborough kirks are not exceptions to these "don'ts":

Don't be late to the service; if tardiness is unavoidable, enter quietly and do not disturb those about by a noisy removal of wraps and a general getting settled.

Don't wear showy clothes; a plain tailored suit and a small hat is the proper costume for church.

Don't remove your gloves in church especially if a handful of rings is to be displayed.

Don't glare and fuss if your seat happens to be occupied by strangers. The usher is to blame, not the newcomers.

Don't be remiss about offering the prayer book or hymn book, as the case may be.

Don't neglect to pass the offertory plate to those in the same pew, thus making it unnecessary for them to reach awkwardly across to it.

A Physician's Opinion

A physician who uses Grape-Nuts in his family was recently asked his opinion of this food. He said—

"It is a concentrated, palatable, nourishing and healthful food. Sweetened slightly and moistened with good rich cream, Grape-Nuts makes a very toothsome dish."

There's a reason for these excellent qualities in Grape-Nuts. This food is made of whole wheat and barley, thoroughly baked and processed to render it easily and quickly digestible—generally in about one hour.

Grape-Nuts contains all the rich nutriment of the grains, including the phosphorus, iron, sulphur and other mineral elements so necessary for proper nourishment of body and nerve cells. It's a healthful food, and economical also.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, April 27.—Excellent crop prospects for the U. S., possibly the best ever known, led to heavy selling today in the wheat market here. The outcome was a nervous close at 1¼c to 2¾c net decline. Corn finished 1¼c to 1⅝c down, oats off 1⅝c to 2⅝c, and provisions the same as last night to 7½c lower.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

TORONTO, April 27.—Following prices were quoted on the market to-day:

Canadian western oats—No. 2, 71c; No. 3, 69c, bay ports.

Manitoba flour quotations at Toronto are: First patents, $6.20 in cotton and $6.11 in jute; strong bakers, $5.90 in cotton, $5.80 in jute.

Ontario oats—No. 2 white, 69c to 69c, outside; 68c to 68c, Toronto.

Buckwheat—70c to 72c.

Bran—Manitoba, $25 to $27, in bags, Toronto, and shorts, $29 to $30, Toronto; middlings, $31 to $32.

Rolled oats—$3.40 to $3.50 per bag.

Barley—Ontario, No. 3, 73c to 75c, outside.

Manitoba wheat — Bay ports, No. 1 northern, $1.65; No. 2, $1.64; No. 3, $1.62, track, Goderich; winter storage, Goderich, ½c per bushel extra.

Corn—New, No. 2 yellow, 84½c, Toronto freight, all rail; for opening of navigation, No. 2, 82½c, c.i.f.; No. 3, 81½c.

Ontario flour—$5.15 to $5.20, nominal, seaboard.

Peas—No. 2, $1.80.

Rye—No. 2, $1.13 to $2.14.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, April 27.—Wheat futures opened ⅝c to ⅞c lower, oats ⅝c to 1c lower, and flax ⅞c to 1c down.

Sentiments expressed today were to the effect that prices were high enough meantime, and, while there was no fear of a slump in the old crop month, the outlook on the new crop was exceptionally bright.

At noon the range in fluctuations was ⅛c on the two near months, and ⅝c on October. Leading was light in all futures. The cash demand was only fair, and offerings were heavy for Nos. 2 and 3 northern wheat. There was a fair demand in barley or flax.

Total inspections on Monday were 418 cars, of which 312 were wheat and 66 oats.

There was a recovery from the low points of the day of 1c to 1⅛c on May and July at the close.

Wheat futures closed 2c to 2⅛c lower, cash 2¼c to 2c lower on contract grades, oats 2⅛c to 2⅛c lower, and flax 1⅝c down on both grades.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, April 27.—There was practically no demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba wheat or new crop American wheat today, and cables generally reported the English markets quieter, with an easier undertone. In sympathy with the weakness in the Winnipeg option market for oats, and the break in prices of 2c to 2½c per bushel, the local market was weak, and prices declined 2c per bushel. There was no improvement in the demand, and business generally was very quiet. The export trade in spring wheat flour continues quiet, but the tone is firm. Millfeed firm. Butter unchanged. Cheese firm. Eggs active.

CHEESE MARKETS.

STIRLING, Ont., April 27.—At today's cheese board 250 boxes were offered, and all sold at 17½c.

CAMPBELLFORD, Ont., April 27.—The cheese board met here today. One hundred and eighty-five cheese boarded; all sold at 16 13-16c.

CATTLE MARKETS

Stockers and Feeders.

Feeders, 800 to 900 lbs., sold at $6.25 to $7; feeders, 600 to 800 lbs., sold at $5.50 to $6.00; stockers, 500 to 600 lbs., at $5.50 to $5.75.

Milkers and Springers.

Choice fresh cows and forward springers sold at $65 to $100 each, and medium to good at $50 to $65; common at $40 to $50.

Veal Calves.

Choice veal calves, $8 to $10; good, $7.50 to $8.75; medium, $7 to $7.50; common calves, $5.25 to $6; hobs, $2.50 to $3.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, ewes, sold at $7 to $8; heavy sheep and rams, $4.50 to $6; yearling lambs, $7.50 to $10; spring lambs at $5 to $10 each.

Hogs.

Sales were made at $8.75 to $8.90 for hogs, weighed off cars, the bulk selling at $8.85.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 13,000; market slow; native, $7.50 to $8.50, lambs, native, $8.30 to $10.90.

Banana Puffs.

Three ripe bananas.
One cup flour.
One teaspoonful baking powder.
One-half teaspoonful salt.
One cup milk.
One tablespoonful melted butter.

Sift flour, baking powder into bowl; and milk, well beaten egg and butter. Have 6 pop-over irons very hot and brushed with butter. Skin, scrape and cut the bananas in half; put half of a banana in each pan. Cover with 1 tablespoonful of butter; put in a very hot oven and serve warm. Dust with sugar.

In order that due honor may be paid soldiers or sailors who may be overtaken by death in Montreal, an organization called "The Last Post," has established a fund which provides these with a military funeral. A plot of ground is reserved in Mount Royal Cemetery, conspicuous by the pile of cannon balls. It is the ambition of Captain Walsh, Marine Superintendent of the C. P. R., who is an ardent worker for "The Last Post," to establish a permanent home for soldiers and sailors where they may find a corner in which to smoke a pipe and fight their battles over again.

Cruelties to the British Prisoners Are Fully Proven

Kitchener Says He is Forced to Believe Prisoners Are Maltreated

LONDON, April 28.—War Secretary Kitchener told the House of Lords yesterday that British prisoners had been insulted, maltreated, and even shot down by their German captors. He made a statement to the House on this subject, in which he spoke in part as follows:

"I have been forced with reluctance to accept as indisputably true the maltreatment by the German army of British prisoners. The Hague Convention has been flagrantly disregarded by German officers. Our prisoners have been stripped and maltreated in various ways, and in some cases the evidence goes to prove that they have been shot in cold blood. Our officers, even when wounded, have been wantonly insulted and frequently struck."

Speaking in the debate in the Commons, Premier Asquith said:

"It is a horrible story from every point of view—one of the blackest spots on even German methods of war. My object in rising is to say, with all emphasis and all deliberation, that we shall not forget, and we ought not to forget, this horrible record of calculated cruelty and crime.

"We shall, at the end of this war, hold it to be our duty to exact such reparation against those who are proved to be guilty agents in this matter as it may be possible for us to inflict. I do not think we would be doing our duty, either to those brave, unfortunate men, or to the honor of our country, or to the plain dictates of humanity, if we should be content with anything less than that."

Berlin's War Breakfast.

Berlin ate its first "war breakfast" recently. For the first time Berliners were compelled to go without their freshly-baked coffee Brodchen (rolls). The new "war bread" laws prohibit the baking of fresh bread rolls or cakes, so that householders have to content themselves not only with "stale" goods, but also with Brodchen baked of a composition of wheat, rye, and potato flour, which is darker in color and less tasty in flavor.

FIVE MINUTE CURE IF STOMACH IS BAD

"Pape's Diapepsin" is quickest, surest indigestion cure known.

You don't want a slow remedy when your stomach is bad—or an uncertain one—or a harmful one—your stomach is too valuable; you mustn't injure it with drastic drugs.

Pape's Diapepsin is noted for its speed in giving relief; its harmlessness; its certain unfailing action in regulating sick, sour, gassy stomach. Its millions of cures in indigestion, dyspepsia, gastritis and other stomach trouble has made it famous the world over.

Keep this perfect stomach doctor in your home — keep it handy — get a large fifty-cent case from any drug store and then if anyone should eat something which doesn't agree with them, if what they eat lays like lead, ferments and sours and forms gas; causes headache, dizziness and nausea; eructations of acid and undigested food—remember as soon as Pape's Diepepsin comes in contact with the stomach all such distress vanishes. Its promptness, certainty and ease in overcoming the worst stomach disorders is a revelation to those who try it.

Germans Thrown Back Again Over the Yser Canal

And French Retake Hartmann's Weilerkopf

ON THE BELGIAN FRONTIER, April 28.—Yesterday's reports indicate that the terrific losses of the Germans in their great efforts to smash the allies on the Yser have been merely thrown away. It is now certain that the remnants of the German attacking force which managed to pass the Yser and take possession of Lizerne have been almost annihilated.

No Germans now remain on the left bank of the canal. Fighting far more terrible than that which took place in the autumn, when the canal ran red with blood, has thrown the Germans back to the right bank.

The Germans were driven out of Lizerne Monday, when their last man left the place as a consequence of the terrible accuracy of the British artillery. On that little wedge in the lines the allies' efforts were at once concentrated. So severe was the fighting that only smashed walls and dead opponents were found when the British advance took place.

Bloody fights have been raging for two days along the canal, on the front from Steenstrate and Lizerne to Boesinghe, where the Germans were shelling the road to Elverdinghe to stop the sending of reinforcements. Around the most northerly part of this section the fiercest encounters took place. Heavy reinforcements brought up by both sides were launched in the battle. The allies had been preparing a tremendous move forward, which again cost the Germans heavy losses and rendered futile most of their work of the previous days.

All along the section of the line due east and west from St. Julien towards Gravenstafel the British thundered into the German trenches a murderous hail of shell. It was this movement which threatened the rear of the German line fighting on the Yser, coupled with the magnificent qualities shown by the men on the canal itself, that caused the Germans hurriedly to evacuate the hard-won ground.

All indications point to the fact that the offensive has now definitely passed to the allies, who, having brought up reinforcements, are now attacking. The tide seems to have turned, and it is strongly believed that the allies will now undertake a big offensive along the St. Julien front and will inflict tremendous losses.

The Germans have been retaliating by dropping bombs upon places behind the allies' lines and are now rushing all available troops to the St. Julien line to meet the advance of the British. In this neighborhood the decision may be looked for.

On another front, the Eparges-St. Remi-Calonne trenches, where the German attacks were also violent, the initiative has also passed again to the allies, after the German attacks were completely repulsed. The French here are now taking the offensive and administering terrific punishment to the enemy. Fighting was particularly bloody in this region, the French War Office citing as an example the fact that nearly 1,000 men are estimated as killed at one point alone on this front.

Hartmanns-Weilerkopf summit did not long remain in the hands of the Germans. The French Alpine chasseurs not only retook the topmost peak yesterday, but advanced about one-eighth of a mile beyond. They are now creeping down the eastern slopes.

MURDER STILL A MYSTERY.

Police Can Find No Motive For

GODERICH, April 23.—Inspector Reburn, of Toronto, sent here Monday by the provincial department, cooperated with Crown Attorney Seager and Chief of Police Postlethwaite in investigating the mysterious death of Robert Bean, of Colborne Township, but so far no light has been shed on the strange circumstances surrounding the murder.

As far as can be ascertained the murder, which was deliberate and well-timed, was not for the purpose of robbery, but of revenge for some fancied injury, or prompted by some deeper motive. The body lay on the road after it fell from the buggy, but there were no indications of robbery as the pockets were not disturbed.

Mr. Bean was returning from a visit to a friend at about twenty minutes to eleven and when opposite the home of Col. Varcoe fifteen minutes later a shot was fired. Col. Varcoe and his son heard the report and immediately after a voice called "What be ye doing there." A second shot occurred and then two vehicles were heard going opposite ways.

No notice was taken by Col. Varcoe, but some time afterwards Ernest Patterson informed him that a body was lying on the road.

Germany Talks About Long War.

LONDON, April 28. — A telegram to The Evening News from Copenhagen quotes the German counsellor of state, Herr Gottschalk, as saying that systematic efforts were being inaugurated in Germany for the purchase of sufficient foodstuffs for a four years' supply. This is being done, it is said, on instructions to German Chambers of Commerce from Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Imperial Chancellor, on the ground that Germany "must be prepared for at least this length."

Pilot Didn't Do His Duty.

NEW YORK, April 24. — Six officers and twenty member of the crew of the American steamship Greenbriar, which was blown up by a mine April 2, 47 miles outside the Bremerton, arrived here yesterday on the Holland-American liner Rotterdam. Capt. J. Dalton, charged that the German mine pilot pointed out the mine an instant before the ship struck, and then leaped into a life boat he had in readiness.

Downward Revision.

After shaking hands at the ferry dock the other day one colored man inquired of another, "Didn't you marry de Widow Jones a few months ago?"

"Dat's me—I did," was the answer, "but I've done left her."

"Why, how's that?"

"Well, de first week she called me honey, de next week she walked around and called me old Richards, the third week she cum for me wid a flatiron, an' I'se kinder got a hunch she don't like me."—Argonaut.

Kingston Standard's 9000-fold Sock Shower

Special to The Examiner.

KINGSTON, Ont., April 28 — The Kingston Daily Standard last night formally closed its sock campaign by holding a monster mass meeting. The main thoroughfare of the city was blocked as a consequence by fully eight thousand people. At the meeting the announcement was made that the Standard had raised over 9,000 pairs of socks, which is believed to be the greatest number raised by any city in Canada. The Artillery Band and Pipers Band were in attendance and speeches were made by Mayor Sutherland, W. P. Noble, M.P., Col. Ogilvie, Trooper Mulloy and others.

What is said to be the largest pumping plant of the kind ever built, having a capacity of 1,000,000 gallons a minute, has been established in Louisiana for drainage purposes.

Will Ask For Plans And Specifications

The Utilities Commission [illegible] to ask Mr. Wm. Kenn [illegible] of Montreal, to submit plans [illegible] specifications for an auxiliary pumping plant with a capacity of four million gallons per day. When this stage of the work is completed a by-law may be submitted to the ratepayers asking authority to expend twenty thousand dollars for an auxiliary plan, thirty thousand dollars with which to purchase land and build an electric substation and thirty thousand dollars to be expended on hydro electric improvements.

It has been suggested to the Commission that a plant be erected halfway between the centre of the city and the pumping station, and that it be used to generate electricity which under ordinary conditions, could be used for electric lighting and other purposes. The Commissioners were of the opinion that the plant should be located at the head or in other words, at the present pumping station. It could be operated once a month so as to ensure it being kept in proper order. A plant of the capacity mentioned would provide against all contingencies, such as a shut down through anchor ice and other causes.

Recommended steam.

Mr. Kennedy, who is thoroughly familiar with the local situation, has recommended the installation of a steam turbine outfit or posibly a gasoline engine.

Last winter the supply was cut off for several hours owing to anchor ice. This rendered the fire fighting facilities of the city useless, with the result that a motor chemical engine was hurriedly sent for and kept here until the trouble passe dover. This is a trouble that is likely to occur at any time and, according to reports furnished by a number of engineers, cannot be avoided. The installation of an auxiliary plant is regarded as the only practical solution.

The Commission decided to have Mr. Kennedy furnish plans and specifications.

Lindsay Says Proposed Cheese Board Union Is Not Practicable

Regarding the proposal from the Peterborough Cheese Board that Lindsay board cheese her, the Lindsay Warder says:

Mr. Wm. Flavelle, who has been a buyer on the local board for years past, and also on the Peterborough Board, claims that the scheme will not work out. Sellers on the Lindsay Board would have to arrive in Lindsay on early trains in order to reach Peterborough and for other reasons the idea would not be workable.

MOTHERS' CLUB HELD MEETING

The meeting held yesterday by the Mothers' Club of the King George School, although not as largely attended as was hoped for, owing to the thunderstorm, was very much enjoyed by those present. The instructive paper by Mrs. W. Christie proved very interesting. It was followed by a well-rendered solo "A Dream of Home," by Mrs. F. Whitehouse. Mrs. A. A. Perrin also delighted the gathering with her singing of "Macushla." Mrs. Jas. Locke acted as accompanist in her usual capable manner.

The Mothers' Club is very grateful to those who contributed so much to the pleasure of the meeting, especially as the weather was so threatening.

VERTON WIN CHAMPIONSHIP OF FIRST DIVISION LEAGUE

The Final Standing of the Clubs Who Aspired to the Honours—Winners of the English League

Everton have won the championship of the First Division of the English League, and are due heartiest congratulations. For a time they did not seem in the running compared with Oldham Athletic, Manchester City and Sheffield Wednesday. These clubs gradually weakened however, and a week ago the two last mentioned were seen to be out of the running unless they could win all their games, and Oldham and Everton lose theirs. On Saturday last Bradford put the City out of count, and Wednesday only managed to gather one point from Burnley. Then Liverpool were kind enough to oblige their neighbours at Aunfield by beating Oldham, and this loss of the latter, together with the addition of the game of April 3, awarded to Middlesboro, completed their schedule. It was therefore only required of Everton to draw with Chelsea yesterday in order to win the championship, and this they managed to do, and there is such joy at Goodison Park that a danger exists that the supply of "Toffee" is being affected.

How They Stand.

Here are he final standing of the clubs who aspired to the honours:

| | P. | W. | L. | D. | F. | A. | P. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Everton | 38 | 19 | 11 | 8 | 75 | 49 | 46 |
| Oldham A. | 38 | 17 | 10 | 11 | 70 | 56 | 45 |
| Manchester C. | 38 | 15 | 10 | 13 | 60 | 42 | 43 |
| Liverpool | 38 | 15 | 10 | 13 | 61 | 54 | 43 |
| Burnely | 38 | 18 | 13 | 7 | 61 | 47 | 43 |
| Blackburn R. | 38 | 18 | 13 | 7 | 79 | 61 | 43 |
| Sheffield U. | 38 | 15 | 10 | 13 | 49 | 42 | 43 |

Still Undecided.

By their victory over Aston Villa Monday Manchester United pulled themselves out of all danger of being relegated to the second division. Tottenham, of course, as we know, are already a certainty to go down, and it now remains to be seen whether it is to be Notts County or Chelsea who will accompany. Each has one game to play, and on the results depend the issue. Here is how they stand:

| | P. | W. | L. | D. | F. | A. | P. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Notts County | 37 | 8 | 16 | 13 | 39 | 67 | 29 |
| Chelsea | 37 | 8 | 16 | 13 | 51 | 63 | 29 |
| Tottenham | 38 | 8 | 18 | 12 | 57 | 90 | 28 |

Previous Winners.

| | Points. |

CHOCOLATE WAFERS.

Two squares of chocolate, butter six of egg (melted together), two eggs broken into that, one cup of sugar, one cup flour, one teaspoon vanilla, one-half teaspoon yeast powder. Drop on buttered tins from a teaspoon. Allow room for them to spread. When done they should be the size of macaroons. These are very easily made and considered very nice.

FOSTER GETS OUT.

Garland's Supporters However Cause Split In Carleton Riding.

OTTAWA, April 28. — A. Dewitt Foster, M.P. for King's, N.S., has sent in his resignation as a member of Parliament.

In the dying days of the session Sir Robert Borden virtually read Mr. Foster and Mr. W. F. Garland, M.P. for Carleton, Ont., out of the Conservative party.

Both of them had become involved in war contracts

The executive of the Liberal-Conservative Association met at Stittsville yesterday to determine the status of W. F. Garland.

Thirteen members of the executive were present, six of whom urged Mr. Garland's resignation and seven of whom favored him as a candidate again. A motion was put asking Mr. Garland to resign his seat, but was defeated, and an amendment endorsed by the seven which favored waiting on Premier Borden to ask him to "explain the situation more fully" was carried.

This is the first time in Canadian political history that a Premier took such strong action regarding members of his party, who failed to live up to the standard required of members of Parliament.

Three Queens at Matinee.

LONDON, April 28.—Three queens, Queen Mary of England, Queen Alexandra, widow of King Edward, and Queen Amelia, widow of King Carlos of Portugal, attended a royal matinee at the Drury Lane theatre yesterday afternoon for the benefit of the American Women's War Hospital at Paignton.

Lady Arthur Paget organized the matinee.

Huge Cement Order.

MONTREAL, April 28.—The Dominion Government has awarded the Canada Cement Co. a contract for 2,500,000 barrels of cement. Next to the contract for cement for the Panama Canal, this is the largest order ever given for this commodity. The cement will be used in Welland Canal extensions.

FUGITIVES SHOT DOWN.

Germans Turned Machine Guns on Gas-Poisoned Soldiers.

PARIS, April 28.—Describing the results of the asphyxiating gases used by the Germans, French soldiers say that the connecting trenches were so choked with fugitives who had fallen unconscious that many soldiers were compelled to climb out and make their way toward the rear over the open ground.

As soon as the Germans perceived that the French were leaving their trenches over ground they opened up an intense rifle and machine gun fire along that portion of the front, which is about three miles in extent. It was this fire which caught the wounded brought to the hospital, they having been picked up by French troops held in reserve. These reserves, counter-attacking, carried the greater part of the trenches which had been evacuated.

Free Trips To England.

LONDON, April 28.—Free trips to England and return are foreshadowed for skilled workmen in the United States and in the colonies of Great Britain who are willing to fill the shortage among the armament firms in the British Isles.

Francis D. Acland, financial secretary of the Treasury, announced in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon that the Government was taking steps to obtain such help in the production of munitions of war. Free transportion would be arranged, he said, if suitable labor were discovered without displacing men already effectively engaged in those countries.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

A state of siege is reported in a despatch from Copenhagen to have been declared at Budapest, the capital of Hungary.

Sub-Lieut. Medlicott and a mechanic were killed yesterday in an accident to a naval seaplane at the Calshot air station in England.

German agents are reported to be collecting all the copper coins available throughout the Balkan States and forwarding them to Germany.

Advices from Trebizond say that the average number of deaths daily at Erzerum from typhus and smallpox is 1,000. Massacre ad famine have been the lot of the inhabitants of various villages.

Seven Italian workmen were killed and eleven injured yesterday when there was a premature explosion of dynamite in the cut-off trench at the new Kensico dam, near White Plains, N.Y., throwing out forty tons of rock.

By special order of Maj.-Gen. Hughes, three prominent military band leaders have been appointed as a special committee to arrange a code of martial and patriotic airs to be officially adopted for parades and reviews.

Twenty of the soldiers of the 36th Battalion at Hamilton refused vaccination and as some of the officers were doubtful whether such a measure could be strictly enforced the score of objectors were allowed to go about their duties until word is received from headquarters.

ONLY TWO WEEKS MORE.

Italy Will Be In By Then, Says Peppino Garibaldi.

PARIS, April 28. — Col. Peppino, Garibaldi, who is here for a few days to conclude arrangements for sending the remainder of the Italian volunteers home, has given a remarkable interview, in which he says positively that Italy will declare war upon Austria on or before May 15.

"Italy will attack Austria certainly," he said, "not later than May 15, and possibly sooner.

"Two campaigns will be started [illegible] an hour. Serve either hot or cold.

trian Tyrol, which will consist chiefly of artillery work and will probably be very slow, and another along the coast from a point at the rear of Trieste, where fourteen classes of troops are already under arms.

"In the first line of invaders against Austria there will be 800,000 men against Austria's 300,000 who are now awaiting the attack. Our navy is far stronger than the Austrian navy, and will undoubtedly permit the movement of troops across the Adriatic for attacks elsewhere. The entire campaign will be finished well before winter."

Danger For Judges?

TORONTO, April 28. — The novel suggestion that a judge might be guilty of an indictable offence if he gave judgment in favor of alien enemies was heard at Osgoode Hall yesterday morning, when the Hollinger Mines moved to dismiss the action brought against them by the administrator of the estate of Steve Samulski, a workman, who was killed at the mines. His parents residing in Posen, would be the beneficiaries of any judgment, and they are alien enemies.

Judgment was reserved.

Canadians Were Poisoned.

LONDON, April 28.—The British War Office, in a statement last night supplementing its previous charges that the Germans in their fighting are using noxious gases, says:

"Medical evidence shows that Canadian soldiers have lost their lives in the recent fighting, not from fighting, not from wounds, but from poisoning by gases employed by the enemy."

Two Linemen Electrocuted.

CHATHAM, Ont., April 28.—Samuel Ford and Louis Bechard, two employes of the local Hydro system, were electrocuted at Ontario Hydro-Electric sub-station just outside the city yesterday. Ford came here when Hydro was first installed and Bechard is a Chatham boy. They had been working as linemen on the local system.

troops for the elaborate plans of the war office. The enormous losses since the spring fighting began has convinced the officials generally that at least twice as many men will be needed to prosecute the war to a solution as at first estimated.

Advices from the Belgian headquarters to-day say that last night the Germans distributed a great quantity of asphyxiating gas along the line held by the Belgians, and attempted an advance. The Belgians lay close to the ground, each man with his nostrils filled with cotton with which all the troops on the front line now have been supplied, and waited. When the Germans, believing the enemy unconscious, charged in massed formation, their lines were literally cut to pieces by the machine gun fire, and finally broke and fell back in the utmost disorder.

A RUSSIAN VICTORY

PETROGRAD, April 28.---That the Austro-German forces have been defeated with losses of 8000 in killed and wounded, and several thousand prisoners between Stryj and Marmoras, in the Galician-Bukowina region, is asserted at the war office. Severe fighting has been in progress at a number of points of the Carpathian front since Monday night when the Austrians tried a surprise attack against a position held by two Russian regiments. The attack was successful and the regiments lost heavily before reinforcements arrived and a counter attack was begun. This was in the vicinity of the Uscok Pass, and the Russians later pushed their entire front forward a matter of some three kilometres. It is stated here that the recent lull in the fighting was due to the shifting of the Russian forces, and to bring up large quantities of supplies so that when the offensive is renewed it can be pushed completely.

BERLIN, April 28, via wireless.---Beyond the sweeping statement that the British attempt to retake the lost territory in Flanders have failed, the official war office statement to-day gives no details of the fighting from the North Sea to Ypres. The Germans continue to deny the French claims of the retaking of Hartmannsweilerkopf, and declare that new assaults have been commenced in the Champagne region.

MESSAGE FROM GEN. MERCER

TORONTO, April 28.---"The men are standing up well and everything is as satisfactory as can be expected," said General M. S. Mercer, commanding the Ontario Infantry Brigade, first contingent. The letter contained no other inforamtion concerning the fighting. It was written hurriedly and in pencil and apparently while the general was visiting in the trenches.

FISH HOOK CAUGHT IN BOY'S EYE WHILE GAFFING AT LOCKS

Willie Downer, son of George Downer, residing near the Lock's bridge, may lose the sight of an eye which a fishhook pierced last night while the boy was gaffing suckers at the Lock's dam. He had hooked a sucker and quickly jerked it out of the water. The force of his pull freed the fish, but the hook flew up and caught in the boy's eye. He was removed to the Nicholls' Hospital and it is reported that hopes are held out that his sight will not be impaired.

This afternoon it was learned that the fish hook had watered the eye about half an inch and there was very little hope of the sight being preserved. Unless infection sets in the eye will not need to be removed. Dr. Morgan and Dr. Buchanan attended Downer.

Big Pump Was Closed Down

The humidity of the atmosphere yesterday was responsible for the closing down of the big No. 4 centrifugal pump at the waterworks. The density of the amosphere, combined with the low temperature of the water, caused the pump to sweat to such an extent that the water flowed down into the oil, causing a temporary shut down. Mr. Fisk, Manager of the Utilities Commission, states that similar trouble is often experienced, and that care must be taken to keep them in a proper building where they will not be subjected to atmospheric changes. This is a good argument for the auxiliary pant that the Commissioners propose to install. With such an occurrence the steam auxiliary plant could be pressed into service until such time as the trouble was remedied.

MONTGOMERY—RENSHAW.

A very quiet and pretty wedding took place Saturday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. Steedman, Division street, when Adjutant McElhiney united in marriage Mary Isabel Renshaw and Mr. Samuel Montgomery. The young couple will reside in Peterborough.

COST OF CONSTRUCTING NEW FORCE MAIN

A report has been received from the Waterworks Superintendent, submitting estimates of the cost of constructing the portion of the new force main from the corner of Smith and Downie Streets to connect with the 14 inch main on McDonnel Street, namely: 400 feet of 10 inch pipe, $800; 2,010 feet of 14 inch pipe, $6,532.50; 100 feet of 4 inch, $150, a total of $7,482.50, less $145.50 for 480 feet of 5 inch pipe taken up, leaving the net estimated cost $7,337.

The Utilities Commission has ordered the payment of the following accounts: Canadian Express Company, $2.25; W. Adams, $12.25; Jas. Morrison Brass Mfg. Co., $80.12; T. Robertson & Co., $447.03; Review Printing Co., 75c.; Higgins Hardware Co., $3.45; Peterborough Hardware Co., $1.19.

Vagrant Sent to Jail For a Month

Enos Meyette was sent to jail at a special session of the police court this afternoon, for a term of one month, on a charge of vagrancy. Meyette is a baker by trade, but refuses to work, according to the evidence of Acting Sergt. Kidd, who said that the only time he had known Meyette to work steady during the past five years was when he was with the C.P.R., and the officer had met him in Brampton.

Meyette had been living with a lady in the city who has been compelled to get out and work to keep the house running, while the prisoner would get drunk and coming home cause a disturbance. The woman was afraid of him and her landlord had threatened to put her out of the house if she did not get rid of him.

If Meyette bothers the woman when he gets out of jail the Magistrate promises that he will send him down for six months if he comes before him.

Merchant Lost Barrel of Fish

So zealous are the garbage collectors about removing garbage and other refuse that comes within their province, that a merchant claims to have lost a barrel of fish which is said to have found its way into the incinerator. The affair which occurred some time ago is by no means forgotten, as the parties concerned have declared their intention of billing the Property Committee for the price of the fish. It is stated that the barrel of fish was placed at the rear of the premises, and a quantity of snow placed on top of the barrel. The garbage collectors came along, removed a quantity of garbage and incidentally dumped the barrel of herrings into the waggon. The fish eventually found its way to the incinerator.

It is the intention of the owner to put in a claim for the loss sustained.

OBITUARY

MR. JOHN DONOVAN.

There are left to mourn her loss her husband and two children, Melville, aged 14 years and Isobel aged 10 years; also six sisters, Mrs. A. J. Harris, Jamestown, N.Y., and Mrs. Charles N. Sabin, Boston, Mass., who has been with her for some time, Mrs. Sheldon B. Armstrong, Charleston, W. Va.; Mrs. Clyde Weir, Cleveland, Ohio.; Mrs. Joseph Rickle, Newcastle, Penn., and Mrs. W. H. Roberts, city.

The funeral will be held on Thursday at 2 p.m., from the family residence, 300 Wolfe Street, to the Little Lake cemetery.

Five Boys Tied Last Week in the Examiner Contest

Each Received Cash Prize—Competition Has Stirred Up Many Business-like Boys

The excellence of the service given by the Examiner must account for the easy way in which newsboys secure customers to the Daily Examiner.

The boys who were a tie for first place each secured 8 new customers for themselves last week and each received $1.50 for the work, in addition to the profit on the papers they sell. It is a good business proposition to have your boy selling the Evening Examiner. Cash prizes are given each week, and watches for first and second prizes and a suit of clothes for third prize at the end of the contest which closes May 30th. 3

Boys, get busy selling the Evening Examiner. It pays.

AGED RESIDENT PASSES AWAY

The Late Miss O'Connor Was Sister of First White Child Born in Peterborough

One of Peterborough's oldest and most respected residents died yesterday at St. Joseph's Hospital, in the person of Miss Margaret O'Connor, born in Peterborough eighty-three years ago, at the corner of King and Aylmer Streets, where her father erected one of the first houses in the city, and where the family have lived ever since, the eldest child, the late Rev. Dean O'Connor, being the first white child born within the confines of this city.

In the History of Peterborough, written by the late Mrs. Moody of Lakefield, the home of the late Miss O'Connor is mentioned as one of the first houses erected in this city. This house is now occupied by Mr. J. P. Shevlin, a nephew of the deceased lady.

The funeral will take place on Thursday morning at 9 o'clock.

Muskrat Skins Are Coming In

William Lech and Sons have purchased muskrat skins to the number of about ten thousand, within the last few days. This is the season of the year when the pelts are marketed by the trapper and by all accounts, this year's catch has been very good. The price paid is twenty-six cents a-piece. This is about ten cents lower than last year and is an indication of the condition of the fur market. Mr. Lech states that it is the lowest price paid in fifteen years. They have been up as high as a dollar. The Indians around Rice Lake district are responsible for a large share of the catch, while a fair proportion of the pelts are obtained around Trenton.

LIEUT. DOXSEE WELL KNOWN IN PETERBORO'

Lieut. W. J. Doxsee, of Campbellford, who is reported among the killed in to-day's list of casualties is well-known in this city, his wife who was formerly Miss Mabel Stevenson, being at one time a resident of Peterborough. Mrs. Doxsee is a sister of Mrs. E. Dormer, Gilmour street. The late Lieut. Doxsee also saw service in the South African war.

During one of the Canadians' early engagements in the trenches, in the latter end of February, Lieut. Doxsee was wounded in the thigh. He recovered in a short while and rejoined his battalion, only to meet death soon after. He was joint proprietor with his brother of a planing mill in Campbellford, and was for two years mayor of the town.

His passing is greatly regretted, and the heartfelt sympathy of local friends goes out to the bereaved ones.

Thirty-one Additional Officers Numbered Among Casualties

Total List of Canadian Officers Killed, Wounded and Missing is Now 157---Now Believed That List of Privates Will Be at Least 1,500.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, April 29.—A further list of four killed and 27 wounded or missing Canadian officers was received by the Militia Department last night. This brings the total casualties among the Canadian officers who were in the recent fighting near Ypres to about 157. Seven officers are reported as wounded and missing and seven as missing. This means that these 14 officers have been in all probability taken prisoners by the Germans.

Last night's list establishes the extent of the fighting in which the Canadians have taken and are still taking part, and the price paid is greater even than had been conceived. It is now believed that the list of privates and non-commissioned officers will bring the total losses to at least 1,500.

There is a long list from the Queen's Own, of Toronto. Lieut. F. R. Medland and Lieut. W. D. P. Jarvis, a son of Mr. Aemiluis Jarvis, were killed, while Capt. W. D. Allan, Capt. D. H. C. Mason and Capt. G. H. Muntz from that regiment, as well as Lieut. G. H. Smith, of the Governor-General's Body Guard, are wounded. Major A. J. E. Kirkpatrick, of the Queen's Own; Capt. J. E. L. Straight, of the G.G.B.G.; Capt. L. S. Morrison, of the Royal Grenadiers; Lieut. B. L. Johnston, of the Queen's Own, and Lieuts. G. E. D. Greene and D. G. Allan, of the Grenadiers, are missing.

Among other members of well known Canadian families in the list are Capt. G. L. D. O'Grady, of Winnipeg; Lieut. M. Greenshields and Major D. R. McCuaig, of Montreal, all of whom are wounded.

From the list issued last night and the casualties previously reported, Toronto officers suffered severely, evidencing that they were in the thick of the fighting cheering on their men. The latest list comprises the officers of the Third Battalion, two of whom were killed, four wounded, while five are reported as missing.

No. 6 Company of the Third Battalion lost all its officers. Lt. W. D. P. Jarvis and Lt. A. D. Kirkpatrick were killed; Lt. G. A. Smith was severely wounded, while Capt. J. E. L. Sleight is reported as missing.

The following casualties have been reported by the Militia Department, and by special cables to the Minister of Militia:

DEFEATED WITH VERY HEAVY LOSSES

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ATHENS, April 29.—The Turkish regulars have been defeated with very heavy losses, and an entire Turkish battalion has been captured in the battle between the Turks and the British landing party which took possession of the coast line along the Gulf of Sovil, 25 miles from Sedd El Bahr on the Gallipoli peninsula. Advices reaching here say that the battle commenced early Wednesday and lasted until long after nightfall. The British were assisted in their landing operations by warships.

STARBOARD SIDE OF THE CRUISER WAS BLOWN OUT

MILAN, April 29.—Details of the end of the French cruiser Leon Gambetta, torpedoed and sunk by the Austrian submarine, U5 in the Strait of Otranto, Monday night, tell of the heroism by her commissioned officers. Practically the entire starboard side of the cruiser was blown out when the Austrian torpedo hit her almost amidship. The crew was assembled at quarters and the order was given, "Every man for himself." All of the commissioned officers assembled on the bridge as soon as it was certain that the cruiser must go down, and as she listed, just before turning over, they united in the cry, "Vive la France." A number of bodies of the victims have been recovered and buried with full military honours in a cemetery at Brindisi.

Allies Have Stopped German Attacks In Ypres District

French and British Forces Continue Their Assaults---Allies Retain Ground Re-taken From the Enemy

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, April 29.—The French War Office reports relative calm along the battle front in Belgium and the retention by the allies of the ground which they regained since the inauguration of the German forward movement nearly a week ago.

This follows the British official statement which declares that the operations of the allies have definitely stopped the German attack, which has not been renewed. Counter-attacks apparently are still being delivered with the general engagement around Ypres and the Yser Canal, which lasted five days.

Only at one place, Steenstraate, have the Germans managed to keep their footing on the western bank of the canal, while to the north of Ypres the positions remain much as they were.

To hold these lines the Germans have brought up further reinforcements, and Belgium behind them has been denuded of troops. The towns and villages in Belgium are being guarded by only a handful of sentries.

Fighting also continues in Champagne, where the Germans make claim to the capture of a strong French position, in the Argonne and the Woevre, where the French say they are progressing, and in the Vosges, where both sides claim to be in possession of Hartmanns-Welierkopf. It is probable that this mountain, which commands the plains of Alsace, has changed hands several times; this would account for the contradictory reports.

THE BRITISH STATEMENT.

"Fighting to the north and northeast of Ypres continued all yesterday. Our operations, in conjunction with the French, definitely stopped the German attack, and it has not since been renewed.

"Since yesterday morning there have been no Germans west of the canal except at Steenstraate, where they have established a small bridgehead.

"The readjustment of the situation has necessitated the delivery of counter-attacks both by the French and our troops on the north of the Ypres salient. In resisting these counter-attacks the German again made use of asphyxiating gases, and of shells manufactured in contravention of The Hague convention.

"On the remainder of the front there is nothing to report."

GOOD WORK BY BELGIANS.

Several German trenches, six quick-firing guns and 200 prisoners were captured by the Franco-Belgian forces at Het Sas in Belgium on Tuesday, it was officially announced to-day by the Belgian Legation. The offensive movement of the Belgian and French along the canal is growing in violence, and the attacks against the new German front are incessant.

Het Sas lies on the east bank of the Yser or Ypres Canal, as it is sometimes called, about five and a half miles north of Ypres.

All the hospitals in Belgium are filled with German soldiers wounded in the latest attempt of the Kaiser's forces to cut their way through the allies' lines to the French coast—an attempt which many military experts now declare has completely collapsed. There are 7,200 Germans in the military hospitals at Bruges.

FOOLED BY THE BELGIANS.

Asphyxiating bombs used by the Germans in their attacks Monday night against the Belgian positions had little effect because preventive measures had been taken by the Belgians, who had learned of the effects produced by the fumes from these shells upon the French and British.

Advices received there state that the Germans, confident that the gases would prove effective, advanced in compact masses south of Dixmude, but were greeted with a hail of bullets from quick-firers. A furious bayonet charge was then launched by the Belgians, and the Germans retired. Their losses are said to have been very heavy.

A Germany aeroplane attacked Nancy to-day. Three bombs were dropped in the centre of the city. Three persons were killed and a number of others were injured seriously.

VIOLENT COLLISIONS FROM THE NIEMEN TO THE VISTULA

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, April 29 — The following official communication was issued to-night:

"Yesterday enemy elements displayed intense activity in the direction of Thisit, Chavl and Jurborg, on the upper Niemen River. To the west of Niemen, on the Cheszuppe River, there were collisions which ended in our favour.

"Near Kalwarya and Ossowets there was an artillery duel. To the north of the Narew River the Germans on the morning of the 27th attacked on both banks of the Orzye River. With the bayonet we successfully repulsed an attack in the region of the village of Jednoroets. West of the Mlawa railway we also repulsed attempts to advance by enemy advance guards.

"In the Carpathians, in the region of the Uzsok Pass, we repulsed on the 26th and during the following night attacks which the enemy delivered with great energy, and also against the heights to the north-east of the villages of Lubnia and Butla. The enemy suffered very heavy losses on our wire entanglements.

"In the direction of Stry desperate engagements continue. In the region to the south of Koziowa the enemy on the 26th attempted an assault against our front of Koziowa-Golovetzky, but we repulsed him by successful counter-attacks with the bayonet.

Combined Attack on Germans

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 29.—The Belgian official statement made public to-day, declares that the Germans are bombarding Ramscappelle, Pervyse, Lamperisse and Gosvieperen. The Belgians are co-operating with the French in their attacks against the Germans near Steenstraate.

"CASCARETS" ALWAYS STRAIGHTEN YOU UP

To-night! Clean Your Bowels and End Headaches, Colds, Sour Stomach

Get a 10-cent box now.

You men and women who can't get feeling right — who have headache, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath, dizziness, can't sleep, are bilious, nervous and upset, bothered with a sick, gassy, disordered stomach, or have backache and feel worn out.

Are you keeping your bowels clean with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil?

Cascarets work while you sleep; cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested, fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will straighten you out by morning—a 10-cent box from any drug store will keep your stomach sweet; liver and bowels regular, and head clear for months. Don't forget the children. They love Cascarets because they taste good—never gripe or sicken.

Fable of the Unwise.

The following fable, which is probably of Turkish origin, is not without a touch of truth: As a woman was walking, a man looked at and followed her.

"Why?" said she, "do you follow me?"

"Because," he replied, "I have fallen in love with you."

"Why so? My sister, who is coming after me, is much handsomer than I am. Go and make love to her."

The man turned back and saw a woman with an ugly face, and being greatly displeased, returned and said: "Why should you tell me a falsehood?"

The woman answered: "Neither did you tell the truth: for if you were in love with me, why did you look back for another woman?"

FOR THE KIDNEYS

A Guaranteed Treatment. Money Back If It Fails

Kidney diseases are more prevalent than is generally supposed, and are not always recognized as such. What was at first but a slight derangement of the kidneys often results in indigestion, rheumatism, anaemia, chronic and very painful headache, neuralgia, eye weakness, and other diseases of a most aggravating type. Therefore it is highly important and absolutely necessary that the kidneys and the urinary system be kept in an active and healthy condition.

After a thorough experience with the most successful forms of kidney treatment, we are confident that the one remedy which embraces the most desirable, safe and efficacious curative qualities, so necessary to the successful treatment and positive eradication of kidney diseases in general, is Rexall Kidney Pills.

We are so positive that Rexall Kidney Pills are unexcelled, and that they will do all we claim, that we sell them with our own personal guarantee that they shall not cost the user a cent if they should fail to give entire satisfaction.

We particularly recommend Rexall Kidney Pills, for kidney ailments that resist ordinary treatment. We believe, if taken according to directions with regularity and persistency for a reasonable length of time, they will positively remove all symptoms and effect permanent relief.

Surely we could not more strongly demonstrate our faith in Rexall Kidney Pills, and our generous guarantee should convince the most sceptical. We could not make a stronger statement except we know what we are talking about. We urge you to try Rexall Kidney Pills at our risk. Price 50c. ## "Give Me One More Shot at Them" Cried Dying Soldier

Special Cable to The Examiner:

Special Cable:

LONDON, April 29.—Here is a true story of the battlefield:

A surgeon found a British soldier lying dying after an unsuccessful German charge. He had a bullet hole in his head, but refused to be made comfortable.

"For God's sake, doctor, give me one more shot at them. Please don't fuss with me until I have had one more chance," he urged.

The bullet had completely blinded the soldier and he insisted on knowing the range and direction. He was told six hundred. He demanded that the doctor fix the sight and hold him up. The soldier fired and fell back. In a few minutes he was dead.

CLEANSES YOUR HAIR MAKES IT BEAUTIFUL

It Becomes thick, wavy, lustrous and all dandruff disappears

Surely try a "Danderine Hair Cleanse" if you wish to immediately double the beauty of your hair. Just moisten a cloth with Danderine and draw it carefully through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; this will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt or any excessive oil—in a few minutes you will be amazed. Your hair will be wavy, fluffy and abundant and possess an incomparable softness, lustre and luxuriance.

Besides beautifying the hair, one application of Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; invigorates the scalp, stopping itching and falling hair.

Danderine is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its exhilarating, stimulating and life-producing properties cause the hair to grow long, strong and beautiful.

You can surely have pretty, soft, lustrous hair, and lots of it, if you will just get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter and try it as directed.

THE BLESSING OF MOTHERHOOD

Healthy Mothers and Children Make Happy Homes

Motherhood is woman's highest sphere in life. It is the fruition of her dearest hopes and greatest desires; yet thousands of noble women through some derangement have been denied this blessing.

In many homes once childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong. This is evidenced by the following letters which are genuine and truthful:

London, Ont.—"I wish to thank you for the benefit I received by taking your famous medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Before my baby was born I was so ill I could not stand long or walk any distance. I had to lie down nearly all the time. After I took your medicine I felt like a new woman. I could work from morning till night and was happy and well. I certainly think it relieves pain at childbirth and recommend it to every woman who is pregnant. You may use this testimonial if you like. It may help some other woman."—Mrs. FRANK CORBIN, 132 Adelaide St., London, Ont.

Brooklyn, N.Y.—"I was ailing all the time and did not know what the matter was. I wanted a baby but my health would not permit it. I was nervous, my side ached and I was all run down. I heard that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was good and took the medicine. I have now a beautiful baby and way."—Mrs. J. J. STEWART, 299 Humboldt St., Brooklyn, N.Y.

HISTORY OF SOISSONS

French Town Sacked and Pillaged Times Without Number

In the history of warfare conducted in France there is no town which bears such an unenviable record as that of Soissons, which, in times of peace, has a pleasant location on one bank of the River Aisne, surrounded by wooded hills. At one time there was no more popular place of pilgrimage, when its abbeys were the richest in the land with the best blood of their country at their head, and when the abbots of St. Médard, the most important of all French abbeys during the first two dynasties, coined money, and were lords of almost innumerable villages, farms and manors.

Soissons was the field of the missionary labors of St. Crispin and St. Crispinian, patrons of the shoemaking craft, who brought Christianity to the town in the third century. They suffered severely at the hands of Rictiovarus, the Governor, under whose orders they were stretched on the rack and after the application of several other tortures were thrown into the Aisne, a millstone having first been tied around the neck of each. They were able to swim, however, and managed to reach the opposite bank.

Soissons has been the scene of many victories and defeats, has been sacked times without number, and enjoys an unenviable notoriety for the great number of sieges it has undergone. In 1870 the Germans entered it after a bombardment of four days.

THE FIRST SUBMARINE

Invented by Yale Student, It Was Used in Attack on British Fleet

To the existence of Britain's great navy may be traced the invention of the submarine. Its attack on the American colonies during the revolution brought forth what is generally acknowledged to have been the first successful under water craft.

The invention is accredited to David Bushnell, a Yale freshman. All through his college days, from 1771 to 1775, he worked steadily on a vessel that would sail under water. When the revolutionary war broke out he had ready a submarine boat which, on account of its shape, was called the Turtle. The Chicago Tribune relates how he was given a chance at the British fleet under Admiral Lord Howe while it was blockading New York harbor. The strange submarine was launched in New York, but owing to the fact that Mr. Bushnell could not navigate the Turtle himself, as he had not sufficient physical strength, he was forced to turn it over to another man. The Turtle was propelled by hand, and had a maximum speed of two miles an hour.

First Attempt Failed

"Ezra Lee, the man chosen to make the attack on the British flagship, the Eagle," says the Tribune, "had little time to learn how to operate the new craft. He succeeded in getting the Turtle underneath the Eagle, placing a torpedo under the ship's hull, but was unable to fasten it, as the Eag's was sheathed with copper. The torpedo had a time lock on it which caused it to explode within thirty minutes. It was, however, carried away from the hull of the Eagle by the tide and at the appointed time it exploded, sending up a huge column of water not far from the British flagship. The failure of the enterprise disgusted the continental authorities, and the whole matter ended in ridicule.

A quarter of a century later Robert Fulton took the Bushnell invention over to France and interested Napoleon I. in it. He was given a try at the British squadron off the coast of France, but here again the craft failed to catch any of the British ships, Napoleon, tiring of its failure, dismissed Robert Fulton. The British were aware of what was transpiring and managed to open negotiations with Fulton and invited him to go to London. They saw that if a submarine should be developed their great naval strength would vanish. They offered Fulton a large sum of money to pigeonhole his invention and to return with it quietly to America. This offer was spurned by Robert Fulton, but the far-seeing English statesmen and sea lords of Great Britain had grasped the significance of the submarine—that its success would mean the annihilation of British sea power.

The "Fenian Ram"

"The second impetus given to the perfection of the submarine also came from England. John P. Holland of New Haven, Conn., worked for years to perfect what was known as the 'Fenian ram.' Lieut. Holland was an enthusiastic member of the Fenian clan, whose chief object was to precipitate a war between Great Britain and America. It raised $50,000; and with this fund the first Holland submarine was constructed. Holland used practically the same fundamental principles that were utilized by David Bushnell. The Germans, likewise, concede to Mr. Bushnell the original invention of the undersea boats.

"The French began to develop the submarine about the year 1900, following the Fashoda affair, which nearly brought Britain and France to war in 1898. In 1898 Britain awakened to the fact that the submarines had been pronounced a success, and began building submarines after the Holland type.

"Germany did not begin to build submarines until 1906. Since then she has carried on an active 'unterseeboote' programme."

Different Note.

The teacher turned the slip of paper over with a smile. "I think I shall have it framed and hung on the wall for my encouragement whenever I am cast down," she said.

"What can be in it?" questioned her friend. "I don't get any notes from mothers that I want to hang on the wall."

"This is the first I wanted to keep. It is from Mrs. Warren, and tells me how pleased she is that Teddy is doing so well, and is so interested. And there is added a complimentary word for the teacher. I can't tell you how it cheered me. I think in my ten years' experience I've had all the variation of complaining notes, but this is the first 'praising' one. I'm interested in all my pupils, of course, but I can't help feeling a little additional interest in Teddy since I see that my efforts are understood and appreciated."

"I suppose lots of mothers feel grateful to a teacher for her efforts," said the other, musingly.

"Well, I wish more of them would take the trouble to say so," said the first.—Mother's Magazine.

POTSDAM'S PALACES

For centuries Potsdam has been the favorite dwelling place of the Hohenzollerns. The chief palace was built by the father of Frederick the Great. Frederick the Great spent a vast deal of his time at Potsdam, as did his successors, and the Kaiser, who seldom misses an opportunity of aping his militant ancestors, generally holds his war councils there. Some interesting relics are to be seen at the Town Palace at Potsdam. In the hall are a number of high uncomfortable arrow benches placed there many years ago by Frederick to prevent his guards from sleeping. Outside the Palace is a famous tree known as the "Petition Tree." When the subjects of Frederick came to place a grievance before their King they would climb up the tree outside his window and wave their petitions to attract his attention.

Close to the Town Palace at Potsdam stands the Sans Souci Palace, a luxurious building composed of cream-colored stone. Terraces lead up to the entrance, and on each is a hothouse where grapes are grown for the Royal tables. The interior of the Sans Souci Palace is lavishly decorated, and one world famous room which has figured in many paintings is decorated with brown, green, and blue figures of parrots and monkeys. Frederick the Great died in this palace, and his room has been kept just as it was at his death. A marble statue of the King stands in the apartment, and the stone face is turned towards the window, as though looking out over the gardens. At the statue's feet lies a stone effigy of Frederick's dog.

There is some extremely valuable statuary at Potsdam, and recently the Kaiser issued orders that the sculpture was to be protected by being securely covered with wooden boxes. Evidently he anticipated air raids over the sacred precinct of Potsdam.

ATROCITIES IN POLAND

Polish Newspaper Published in Milwaukee Tells of German Brutality

"Poland's Cause," a daily newspaper published partly in English and partly in Polish at Milwaukee, Wis., printed a number of letters illustrative of German brutality in Poland. Among others these are typical:

"Count Thomas Potocki, of Sochaczew (near Warsaw), was taken before a German court-martial, sentenced to death and shot—because he protested against the robberies and deliberate burning and devastation committed by the German soldiery."

"In Ciepielowo, the Germans took everything away from the peasants. When leaving the palace in Ciepielowo the officers deliberately chopped to pieces all furniture and destroyed all the pictures.

"In Januszewo they robbed the palace and the peasants of everything that they could carry off.

"A detachment of German soldiers arrived in the village of Gory (near Kalisz) at night time. When the nightwatchman asked them what they wanted, they shot him down. Then they shot and wounded several other people and burned down the palace.

"In all invaded villages everything was taken away from the peasants. Whenever anyone protested, he was shot down.

"In Tomaszow the commanding officer had all the kerosene oil taken from a Jewish dealer. The Jew came to the officer, who was then standing on the bridge, and asked him for a money order for the oil taken. In reply, the officer threw the Jew into the river. The officers appropriated for themselves all they could take in the private homes. For instance, in Silber's house they took even such things as a silk quilt and a pillow, in addition to other things. They mistreated the populace.

"As a result of these and hundreds of other abuses and brutalities, several hundred Polish reservists in the German army near Kalisz deserted to the Russian lines. The Germans burned down several flour mills near Kalisz. L. M. Kohn, a prominent Jewish merchant, was arrested and tortured, and finally killed."

Fighting With Water

When the Belgians opened the sluice-gates and let the sea into the basin of the Yser River to stop the German troops in their desperate attempt to advance along the coast from Ostend to Calais, they placed an obstacle in the way of the invading army that was apparently decisive in turning the issue to the advantage of the allies. This means of defence is not new. It has been used repeatedly by the people of Holland for stopping or destroying an invader, and in one case—that of the siege of Leyden, in 1574—the cutting of the dykes resulted not only in the relief of that city, but in the drowning of thousands of the invading Spanish army.

DOCTOR SAID SCIATICA—RHEUMATISM—LUMBAGO

But He Could Not Help Me, and Endorsed the Use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Mr. Wm. Parker, 105 Cayuga street, Brantford, Ont., tells in the following letter of his remarkable experience with Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills: "My doctor treated me for some time for Sciatica, Rheumatism, Lumbago, but to no purpose, for I had to lay off work. The visiting officer of Sick Benefit called to see me and advised the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, stating that he had been cured of the same trouble by their use. I asked the druggist about them and he recommended them highly. Not being satisfied with this, I went back to my doctor, and when he said they were good I began their use. The promptness with which they enlivened the action of the kidneys and bowels was wonderful, and it was not long before I was rid of all my trouble.

"I was so bad that I could only walk by hanging on to a chair or the wall. My wife had to lace my shoes. Only those who have had this ailment can realize the way I suffered. I am writing this letter to let people who have my trouble know of these pills. You are at liberty to use this letter, and if anyone interested will call or write to me I will give every detail."

Write to Mr. Parker, enclosing stamp for reply, and he will verify this statement. He will do this out of the gratitude he feels for his cure and because he realizes how difficult it is to obtain the cure of these dreadfully painful ailments.

There are so many treatments recommended for rheumatism that you naturally doubt them all. Here is an opportunity for you to verify the cure and put this great medicine to the test. It will only cost you a quarter to try Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They get at the very foundation of rheumatism, and by removing the poisons from the system take away the cause of pains and aches.

IT IS wise to form "habits" in our housekeeping duties; that is, if the habits are good ones. Some housekeepers keep scrapbooks, entering or clipping and pasting into it useful ideas that will help them to reduce or simplify their work. Here is an idea that might well find a place in such a book. It is the habit of keeping a record of important data relating to the fruit preserved during the year.

Beginning with the marmalade season, we might keep an account of the amount of fruit purchased, the total amount in pints or quarts, amount of sugar used, amount of paraffin and the total cost. This system, if followed up closely, would tell one at a glance next year just how much fruit would be required, how many jars, how much sugar, how prices of fruit compare with the previous season and so forth.

It is not well to trust to one's memory for such information, and by keeping such a record it will be accurate in every detail.

Baked Potatoes, Stuffed.

Bake large potatoes, cut in two and empty the skins. Whip the potato to a light cream with hot milk and butter. Season with salt and a pinch of cayenne pepper and stir in finally, for six potatoes a large spoonful of grated cheese. # A GALLANT CHARGE BY THE FRENCH INFANTRY IN CHAMPAGNE

M. Paul Thiriat, in sending the above drawing writes:—"In this war the French method of attack is as follows:—The men first advance cautiously and slowly, creeping along in the mud over the ground which has been previously cleared by the systematic artillery fire. Then, when the attacking infantry line is close on the German trenches, the troops jump up and rush the enemy's positions. During one of the last severe struggles around Perthes-les-Hurtus, in Champagne, the German quick-firing guns caused heavy losses among the French attacking lines; numbers of the officers were killed and the men kept falling during the advance, but still the charge went forward, the French singing the 'Marseillaise' as they charged. The soldiers who had fallen in the charge joined in the singing to encourage their comrades. The couplet of the heroic song, 'Amour sacre de la Patrie,' and the sublime words, 'Liberte, Liberte cherie....combat avec tes defenseurs,' were on their lips as they died. In this manner are the French steadily advancing with a noble ideal ever present in their minds." The "Marseillaise" has just been staged in Paris with its original setting, "L'Offrande a la Liberte," composed in 1792. The first performance of this opera took place on October 20, 1792—just about a month before the battle of Valmy. The old, well known French national anthem has now acquired another and more significant meaning.

2,000,000 NEEDY IN BELGIUM LOOK TO U. S. FOR RELIEF

Country Must Increase Gifts, Says American, After Inspection.

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

LONDON, April 24.

"An American who has passed ten days in the towns and villages of Belgium and Northern France tells a correspondent who writes from the Dutch frontier that there are more persons hungry in Belgium than the charitable world knows of.

"America is the one hope of the Belgians," he says.

"Thousands will starve, despite the great work that the various commissions for relief are doing, unless the American people dig deeper into their well filled pockets and send more food ships across.

"I believe there are nearly 2,000,000 persons in Belgium who are absolutely dependent upon the bounty of the outside world. The people in the larger cities are receiving enough food to keep body and soul together. It is in the smaller and out of the way places that the suffering and want are more acute. There are hamlets where hunger reigns."

"Everything that one learns here," the correspondent continues, "at the gateway of the land of misery, bears out the account of my American informant, who is a United States Representative. Here is [illegible] errand of mercy put it:—'Hundreds of thousands are not able to earn anything. They are dependent on charity. Sometimes they get food, and then have to go without for a spell or else live on half rations. It is not starvation, but very often semi-starvation. What that means is that gradually their strength is sapped; then their vitality dwindles, and they fall an easy prey to the first disease that comes their way.

"Of course splendid relief work is being done. But it is nothing like enough in a country where 6,000,000 people are still living—a country many of whose industries have been destroyed and whose pasture lands have been swept by the pestilence of war; a country, in great measure, of wreckage and ruin.

"Belgium is a small country, but in these days, when its whole internal organization has been shattered by the blow of the mailed fist, there are parts of it that are almost cut off from the rest of the civilized world. Occasionally, after a weary journey, some one comes over the frontier with stories of life in the Forest of Hainault, for instance, or near the banks of the lower Meuse. Here is one such glimpse which has been given to me in this way.

"It is of a little village of which one has not heard before, called Sarinnes, not far from Dinant. My informant went there a few days ago, and found, to his horror, that of Sarinnes nothing remains but a heap of blackened ruins. He discovered the five hundred or six hundred inhabitants living in the château and adjoining outhouses. This residence has been spared, and its owner, a titled gentleman, has gathered together the little flock of homeless people. There they are, crowded together, most of them, of course, with no bed to sleep on.

"Very similar is life in Dinant itself. Here came the Huns in the ferocious days of August, with torch and fire bomb, and of 1,800 houses burned all but 200. Amid this scene of desolation 5,500 people are now living, herded in cellars or finding precarious shelter under boards spanning roofless walls.

"They would be even worse off than they are but for one factor. Sharing their lot and ordering as far as possible their lives are members of aristocratic families, for whom this most beautiful part of the country has always been a favorite residential district. They are real noblemen and noblewomen. Most of them were wealthy, or had wealthy friends elsewhere, and could easily have gone when the invaders came. But they chose to stay with the stricken people, who naturally looked to them for help and guidance. And there they remain, purely from a sense of duty and responsibility. I am told of one such titled family whose château was destroyed. Opportunity to join their friends elsewhere or go to England was open to them. But they felt that their place was amid their poorer fellow sufferers. They are living now in a cellar, just like the others, solacing and helping them, and by their mere presence keeping alive in their hearts the spark of hope.

"Of the cities of Belgium few have felt the effects of the war in worse degree than what was formerly the great industrial centre of Ghent. Lack of raw materials and the continual "requisitions" by the Germans, have brought most of the mills and factories to a standstill so that scores of thousands of men are unemployed and they and their families are dependent on charity. The population is "on rations." Bread is restricted to half a pound a day for each person. Other supplies are also regulated, and may only be purchased once in five days.

"As in other places, Ghent is being drained of its money by the fines imposed by the Germans. Antwerp, owing to its greater accessibility to the outside world, is better off than any other city in Belgium. But even in that port there are at least 200,000 persons dependent on public charity. Yet here is an example of the way in which the people of Antwerp maintain their spirit of independence. Each day one of the bands of the German garrison gives an open air performance. The Belgian audience stands around and listens to the music. But at the first notes of 'Deutschland über Alles' everybody turns as one man and walks away. It is the most effective way in which they could express their loyalty to King Albert."

HONOR PLEDGE FOR MEN AT THE FRONT

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

LONDON, April 24.

The British soldier on active service at the front has been placed on his honor not to reveal any military secrets or to say anything in his correspondence which might be of value should it fall into the hands of the enemy.

A new green envelope has been adopted and on the flap of this, with a fine for the signature of the writer, are the words:—"I certify on my honor that the contents of this envelope refer to nothing but private and family matters."

The front of the envelope states that it is to be used only by soldiers on active service and that the correspondence need not be censored regimentally, but that it is liable to examination at the base.

Question of Italy's Stand in the War

Further Views as to Whether or Not That Country Will Remain Neutral.

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

BERNE, April 24.

Certain neutrals who have been resident for some time in Austria and have had business or professional relations with Austrians still seem to get some inkling of what is going on behind the scenes and occasionally manage through a fellow countryman to send news to Switzerland. For instance, a Swiss writing from Vienna says Count Apponyi is greatly pleased with Britain having sent a representative to the Vatican, which he interprets as a sign that religious sentiment is not yet dead in the western countries and that the latter still realize the power of the Catholic Church.

Count Andrassy continues to persist in treating Italy as a friendly nation and asserting he is convinced that if she does not take sides with the Allies neither will she declare war on Austria. On the other hand, an Italian Irredentist Deputy assured the writer that "If Italy has not yet resolved to deal Austria a final blow, this is simply and solely because she does not wish to refuse to deal with the diplomatists of the Dual Alliance and exclude all possibility of an amicable settlement." Nevertheless, the Deputy considers that Italy cannot much longer urge any excuse for not joining in the war and not giving satisfaction to the demands of the Italian nation.

The opinions of certain Austrian military and political personages also are given as being unanimous that Italian neutrality will be maintained, and thus 250,000 Austro-German troops may be removed from the frontier in the Trentino, where they are at present stationed. Moreover, if Austria were sure of Italy's friendship, she could seriously contemplate the possibility of intervening in the Dardanelles fight in order to render much needed assistance to Turkey. What is, on the other hand, interpreted as a very bad sign in Vienna is the fact that Italy apparently is determined not to send any more rice or cereals to Austria, even such as were bought long ago by her. The Viennese press is still optimistic, but to any one who reads it attentively this does not signify much. It is generally admitted in Vienna that Prince von Buelow's position is becoming more and more critical, and that if he fails to force Italy to preserve her neutrality he will share Prince Lichnowsky's fate.

CRIME IN GERMANY DECREASES WITH WAR

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

BERLIN, April 24, 1915.

That war has a marked effect in discouraging crime is the opinion of the Chief of Police of Leipsig, Germany, who has compiled statistics in order to prove his assertion. Immediately after mobilization in Germany there was a big decrease in crime, he shows. From January 1 to August, 1914, there were 5,535 arrests, against 9,402 in the same period the previous year. From August 1 to September 1 there were only 903 arrests in Leipsig, against 1,311 for the same time in 1913.

Crimes of violence decreased materially owing to the excitement of the war. Professional crooks and swindlers found little opportunity to ply their calling and gamblers, too, were obliged to give up entirely. Pickpockets, hotel thieves and burglars quickly left the city for the neutral frontiers, and, as a result, the weeks after August 1 left the police comparatively little to do. As a result 1914 closed with only 27,691 arrests, as against 34,853 in 1913.

POLITICAL ISSUES LOOM LARGE IN BRITISH PROHIBITION FIGHT

Brewery Interests Are Almost Entirely Unionist in Party Affiliations and Drastic Move by Government Is Likely to Meet Violent Opposition—Distillers Say They Will Not Fight Restriction Where War Measures Are Affected.

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

LONDON, April 24.

That the government contemplates drastic action to prevent excessive drinking during the period of the war is as certain as that it has adequate powers under the Defence of the Realms Act to put these measures into effect.

"Nothing but root and branch methods will be of the slightest avail in dealing with this evil," says the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who has been sounding the country on the subject for some weeks. "The feeling is that if we are to settle German militarism we must first of all settle with drink. We are fighting Germany, Austria and drink; and, as far as I can see, the greatest of these deadly foes is drink."

Now every one—the distiller, the brewer, the publican and the public—is inquiring what does Mr. Lloyd George mean by "root and branch" methods? The question is causing greater commotion throughout the country than any other topic that has cropped up since the war began. Not even the appeals for recruits to the workmen to maintain the output of munitions, which are at the bottom of the crusade against strong drink, have caused so much excitement.

So far as can be gathered Mr. Lloyd George's proposal is in the direction of the total prohibition during the period of the war of the sale of excisable liquors. That is, practically, the proposal which was put before him by the deputation from shipbuilding firms on the Tyne and Clyde and other centres. And not one of the deputation was a teetotaler.

There is, of course, a difference of opinion among the Ministers at present concerning the scope of the reform which should be effected. Some believe it would be best to limit the prohibition to the sale of spirits. But this, while permitting the sale of beer, would also permit the sale of wines. It is felt that if a serious restriction is to be placed upon the working classes the well to do classes should certainly suffer an analogous restriction.

May Raise Political Issue.

The subject, it will be seen, is in the initial stages of Ministerial discussion. But, none the less, it may be said that the general opinion in the government seems to be that a further restriction of the hours of opening of licensed premises will not suffice to check the evil which is retarding progress in the shipyards, munition factories and other vital industrial centres.

If Mr. Lloyd-George's proposal eventually is agreed to, with or without modifications, there is no doubt that it must be carried into force by legislation.

A bill of first class importance would be a challenge to all parties in the State. Their support must be given or withheld, and by this the success of the [illegible] could be judged at the crucial moment, if not before. At present the government is not aware what the opinion of the responsible opposition is upon this subject, and labor opinion has yet to crystallize.

As a leading member of the whiskey trade, Sir Thomas Dewar while sure the trade is anxious to help the government in restricting the consumption of strong drink, so long as it interferes with the output of the munitions of war, said to an interviewer:—

"The members of the deputation could only speak so far as their own particular areas were concerned. It is estimated that more than three million persons are connected with the liquor industries, in which there is capital invested to the amount of £1,250,000,000. Total prohibition would cause complete chaos in this trade, not to mention the effect on other industries which are directly connected with it.

"Everybody employed in the allied trades is anxious to meet the government in the matter and assist as far as possible. They are prepared to make sacrifices and act up to the wishes of those in authority. The interests of the war stand supreme above everything—that is readily recognized by the trade. As evidence of this it is worth noting that licensed victuallers throughout the country have of their own initiative approached the magistrates and offered to reduce the hours of opening their houses.

Would Increase Unemployment.

"The trade is willing to accept even a further limitation of the hours of opening, but because there have been excesses through over abundance of spending money in those centres where munitions of war are manufactured it would seem hard on other parts of the country where wages remain at normal rates that the liberty of the subject should be interfered with. It would hardly serve to shorten the war, for instance, if prohibition were exercised in the sleepy corners of Surrey or Devon."

Speaking for the Allied Brewery Trades' Association, of which he is secretary, Mr. Wilson said:—

"If it is decided to prohibit the sale of drink altogether it will mean that half a million persons alone connected directly and indirectly with the brewing trade will be affected. A large proportion of these, too, are young girls, women and youths not of military age, who will be thrown upon the nation. There is invested in the trades connected with brewing more than £500,000,000, with a weekly wages bill roughly of between £3,500,000 and £4,000,000. Think what the complete stoppage of drink would mean from a financial point of view. It would mean the closing down of all machinery, plant and utensil trades in which huge sums are invested; it would affect farmers, collieries, grain merchants of all kinds, chemists, sugar refiners and hundreds of others interested in some way in the trade."

On the other hand, those in favor of total prohibition cannot see how any harm may come from throwing out of employment the workers who are engaged in the distilleries, breweries and in the public houses. "Let them go and do something else," they say. "There is plenty for them to do in war time in other fields of work."

Queen Mary and Queen Mother Will Attend a War Matinee

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

LONDON, April 24.

Queen Mary and the Queen Mother Alexandra never seem to tire in their desire to help the various funds and good works which have sprung into being since the war began.

It would be interesting if one could compile a list of all the matinees and entertainments they have attended during the last few months, and they have now promised to be present at yet another one.

This is the grand matinee which Lady Paget, wife of General Sir Arthur Paget, is organizing on behalf of the American Women's War Hospital, to take place in Drury Lane on Tuesday, April 27.

The American Women's War Hospital is situated at Mr. and Mrs. Paris Singer's residence, Oldway House, Paignton, in Devonshire, in which the Queen showed her interest by inspecting it in November last.

A remarkable programme has been arranged for the matinee and the list of those who have promised to appear is noteworthy.

Mr. Louis N. Parker has written a Masque of War and Peace specially for the occasion and many well known artists are to help [illegible] including Mme. Edvina, Mme. Melba and Mlle. Genee. There are also Miss Lillian Braithwaite, Miss Constance Collier, Miss Lily Elsie, Miss Gertie Millar, Miss Ethel Levey, Miss [illegible], Miss Julia Neilson and several others.

Miss Mary Garden, who is perhaps better known in America and in Paris than in London, where she has not sung in opera for many years, is to make a reappearance. Other features of the programme will be a dramatic sketch, "Pearls," with Mr. Arthur Bourchier and Miss Violet Vanbrugh; a one act comedy by Miss Laurette Taylor, and Miss Lily Elsie and Mr. Joseph Coyne are to dance the "Merry Widow" waltz.

Care for Orphans of Great War

Orphanage of the Armies Organized in Paris Has Support of Many Men of Prominence.

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

PARIS, April 24.

The French newspapers call special attention to a new charitable organization which has just been formed in Paris, bearing the name of the Orphanage of the Armies. This organization has among its patrons the most prominent men of France, the President of the French Republic and the Presidents of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies being actively at work for its welfare. The Minister of War and the Minister of Marines are its honorary presidents, and artists, literary men, business men and every professional class of citizen who have the glory and welfare of their country at heart are interested in it.

In the first place, after a mother has been bereft of her husband by the war provision shall be made of such kind that the children can remain in the home. The government, of course, will give such a widow a pension or other necessary support, but pending the rendering of this assistance on the part of the government the Orphanage society will give those in need immediate assistance. Furthermore if the relief offered by the government should be insufficient the society will fill the needs by allowing an extra pension.

In general, the society will extend all possible facilities to the widowed mothers in order to enable them to keep their children and to give them a fair education. The society will also engage in placing orphans with responsible families in such cases where the mother is either incapable of providing for them at all or when the mother expresses a definite desire that her children shall be so placed. It is the intention of the society never to place orphans in public institutions unless circumstances make this absolutely necessary.

As regards religious education of the children, no restrictions of any kind will be placed on the eventual guardians to whom they have been confined except when the mother expresses her wish in the matter. A promise to abide by this ruling will be exacted of the families with whom the children are intrusted. No force or persuasion of any kind will be tolerated, and an entire freedom of choice is left to the persons who stand in the nearest place of responsibility to the children.

SWEDISH BANKERS ASSAIL BRITISH CENSOR

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

STOCKHOLM, April 24.

Some of the leading banks of Stockholm have decided, according to the Svenska Dagbladet, to present a memorandum to the American Legation in the Swedish capital asking that a formal protest be entered by the United States government against the serious interference in the commercial relations between Sweden and America caused by the British cable censor's office. Complaints frequently have been made that cable messages via England have been delayed in transmission from twenty-four to forty-eight hours.

Lately several important business cable despatches have not reached the addressees in America at all. One of the greatest banking houses of Sweden, which is financing purchases of cotton in the United States, sent a cable message at a cost of about £60 to a business firm in America and when no acknowledgment of its receipt was forthcoming another message was sent urging an immediate reply.

None was received, and the only inference was that the cable despatches had been suppressed by the censors in England.

FEAR MAGYARS MAY TRY TO FORCE SEPARATE PEACE

Apprehension in Budapest Over Growth of Independence Sentiment.

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

LONDON, April 24.

In a despatch from Vienna, sent to London by an "indirect route," a neutral says considerable uneasiness is felt in leading Austrian circles regarding the effect of the fall of Perm yl on public opinion in Hungary, where a very marked anti-war feeling has become evident whenever the Hungarians have seen the menace of Russia's hosts at their very doors.

At the time of the former advances of the Russian armies, the correspondent says, first into the northern regions of the Hungarian plains and then into the neighboring province of Bukowina, many demands for peace were heard in Budapest, especially from the politicians and public men who have always been identified with the party of independence, which demands complete separation of Hungary from Austria. There is a general fear in Vienna that the anti-war agitation in Hungary will now gain fresh adherents, and that there may even be an attempt on the part of Hungarians to desert Austria and conclude a separate peace with the Allies with a view to safeguarding the future of their own country.

It is probable these fears are unfounded or at least exaggerated. The Magyars, who control the government of Hungary, seem to have definitely identified themselves with Berlin, and at the present moment they are, in point of fact, the backbone of the vigorous war party in the Dual Monarchy. There is nothing to indicate that the Hungarian Premier, Count Tisza, and his colleagues have modified their intention of fighting to the end, nor is it likely any open disaffection will make itself felt in the Hungarian regiments of the Emperor Francis Joseph's armies. The discontent in Hungary will be among the Magyar independence party, which always has been in opposition to Count Tisza, and among the Slavonic population and the Roumanians of Transylvania. But all of these unorganised and largely incoherent forces are incapable of offering any open or definite resistance to the wielders of power in Budapest. Nevertheless, the danger of future complications arising out of this cause is kept in view in responsible circles in Vienna, and this prospect does not relieve the general depression felt in political and military quarters.

HOW IT FEELS TO BE IN A ZEPPELIN RAID

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

BERLIN, April 24.

A correspondent of the Dagens Ryheder received permission from the German military authorities to go aboard a Zeppelin during a recent raid, and he has sent a graphic description to his paper. He does not mention names of towns or cities which were bombarded by the Zeppelin, as he was sworn to secrecy in this regard.

"A voyage in a Zeppelin while on a raid over the enemy's country is never to be forgotten," he writes in the Dagens Ryheder. "Aside from the nerve destroying excitement of the occasion, the most pronounced experience of the voyage is the intense cold that envelops the airship like a cake of ice in its flight through the black night. No one can realize who has not experienced it just what this means. We have no lights and are not even permitted to smoke in order to relieve the monotony of the uncanny night.

"The roaring of the North Sea below us reaches our ears, while above us is the star decked sky. We get the impression that the airship is like some extinguished star roaming through black, cold space. We do not talk; somehow no one cares to talk. We remain silent. The air breaks over the bow of the ship like the waves of the sea over a vessel. These air waves seem to penetrate our very marrow. All is dark below us. Presently the faint lights of a village are discernible, and then the brighter illumination of a city comes in sight. We feel like a bird of prey that is about to pounce down upon its enemy.

"We get ready to drop our bombs as the city lights are almost under us. The order is given. We see here and there a sharp white flame as the bombs strike, and from the depth below us presently is heard the faint roar of the explosion sounding to me like the cry of some damned soul. For a short time the Zeppelin rises, then it falls again, and we return on our journey, the intense cold again enveloping us.

OFFICERS ALL KILLED, DRUMMER COMMANDED

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

PARIS, April 24.

The astonishing initiative of the French soldier, which is his greatest point of superiority over the German enlisted man, says the Figaro in a recent issue, is once more illustrated in the following anecdote taken from the Depêche Algérienne:—

A French detachment, acting in reconnoissance, advanced to take possession of a village. As the French soldiers entered the middle of the village they came face to face with a German detachment sent for the same purpose. Both parties opened fire at pointblank range and the French officers leading their men all fell at the first volley. For an instant the French troops wavered, then came the voice of command:—

"Fix bayonets! As skirmishers, march!"

The Frenchmen deployed and threw themselves upon the ground.

"Fire at will, battle sight! Commence firing!"

The company obeyed, the men gathering themselves at the well known orders. "Fire low, nom de Dieu!" came the caution. Then—

"Advance by rushes, forward, march!"

And the infantrymen, after a series of short rushes, charged their opponents and drove them out of the village.

Who was it that rallied the men and kept them in hand

The drummer!

Is there a German fifer who could do the same thing? The Figaro asks in its comment upon the incident.

WAR IMPOSSIBLE WITHOUT COPPER

This Metal is Used in Some Degree in Nearly all War Materials

This has been called a gold war; and so it is in a sense. But it is even more emphatically a copper one. Cut off the supply of copper, and sooner or later nowadays a war comes automatically to an end.

This is because the red metal enters into the composition, in a greater or less degree, of nearly all the munitions of war. Take, for instance, projectiles from big guns. Round the base of each one of these is a band of copper, which, when the gun is fired, expands and grips the interior rifling of the weapon, causing the projectile to rotate.

It also serves another, and a very important purpose. By its expansion at the very moment the charge ignites, the explosive gases are held in check, as it were, and forced to expend all but a tiny fraction of their energy in driving the projectile through the bore of the piece.

If Germany merely wanted enough copper to enable her to make these bands for her big gun projectiles, she could probably supply the demand within her own borders—she produces about 25,000 tons per annum—or, at all events, she would be able to smuggle in enough from professedly neutral neighbors. But there are other demands for the metal which are far more insistent, and notably that in connection with small-arm ammunition, that is to say, rifle cartridges.

These are made of solid drawn brass; all others are liable to jam in the barrel. Now ordinary brass contains three parts of copper to two of zinc, but the fine brass from which cartridges are made consists of three parts of copper and only one of zinc. Experts state that thirteen tons of copper are required for a million pounds of small-arm ammunition. Consequently every cartridge contains rather less than half an ounce of copper. One has only to bear these facts in mind, and to remember also that it has been computed that on an average about thirty millions of cartridges are being fired away daily in the various theatres of the war, to realize how absolutely vital it is to Germany that her imports of copper should not be materially interfered with.

But this is what is happening. The British fleet commands the seas, and copper has been declared to be contraband of war. One result of this is that the German Government is now offering the huge price of $500 a ton for the metal, the price in England being somewhere about £285 a ton. The bulk of the copper is smuggled into Germany from professedly neutral countries, whither it is carried by skippers armed with false bills of lading and faked manifests.

CURIOUS TRADE OF AFRICA

Hippopotamus Ivory Once Much in Demand, and Now the Hide is of Much Value.

One of the curiosities of African trade, now far more uncommonly seen than formerly, is the ivory of the hippopotamus. These teeth are much harder than those of the elephant, and for a long time were used for the manufacture of false teeth, which were skillfully carved from that material. Old Le Vaillant remarks, in his African Travels, now more than a hundred years old: "It is surprising that Europeans, especially Frenchmen, should make an article of commerce out of the teeth of the hippopotamus, for with the help of science they are made to replace our own, and we may see them flashing delightfully in the mouth of a pretty woman." Science has found a better substitute for this, and the trade in hippopotamus teeth has fallen off. The making of sjamboks, or whips, from the hide is still a flourishing industry; and during the Boer war an enterprising genius sold many stripe of the thick hide, at a shilling apiece, to a train load of Canadian recruits, by calling the stuff "biltong"—that is, sun-dried beef. The teeth of the walrus more nearly resemble elephant ivory, and are in good demand in Japan for small carvings; and fossil ivory from Siberia has long been used in China.—Harper's Weekly.

Have You a Bad Sore? Read How Zam-Buk Heals

No matter where the sore, or how caused, Zam-Buk, the great herbal healer, will be found adequate to the case. Unlike ordinary salves, Zam-Buk is purely herbal—contains no animal fat, no poisonous colouring matter. Read how Mr. B. Ellis, of Castleton, Ont., proved its value. He says.—"I suffered for years from a running sore on my toe which started from a frost bite. The pain was so severe I was unable to sleep. The sore went right to the bone and the foot was terribly swollen and inflamed. In vain I tried numerous remedies. At last, seeing an advertisement for Zam-Buk, I decided to give it a trial. The result has been most satisfactory. Zam-Buk quickly eased the pain and took away the swelling and inflammation. Perseverance with Zam-Buk has entirely healed the sore."

For eczema, ulcers, abscesses, scalp sores, and all skin troubles, Zam-Buk is unequalled. It is also just as good for piles, sprains, cuts, scalds, or as a "first aid." As soon as applied, the rich healing essences of which Zam-Buk is composed penetrate right to the root of the trouble, and so stimulate the cells that new healthy tissue is quickly formed. Zam-Buk heals from the bottom up, hence its cures are permanent. All druggists and stores.

A BATTLESHIP'S HEART

One of the most wonderful features of a battleship is the manner in which it is controlled by the heart of the vessel. Under the deck, situated aft, is the control room, a noise-proof steel vault, about 10 feet by 6 feet. From floor to ceiling the walls are lined with dials, wires, gauges, electric bells, speaking tubes, switches, and a great amount of other apparatus, which keeps the commander in constant touch with every corner of the ship.

It is through the control room, which is usually staffed by about six men, that the commander issues his instructions, calls the gun crews from place to place, directs the engineers, steers the whole ship and supervises everything. If a submarine, for instance, is seen in any direction, it is through the control room that it is reported. A little bell rings, a voice from far away—probably from the fire control station, which is on one of the masts above the deck—speaks: "Submarine on port bow, sir. Two leagues off." In an instant an officer thrills the gun crews: "'Ware submarine on port bow. Enemy's craft. Ready!" The gunners have been ready for some time, and when the chief gunner has "laid" the gun to his satisfaction, bang! goes a message the enemy will not forget if it hits him.

LOCAL WEEKLY MARKET REPORT

Timely Comments and Comparison of Prices

The market was only fairly well attended on Saturday, many farmers being busying busy on the land. Their "better halves," however, turned out in full force with their butter and eggs.

Butter was the surprising feature of the whole market. Early in the morning it took a sensational drop of four cents.

This may be accounted for in two ways: one that the supply exceeded the demand, the other that the women being alone, and without their hubbies to scout around and get the top notch price for them, quickly got "cold feet," and lost their "nerve," with the result that butter prices melted away, to 30 cents.

Eggs, on the other hand, remained firm at 18 ot 19 cents.

Poultry were scarce, and soon disposed of.

One lone turkey was offered. It weighed 16 pounds and its owner asked $3.00.

Home-made cooking made its appearance once more, having been offered for sale by the women of All Saints' Anglican Church and those of St. James' Methodist.

TOBACCO FOR SOLDIERS

Authorities Recognize That Men Fight Better If They Have It

"Send us cigarettes and more cigarettes" is the plea to be found in almost every letter from soldiers at the front, for tobacco seems as necessary to Britain's fighting men as food and drink. There was a time when the military authorities would have stopped the wholesale importation of the weed on to the battlefield. Wellington, for instance, was very averse to his men smoking when on service, but to-day the commanders realize that tobacco has an inspiring influence on troops which is an asset in warfare that cannot be overlooked. It has been proved that soldiers well supplied with tobacco, if their wind and shooting do suffer slightly as a result, fight better than those who are deprived of the influence of the weed.

The influence of tobacco on fighting men was well illustrated during the Franco-Prussian War, when it was actually stated by several military authorities that the crushing defeat of the French was to a large extent due to their lack of comforts, especially tobacco, when on the battlefield. On the other hand, every effort was made to provide the German troops with the weed. Subscriptions, headed by members of the Royal Court in Berlin, were raised for the purpose of providing the men in the field with tobacco. History tells of how the German hussars galloped into the charge with huge cigars in their mouths, and the infantry stood shoulder to shoulder whilst they puffed at their pipes. Bismarck himself set an example to his men in this respect, for he was seldom seen without a cigar. The Iron Chancellor, at the conclusion of a battle, used to walk amongst the wounded, and, taking cigars from his pocket, would light them and give them to the soldiers to smoke.

In the present campaign tobacco is finding its way into the hospitals. Whilst being operated upon some soldiers are allowed to smoke cigarettes.

PUT STOMACH IN FINE CONDITION

Says Indigestion Results from an Excess of Hydrochloric Acid.

Undigested food delayed in the stomach decays, or rather, ferments the same as food left in the open air, says a noted authority. He also tells us that Indigestion is caused by Hyper-acidity, meaning, there is an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach which prevents complete digestion and starts food fermentation. Thus everything eaten sours in the stomach much like garbage sours in a can, forming acrid fluids and gases which inflate the stomach like a toy balloon. Then we feel a heavy, lumpy misery in the chest, we belch up gas, we eructate sour food or have heartburn, flatulence, water-brash or nausea.

He tells us to lay aside all digestive aids and instead, get from any pharmacy four ounces of Jad Salts and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and drink while it is effervescing and furthermore, to continue this for a week. While relief follows the first dose, it is important to neutralize the acidity, remove the gas-making mass, start the liver, stimulate the kidneys and thus promote a free flow of pure digestive juices.

Jade Salts is inexpensive and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and sodium phosphate. This harmless salts is used by thousands of people for stomach trouble with excellent results.

Half of the Pleasure.

The youngest girl of a Baltimore family was recently much distressed at dessert to discover that there was ice cream for dinner.

"Oh, papa," exclaimed the youngster, reproachfully, "why didn't they tell me this morning that we were going to have ice cream?"

"What difference would that have made?"

"Lots," sighed the child. "I could have expected it all day."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

POPULAR ENVELOPE CHEMISE.

By Anabel Worthington.

The envelope chemise is not expensive to buy, but is less expensive to make. In fact, a half dozen may be cut out almost at once and run up on the machine without much time or trouble being expended, and because little material and very little trimming is needed the cost is wonderfully low. About two yards of longcloth and five and a half yards of edging will make one of these useful garments. The one illustrated here is the simplest form, the front in one piece and the back seamed at the centre.

There are two ways of making the top, according as one wishes, the straight upper edge with separate shoulder strap, or the regulation round neck, the shoulder being included. The pattern comes in the latter style and is perforated to show where to cut off for the straight upper edge. The straight edge is best for sheer blouses, especially those of lace or chiffon, when the effect must be very light. The separate straps may be made of narrow beading with lace edging or of a strip of pretty insertion, or even of ribbon alone.

The name of the chemise is derived from the extension on the back, which buttons over in envelope fashion to the lower edge of the front. This design, which is intended for small women and misses, requires, for 16 year size, 2 yards of material 36 inches wide, with 5¾ yards of edging, 1¼ yards of beading for the neck and 1¾ yards of narrow ribbon. The pattern, No. 7,125, can be obtained in sizes 14, 16 and 18 years.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

CALLED OUT ON SERVICE

Accountant of Local Branch of Bank of Commerce Leaves to Join the Royal Naval Reserve

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

Lieut. J. S. Watson, R.N.R., accountant of the local branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, received a wire this morning to join the Clyde Division of the Royal Naval Reserve for active service, immediately.

Mr. Watson has been accountant of the Canadian Bank of Commerce in Peterborough for the past year. He is highly thought of in banking, as well as other circles, for his sterling qualities. He will be much missed by the many friends he has made in Peterborough. He leaves on Friday for the port from which he is instructed to sail.

Memorial Service.

OTTAWA, April 29.— Twenty thousand people this morning attended the impressive memorial service held on Parliament Hill in honour of the Canadians recently fallen at the front. The spectacle was an inspiring one, with the Canadian overseas troops massed on the green sward in front. The Duke of Connaught Sir Robert Borden, Gen. Hughes, the Justices of the Supreme Court and Admiral Kingsmill were among those present. Rev. Dr. Macridge was in charge of the services, which was a brief, reverent and impressive one.

Four or five new recruits for the night and the news from the front has night and the news fro mthe front has had a marked effect in stimulating recruiting. The men of the fourth contingent will be equipped with their service uniforms here and by this time next week it is expected that they will be equipped in the khaki.

Another draft of men on leave from the 8th C.M.R. is expected to-morrow. The Mounted Rifles took part in the memorial service at Ottawa to-day, and were inspected by the Duke of Connaught.

Appeal to Council Will Be Made by the Health Association

The Health Association has given notice of its intention to wait upon the City Council on Monday evening next, with the request that the city grant to the Association, fifty dollars monthly, until such time as the Association is in a position to raise funds some other way. With this amount the Association would be able to continue the good work that it has undertaken. This includes the employment of two qualified nurses whose duties consist of visiting the poorer homes throughout the city and administering treatment to those who may be unable to supply their own wants. A milk station is also operated where mothers can be supplied with the proper kind of milk suitable for the nourishment of a child. By this and other means, infant mortality is reduced and indigent tubercular patients attended to.

OUR FALLEN HEROES

"Who lives if England dies?"
Was it but yesterday,
In idle mood we read the words;
And lightly turned away?

To-day with streaming eyes
Our covenant we renew,
Sealed with the life blood of our loss,
Our brave, our great, our true.

Our dead! O, hear them call,
"Give of your best! Give! Give! Give!
Sons of the Empire, Up! Be Brave!
"Who dies if England live?"

THE GALLANT LADS WHO CHARGED NEAR YPRES THE CALL IS OUT FOR MEN TO AVENGE THEM

A picture of part of A Company of the 2nd Battalion, showing all the Peterborough men who have performed so heroically. When the companies were doubled up at Salisbury, B Company, consisting principally of the 9th Mississauga Horse, Toronto, was joined with the men pictured above and the command of the double company given to Major Bennett. The latter is shown in the centre of the second row from the bottom. On his immediate right is Lieut. Chas. Ackerman of Peterborough, who has on his right Lieut. O. G. Whelan of Ottawa, reported wounded. To the left of Major Bennett is Major Mills of Peterborough, quartermaster of the 2nd Battalion, and next to him Lieut. A. G. McLennan of Ottawa, wounded in the Langemarck fight. Sergt. Peter Victor seriously wounded some weeks ago, is the third figure from the left in the second row. It is feared that the casualties among the soldiers in this photograph will be severe. Peterborough must supply men to take the places of these who have fallen. The gaps must be filled, our heroes must be avenged. The opportunity is open now. Recruiting for the fourth contingent is going on at the armouries. A number of brave lads, stirred by the story of the heroism of Major Bennett and his men, enlisted last night. There will be more to-night—there is room for all and all are needed. Nobly as Peterborough has responded to the other calls she must give of her bravest again. The death of Major Bennett is a clarion call to arms. Until further notice recruits may apply at the armouries at 4 p.m. or 8 p.m. Your King and country need you.

SLOWLY BUT SURELY THE ALLIES RECOVER LOST GROUND

French Official Report Says That Progress is Being Made in the Face of the Most Bitter Resistance—Ypres is a Mass of Ruins and the Villages North of the Town Have Been Wiped Out by the German Guns.

PROGRESS IN THE CHAMPAGNE REGION

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, April 29.—The allies are slowly but surely recovering the lost ground in the north, according to to-day's official reports. The task is most difficult, as the Germans have dug themselves in at every point. In addition they have brought up numerous heavy guns, and are constantly shelling the entire allied front. In consequence, the gains can be counted in feet and even in inches rather than yards. The Germans are constantly receiving fresh troops and it is believed here that they have not abandoned their plan to hack their way through to the sea, but in the early fighting they exhausted their reserve supply of ammunition and are now husbanding what they have on hand. The allies' gains so far reported are along the right bank of the Yser. Most of the villages in the north are completely wiped out by the German guns. Ypres is simply a mass of tumbled bricks and mortar and smoking ruins. The inhabitants have fled, panic stricken, far inside of the allied lines. Fighting is also reported in progress in the Champagne region, where the French are slowly recovering the lines of trenches that were lost to the Germans in a surprise attack in the region of Beausejour. In general the situation is described by the war office as satisfactory.

LONDON, April 29.—The correspondent of the London Daily Express telegraphs: "The Germans admit the failure of their costly attempt to take Ypres by storm and crumple up the British left wing. Their retirement from the positions north-east of Ypres is being steadily accelerated by incessant attacks by fresh British and French troops.

THE CASUALTY LIST

OTTAWA, April 29th. — The casualty list issued this afternoon showed the names of 37 non-commissioned officers and men of the first contingent. None of these gave the Canadian addresses, except Pte. Daniel Ernest Scott, of Alliston, Ont., first battalion. It is supposed the department is withholding the names of these with their Canadian addresses till their relatives have been notified. The list by battalions reads this way:

First battalion—18.
Second battalion—8.
Third battalion—2.
Fourth battalion—7.
Fifth battalion—1.
Sixth battalion—2.
Seventh battalion—1.

FRESH DRAFTS FROM CANADA TO FILL GAPS

Col. Logie in Command at Toronto Asked For Immediate Draft of 690 Officers and Men

WILL GO AT ONCE

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, April 29.—The seriousness of the loss to the Canadians at the battle of Langemarcke was emphasized here to-day when Colonel Logie, commanding the 2nd division, was requested for an immediate draft of 690 officers and men to fill up the gaps in the First Canadian Contingent. Similar orders were sent apparently to the other divisional commanders through Canada. It is expected the draft will be taken from the Second and Third Contingents already formed, and new men recruited to fill up the ranks in these contingents.

IN HONOUR OF MAJOR BENNETT

Flag of the Provincial Parliament Buildings Flies at Half Mast

TORONTO, April 28.—The flag on the great pole in front of the Parliament Buildings flew at half-mast yesterday as a mark of respect to the late Major G. W. Bennett, superintendent of colonization roads, who was killed while leading his men in the charge upon the German position at Langemarck.

"The Government and the whole of the staff in the Parliament Buildings mourn his loss very deeply indeed," stated Hon. Mr. Hearst yesterday in referring to the heroic death of Major Bennett. "He was a capable, conscientious and earnest official, and one who had not only won the respect of his Minister and the Government and the members of the Legislature, but the public generally with whom he came in contact in the important position he held as superintendent of colonization roads."

"I have personally known the late Major Bennett from my boyhood days," added the Prime Minister, "and I looked upon him as a personal friend. I feel his loss very keenly. He was one of the very first men in Ontario when war broke out to offer his services, and he will long be remembered by his grateful countrymen."

CASUALTIES WILL BE MUCH HIGHER THAN FIRST THOUGHT

Special Cable Says That It Was Only When the Shattered Battalions Got Together at Their Billets That a Complete List Was Obtainable and Even Now the Fate of Many Men is Not Known for a Certainty.

SPECIAL CABLE:

TORONTO, April 29.—A Special Cable to the Toronto Star to-day says: The casualties in the first Canadian contingent have been ascertained to be much higher than at first reported. Only when the shattered battalions got together at their billets was a complete list obtainable and even now the fate of many men is not known for certainty. The remains of no officer or man will be permitted to be removed from the continent, but great care is being taken to mark the graves as far as possible so that they can be located afterwards. John Redmond cables he is proud to know that there were so many Irishmen among the gallant Canadians. Other prominent Britishers also send messages of congratulations to Canada and sympathy for the bereaved ones.

LONDON, April 29.—The government's bill designed to restrict the sale and use of intoxicants, was introduced in the House of Commons this afternoon by David Lloyd-George. In introducing the bill Lloyd-George declared that excessive drinking among the employees of various navy yards and those engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war was seriously affecting the output. "The British nation," he said, "should submit everything to the present struggle and clear away all the obstacles so that we may win this war. Out of 8,000 employees in one plant alone, 1800 of them failed to resume work after three days' holidays at Easter."

RUSSIANS GAINING

PETROGRAD, April 29.—The Russian occupation of Loubnia to-day, a small village to the north-west of the Uszok Pass, was a decided achievement in the Carpathian campaign for the reason that it seriously endangers the important railway line between the town of Uszok and the Borezna line, which made it impossible to extend the Austrian oporations in this region and at the same time successfully retarded the Russian advance in the direction of the Uszok Pass.

PARIS, April 29.—The war office to-day issued a statement announcing the destruction of a German Zeppelin. The Zeppelin, which attempted a raid on Dunkirk last week, was wrecked by the fire of anti-air gun craft posted there. The crippled ship was able to get away, but the information received to-day shows that it is now stranded near Bruges.

CAPE TOWN, April 29.—It was officially announced to-day that the Union forces occupied Daberos, south-east of Gibeon, on Sunday, and that the country north of Daberos has now been cleared of enemy.

LOCAL BOY DOING WELL

Welcome News Received That Lieut. Harold Matthews Was Not Wounded But is in Hospital Suffering From Gas

NO NEWS OF OTHERS

Mr. T. F. Matthews has received a cablegram from the London agent of the firm of Matthews-Blackwell Co. giving him the welcome news that his son Lieut. Harold Matthews of the 2nd Battery, First Brigade, was not wounded as first stated, but is in the hospital suffering from the effects of the deadly gas used by the Huns in their attack. The cablegram states that Lieut. Matthews is doing well.

No word has been received from any of the other Peterborough officers and men. In addition to Lieut. Ackerman there were two other Peterborough officers in the 2nd Battalion, Major Mills of the 57th, who is quartermaster, and Capt. Garnet Greer, M.D., of the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons, who is medical officer of the 2nd Battalion. Relatives and friends are anxiously awaiting for some news from one of these officers. There has been nothing either in regard to any of the non-commissioned officers and men and it may be some days before the list is received.

Joyriders Ran Into Sidewalk

Lakefield Men Who Became Intoxicated Had An Accident—Party Arrested

Lakefield was not large enough for three young men from that burg, and they set out in an automobile last night to "do Peterborough." Upon arrival in the city they started to get drunk and each managed to get pretty well "lubricated" before the bars closed. After 11 p.m. they all boarded the automobile, and with a couple more friends proceeded to make pedestrians sit up and take notice. The police officers got busy and took the number of the car, but it was going too fast to be halted by a mere policeman.

At 12 o'clock the party came to grief on Hunter Street, East City, where the road probably appeared wider than usual to the much intoxicated driver, and the car came to a sudden stop against the sidewalk.

P. C. Blade was only a couple of blocks away when he heard the crash and going to the scene on the run he arrested the bunch. The automobile, which was the property of a Lakefield liveryman, rented for the occasion, was badly damaged, and it is estimated that $100 will be necessary for repairs. The occupants were uninjured.

This morning the three Lakefield men were charged in court with being drunk in a public place. Two of them were fined $2 and costs of $3.75 on this count. The third, who was driving the car, was fined $50.00 and received a severe reprimand from the magistrate.

CATERPILLARS AND THE COUNCIL.

Through the Board of Works the City Council is very properly mobilizing forces for a campaign against the caterpillars. While the proposed action is necessary and timely, it would be unnecessary if individual citizens did their duty in fighting the pest. The Board of Works proposes destruction of the choke-cherry trees that are favourite breeding places of the tent caterpillar. This is a good thing to do, but it won't serve the purpose this season. The thing to do now is to cut off and burn the tents which shelter the newly-hatched worms not yet large enough to do much damage. At evening the worms will be found in their tents, and can easily be destroyed. Along the north side of Braidwood avenue there is practically a hedge of choke cherry trees, containing, as was seen last night, scores of tents filled with worms. In an hour a man with a sharp knife could cut off all the tents, containing collectively, hundreds of thousands of worms. The leaves are not expended enough to provide much food for them; and if the twigs containing the tents are cut off and thrown into the adjacent highway, the worms not big enough yet to travel would perish. For this season the work of the Board of Works will be the destruction of the tents—the sooner the better. At the same time the work of destroying the choke cherry and scrub apple growth should be vigorously prosecuted. That will save a lot of trouble next year. Though their destruction won't entirely remove the caterpillars and prevent their development, it will do a great deal in that direction, and bring the caterpillar scourge under more easy control. The Council may not have a legal right to invade private premises to destroy the choke cherry trees; but they can be destroyed, where the right exists; and energetic and earnest appeal made to the public spirit and neighbourly feeling of property owners. Considering the necessary character of caterpillar destruction, it might be permissible to strain legal power a little and ignore technical private rights a little. The man who neglects to destroy promptly and thoroughly the caterpillar tents on his property is a public enemy. The caterpillar scourge he fosters can't be confined to his own premises; but will spread to his neighbours. It is to be remembered that now is the time to do the work—before the caterpillars get beyond control.

CANADA'S WORK CUT OUT.

Some Conservative journals in advocating and urging a general election make desperate attempts to excuse the inexcusable, and justify the absurd and unpatriotic. The excuses given are palpably insufficient. That of Hon. Mr. Rogers, who is regarded as the head and front of the war-time election propaganda, is to discipline the Senate. Even if a general election were held, how would that affect the Senate? The appointing of new western senators, would only realize the proposal of the Senate that the appointment of such senators should be deferred till after the next election. The plea that the action of the Senate has delayed, or neutralized, the progressive measures of the Government is futile. The Senate provided that the substitute naval policy of the Government of voting money for building Dreadnoughts should be submitted for approval of the people. The people never had a chance to vote on the question at the general election of 1911; the chief, if not sole issue, was reciprocity. That was one of the "progressive measures" of the Government that was "blocked" by the Senate—by the proposal to have the people decide the question. The Highways Aid Bill, was only amended by the Senate to provide that the money voted should be distributed according to law, and in a way that would prevent it being used as a wholesale bribery fund. The amendment of the Senate was to safeguard this "progressive measure," not to block it. The Toronto World elaborates its excuse, perhaps the weakest of all. It says that "Canada is in the war struggle to a finish." Nobody disputes that or opposes the idea. But the World frivolously proceeds to assert:

> "Canada is in the struggle to a finish. If it is necessary to take the public mind in the matter perhaps the best and quickest way is to hold a general election, where the war and our further part in it may be submitted to the people for their approval or disapproval."

This is rank nonsense. There is no division of opinion on the subject. The Government has been helped in every way to carry on Canada's participation in the work of waging the war. Parliament has unanimously voted the money required, and will as unanimously vote more if more is necessary. The only criticism has been against the mode of spending the money. The Brockville Times, in another flabby excuse, says the Government would be justified in holding a general election "in order to relieve the strain of this intolerable nagging." A general election is not needed for that. The Government has the remedy in its own hands. Sir Robert Borden has confessed that this "nagging" was justified. He, himself, found it necessary to kick out of his party following two members of Parliament, one of whom has since resigned as a confession of guilt, for misusing their parliamentary positions in the waste of money unanimously voted for war purposes. He has found it necessary to institute legal proceedings against officials of his own government, or middlemen, with government affiliations, who or parties to wasting the war appropriation by furnishing defective war supplies at high prices. To call criticism of government expenditures "nagging," in face of facts like these, is to insult common sense and ignore the character of plain facts.

There is no earthly reason in these "reasons" for holding a general election. Sir Robert Borden has appointed a commission of capable business men for purchasing war supplies; and if he keeps this commission free from the sinister influences, and the baleful patronage list that have led to rascality in spending war money, criticism will cease, and with it, its force as excuse for an election. Parliament as at present constituted, is composed of only one party in the matter of providing money and taking adequate measures to provide for Canada doing its share of war work. Both parties in Parliament are unanimous; the only division of opinion arises from the way in which the money is spent. And there is not so much party division at that. There are many Conservative newspapers and individuals that condemn "graft" in the provision of war supplies. They have done their share of "nagging."

There is no logical reason for holding a general election at this untimely time. It will prevent for months the unity of sentiment and action that now animates the public men of both parties, and the people of both parties. We have sterner work to do than squabbling over party politics; struggling for political power, while we are engaged, and need all our undivided energies, in, prosecuting the war. Just now the battlefields of Europe have provided battalions of wounded Canadian soldiers, who at this moment, and for months, will need all that Canadians can do to help their healing and contribute to their comfort. To call our people away from this work which would be ended automatically, by the pettiness of a partisan political struggle, is akin to criminality. We must do our duty in this and cognate matters, with singleness of purpose, and free from the distraction and destruction of such work, through the embittered partizanship, which a general election would engender. We need practical patriotism more than practical politics. We have had enough of that already. We must avoid the partizan wedge dividing the solid ranks of Canadianship — of one mind, of one aim in carrying on the work of warfare. Our soldiers on the field have given Canada a high place in the eyes of the world; shall we undo their work by presenting the pitiful spectacle of our people at home turning their backs on our soldiers and leaving their wounds to fester unattended, or their pressing personal wants in hospital and trench to be unprovided for, while we throw our souls and our energies into the engrossing struggles of an unnecessary and untimely party squabble?

SHOES FOR SOLDIERS.

A study of the orders given by Napoleon indicates the care he exercised to have a sufficient supply of shoes provided. On one occasion he wrote: "You know that shoes are always needed in war," and at another time he said to Baron: Lejeune: "Shoes help on marches and marches win battles." To Sir John Burgoyne's question addressed to Wellington: "What was the first requirement of a soldier?" "A good paid of shoes," he replied. "And the second requirement?" "A good pair of shoes for a change." "And the third?" "A pair of soles for repairs."—Scientific American.

GERMAN TRIBUTE TO THE RESOURCEFULNESS OF CANADIAN SOLDIERS

Probably the most satisfactory tribute to Canadian prowess comes from Berlin, where it is now admitted that, but for the interference of the Dominion troops, the quick fall of Ypres had been anticipated. The Canadians smashed the advancing German line and threw eleven regiments into confusion. Confusion in a German regiment means defeat. Without officers, the soldiers who are trained not to think but to obey, go to pieces. "Trust and obey, there's no other way," is the German military maxim, and it is as futile in war as in other departments of life where initiai and self-reliance are needed.

A German officer commenting upon the difficulty of fighting British troops dwelt upon this feature. He said it was like fighting an army of non-commissioned officers. Everybody knew what to do, whether he was told or not. When the Canadians found the world going to bits around them, and all lines of attack turned topsy turvey, they accepted the situation with the same sang-froid that the national training in lacrosse or hockey or football has given them. They learn in team sports to think like lightning and to act like the thunderbolt.

There is a story told of the American civil war in which a demoralized private was described as requesting instructions how to get to the rear. "There ain't no r'ar in this battle," was the information given him. There was no rear for the Canadians when the Germans drove past their flank, after breaking through the French territorials. They formed up and charged at the enemy front and rear, and, when surrounded, fought back to back until they had cleared the ground.

They "upset all German calculations," according to the Berlin despatch, and that is the finest tribute that could have been paid them. Rallying power is the greatest asset an army can have, and recuperative power is probably the next. The Canadians rallied like heroes, and their ranks will be restored by unlimited numbers of the best and bravest in the land.—Toronto World.

Mole Method Of Modern Warfare; How Enemies Fight Unseen Enemies

The most experienced military men at times wonder at the enormous strides made in the methods of war and the instruments of destruction. Within the last decade nothing has been more conclusively proven than the old saying "Necessity is the mother of invention."

In every war, each country has had to create greater and greater engines of destruction to beat its opponent, and the opponent has had to do the same. So, through all the strife, past, present, and future, runs the greatest inventive competition ever known, each country feeling that its very existence depends upon its ability to develop better tactics, more complete organization, greater strength, and more effective engines of destruction than its opponent.

One result has been the deadliness of rifle and artillery fire in the open. A body of men, even in open formation, is literally torn to pieces. Every charge is paid for in enormous loss of life. The men are simply mowed down as with a scythe.

This in turn, has made it imperative for all forces to "dig themselves in." Thus each force is totally invisible to the other through the ordinary direct means of sight, though each knows full well where the other is and how far distant, sometimes not more than one hundred yards. Of course, each must watch the other without exposing themselves to the enemy's gunfire.

In earlier days, this was done by loop-holes in the breastworks. To-day, even the slight exposure at loop-holes is avoided. Instead, the periscope is used. This is the same instrument as is used on a submarine, to enable the men in the boat beneath the surface to see clearly what is going on above the surface. Briefly, it comprises a tube having a set of mirrors so arranged that a telescope at the top will transmit an image through an eye or sight opening at the base. Thus by looking into the glass at the bottom, th observer six feet or more below the surface of the ground can see clearly all that is going on on the surface as far as the telescope at the top can see, the range depends upon the strength of the telescope. The effect is the same as though the observer could place his eyes on a pole raise them to the height of the top of the periscope. It is only when one side scrambles from its trenches to rush upon the other that it becomes visible, the hidden enemy still remaining invisible until actually met face to face and driven from its trenches.

So, through all the roar and tumult, those taking the most active part and most positively engaged in the conflict, are yet invisible to each other until at the very instant of hand-to-hand conflict.

Sir Wilfrid To Be In Toronto On May 21st

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, April 29.— A telegram from Ottawa announces that Sir Wilfrid Laurier has accepted Friday, May 21st as the date of his visit to Toronto to speak at the annual dinner of the Liberal Club Federation of Ontario. Notices to this effect are being sent out this week to the secretaries of all the clubs in the Federation. Places at the dinner will be strictly reserved to Liberal Club members from all parts of the Province. The demand for tickets is likely to be much larger than the supply.

The dinner will be held in the Ontario Club with Sir Wilfrid and Mr. N. W. Rowell as the guests of honour. The other speakers will be young men prominent in the Federation movement.

The dinner will be preceded in the afternoon by the Annual Business Meeting of the Federation, of which the chief feature will be a symposium of opinions as to the best methods of conducting clubs. Emphasis will also be laid on the part the Federation has played in holding patriotic meetings for its members to study and discuss the war and plans for continued activity along these lines.

Sir Wilfrid, while in town, will during the afternoon, address the members of the Provincial Women's Liberal Association which is holding its annual meeting in Toronto on the same day.

ONE OF THE EFFECTS.

It is scarcely necessary, of course, to point out that one of the effects of an election in the midst of the present great crisis will be to prolong the war and increase the loss and suffering, which already have reached a staggering total. It will be seized upon by the vigilant German publicity agencies, which will encourage the German populace with the assurance that the sentiment in Canada against continuing the struggle is so strong that the Government has to take refuge in a general election.—Victoria (B.C.) Times.

Bomb-Droppers Busy.

PARIS, April 29. — A despatch from Nancy to the Temps says that a German aeroplane flying at a great height dropped three bombs on the central quarters of the town. Three persons were killed and six dangerously wounded.

French aeroplanes gave pursuit, but the German escaped.

Committed For Libel.

NORTH BAY, April 29.—J. J. Lehman, publisher of The Booster, a weekly publication, was committed for trial yesterday on the charge of defamatory libel against Senator Geo. Gordon. The preliminary hearing was held before Magistrate Weegar.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

NEW YORK, April 29.—The market had a fairly wide range to-day. Nearly all the leading issues reflected strength. Westinghouse continued the upward movement of yesterday, and to-day touched high at 98. This is a range of approximately eighteen points in a week. The buildges were chiefly confined to the industrials.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

FOUND SNOW BRIDE

Startling Experience of an Artist Who Met Strange Girl in Blizzard.

By GEORGE MUNSON.

Lawrence Harned had put the finishing touches to his picture, and yet he was not satisfied. For four months he had painted it, retouching here and there until at last all was complete except the woman who stood with outstretched arms among the drifting snowflakes. Her face, a type of Southern beauty, Spanish or Italian, had never symbolized the thought of the designer; now, staring unhappily at it, he felt that he could never attain to what he sought.

Harned occupied an attic in Washington square, a huge room which served at once for studio and bedroom. Adjoining this was a smaller furnished room, but he never occupied this. He slept among his paintings, and often in the middle of the night he would spring from his bed to portray the idea which had come to him in the stretches of sleeplessness. Now he looked out at the falling snow, whitening the roofs around him. With a sudden impulse he put on his hat and overcoat and strode down the stairs and into the darkness without.

Then suddenly his heart beat wildly. For there, approaching blowly and uncertainly through the night, was the woman of his dream. She was a girl of perhaps seventeen, slight, wonderful in figure and poise, an

"What is the matter?" he asked her. "Are you lost? Are you ill?" But she only shook her head and the tears streamed down her face. He tried her in French, in his unskilled Italian, but in vain.

Harned stared at her in dismay. Then it occurred to him that his duty was to offer her warmth and perhaps food, and, in doing so, he would paint her. This was the model that he had sought so long. Afterward, later that night, undoubtedly he could succeed in ascertaining where she lived and take her home.

Suddenly His Heart Beat Wildly.

She had no fear of him. She seemed like a tremulous, innocent child when he escorted her into the house, up the dim passage and stairs, to his attic at the top of the house.

She seemed naively interested in the pictures that stood round the room, and went from one to another, clapping her hands with delight. But he could not understand a word she said. She was certainly not a European girl. Perhaps she was a Syrian. He took his brush and platette and began deftly changing the face of the woman in the picture. It was midnight before he had finished, and even then he was not satisfied.

"Now you must go home," he said, and pointed toward the door. He put on his hat and overcoat again. But when he made his object evident she began weeping and clung to him, looking up imploringly into his face.

Well, there was nothing but to offer her hospitality. She understood at once and assented eagerly.

Harned was awake betimes the following morning, but when he was dressed and ready to begin breakfast there came a tap at the door and the unknown stood there, beaming upon him. So he prepared breakfast for two and then painted her again.

And he did not telephone for the police. For by this time the novel companionship, and a sense, too, that destiny had sent her to him, had stolen away his judgment. And so for days he painted until at last the picture was completed.

Harned had always lived a very lonely life. It had been one of intense struggles and hardships, too, until, a year before, his pictures had begun to attract the notice of a small group of connoisseurs and had secured him purchasers at a little more than the scanty price which he had hitherto commanded. Now the gentle influence of the strange girl stole into his heart.

He had a mother living in a small town up-state. He resolved to write to her, to ask her counsel, with a view to sending the girl home to learn English and to be put through an elementary schooling. He would not take advantage of her helplessness until she was in a position to marry him of her will. And he knew that only his mother would understand.

He had finished writing the letter on the tenth morning after her arrival. She was preparing lunch over the little gas stove in a corner of the studio.

"I shall be back soon," he said as he put on his overcoat, and she smiled and nodded, just as though she understood. He took the letter to mail and one of his pictures under his arm. This he designed for a certain dealer who purchased his work at a ridiculously low price; nevertheless, it would provide him with food for a month, and, possibly, if he were sharp at a bargain, with enough over for their fares to Hicksville, his mother's town.

As he crossed the street Harned became aware of a swarthy, sinister-looking man who, leaning against the rail which surrounded the park, watched him with a sort of malignant stare that struck him cold with apprehension. Harned hesitated, then, ridiculing his fears, he continued on his way, but more quickly. At the end of the street he paused. The man was still leaning against the rail. Harned now laughed at his terror. Obviously this was some Italian laborer out of a job; but the nervousness which the incident had produced revealed to him the abyss over which his happiness hung suspended. He resolved to get the girl to Hicksville as soon as possible. He was lucky enough to sell his picture at a satisfactory price, and departed homeward, blissfully ignorant that the dealer, who was accumulating Harned's work against the day of his fame, would gladly have paid him three times the price he had demanded.

The man was no longer leaning against the rail. Harned hurried into the house. As he did so he became aware that he was still clutching the unopened letter in his hand. He would have turned back to post it, but his fears had awakened again and he hastened up the stairs to his studio, unlocked the door, and ran in. The studio was empty.

He rushed into the bedroom. The girl was not there. She was not anywhere. She had gone as mysteriously as she had come. He called her, ran down the corridors and shouted. A fellow artist came out of his room and looked at Harned with an amused smile.

"Have you seen a girl—my model—dark, with black hair—disappeared!" Harned gasped.

The other's eyelids fluttered upon his cheek. "No, old man," he replied. "Say, if I were you, I wouldn't make such a confounded noise about it, anyway."

All that night it snowed, and all that night Harned paced the streets in a frenzy, looking for her in every woman's figure that hurried by. There were stout and lean women, old and young, some with dark, tousled hair, some frizzled blondes—there was none whom he could have mistaken for his love as far as he could have seen her.

Toward morning he was back in his studio again. He had torn his letter to his mother into fragments, and he was painting again.

Harned's mistake. "The Snow Bride," was the sensation of the year at the Exposition of American Painters. In a single day he leaped into celebrity. Bent, the shrewd little dealer who had some 20 of his pictures stored away, now brought them forth and held a Harned exhibition, which netted him nearly $12,000.

One day a knock came at the door, and Harned opened it to find a little tan-colored gentleman at the door, dressed in a well-fitting frock coat and carrying a silk hat in his hand. He introduced himself with a smile and a bow as the Persian consul.

"Mr. Harned, I am looking for an artist to paint my wife," he said. "I was much struck by your painting, 'The Snow Bride.' In fact, I am the purchaser of it, if you will permit me. The price is, I understand, $2,000?"

He went on to speak frankly. He had long wanted a portrait of Mme. Nouriddian, but unfortunately, his means were limited. He hoped that Mr. Harned would not demand an excessive price; he was sure that some day the picture would become a valued heirloom in his family. Harned drank in the man's praise with the thirst of one whose long struggle had at last been rewarded with success. He agreed to be at the consul's apartment the following Thursday at noon, in order to meet Mme. Nouriddian and make that acquaintance which must precede the sitting.

Harned must have arrived too soon, for the consul was not yet home from his office, and Mme. Nouriddian was also out. He was shown into a modest reception room; he was conscious that a young woman was seated there. Next moment the blood rushed to his head. There before him, smiling and tremulous, was the woman he loved.

It seemed like a dream as indeed it was. A mist swam before his eyes and a dizzy faintness overcame him. He tried to stare out through the encompassing clouds, and, trying in vain, sank into a chair. And then—then she was kneeling at his side and her arms were round him, and her cheek was pressed against his own.

At luncheon Harned, with his sweetheart seated beside him, and the consul and Mme. Nouriddian beaming at him across the table, learned the meaning of his inexplicable adventures. The girl was an adopted daughter of his wife, of a good family in Teheran, who had come to America in charge of a relative who sought his fortune in the new world. Unfortunately this man had proved false to his trust, and had obtained admission for her in the guise of his wife.

I met Harned and his bride in Paris last spring. They are supremely happy. The "Snow Bride" has blossomed into a rose.

Wealthy Woman Stricken When At a Dance

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 29.— Mrs. Laura R. Coane, wife of Robert Coane and socially prominent, died suddenly at midnight Saturday in the Bellevue-Stratford. She was taken ill in the room where the supper dance was on and died soon after.

With her husband, Mrs. Coane had left her apartments in the Rittenhouse Hotel just after nine o'clock Saturday night. She was feeling fine then. Mr. and Mrs. Coane were the hosts at a theatre party, their guests being Mr. and Mrs. Murray and Mr. and Mrs. Story.

After the theatre, they went over to the Bellevue Stratford. They went direct to the Stratford room, where the dance was in progress and where their table was reserved. They had just become seated when Mrs. Coane made an attempt to rise and then slipped back fainting in her chair, holding her hand on her heart.

The orchestra stopped playing and the dance ceased suddenly, and Mrs. Coane was taken to a room on the upper floors. Her physicians were summoned, but she died a few minutes before midnight.

"Her" Man Is at the Front
Woman Acts As Porteress

LONDON, April 29. — "Carry your bag, sir?" Stepping from a train in one of London's big railway stations the other day, the writer was queried thus in feminine tones. Turning in momentary astonishment, he beheld one of the band of women porters who have invaded several of the big citys' terminals.

She was a robust-looking person on the shady side of thirty. A man's cloth cap adorned the tightly-braided locks and a serviceable apron covered her skirt. Silver initials of the railway company on the black band encircling her left arm were her sole badge of office.

Proffering the usual fee of "tuppence" accepted with a smart courtesy, the Canadian carried his own grip. But the business-like lady immediately pounced on a luggage-laden islander glad of her services. It did seem queer to see a woman struggling along with a heavy ytravelling bag while the owner, a healthy young man, sauntered by swinging his cane.

Man at the Front.

"Oh, we cawn't compline," declared the erstwhile carrier of the big bag, made loquacious by a sixpence. "What with all the trains in this station, I averages abaht one and sixpence a day in tips. Then the railway pays us women 'eighteen shillings a week wages.'"

Her "man," she told me, like the husbands of most of her fellow-portresses, was at the war. What with a family to look after and only his separation allowance to do it on, she had need to bestir herself. Twenty-five shillings more weekly made them all comfortable. She and five others did porters' work on the platform, which consisted principally in carrying small hand baggage to and fro. Up at the railway cleaning sheds a score of women were employed cleaning engines, coaches, cleaning windows and polishing brass. All of them had been used to hard work in factories during girlhood, followed by strenuous domestic duties. They were well pleased with their lot as salaried railway employees.

Men Object.

"An outrage is what I calls it," blurted a veteran uniformed baggage functionary, who saw much largesse being diverted from its former route to his pocket by reason of this innovation. "Railways siy they cawn't get men! Why, there's plenty for porter's jobs. They only pay us men a pound a week, anyway."

"The very ideah!" sniffed the haughty young lady who condescended to sell chocolate abra, magazines and cigarettes at the station bookstall. "I cawn't think what our sex is coming to when women take on porters' jobs. Huh!"

There is every indication that women will be much more extensively employed before long in Great Britain, as they have been on the continent since the beginning of the war. London 'bus, train and underground conductors have all threatened to strike if any women employees are taken on.

Belgian Refugees.

England is still full of Belgian refugees. Down at Folkestone on Sunday the writer met two young fellows from that unhappy country. Both strong and hearty and having had military training, they made the astonishing announcement that they were not going back across the Channel to fight.

"Oh, our Government has no money and we would get no pay. No pay, no fight," remarked one of them disloyally, making his excuses. There are not a few like him in this country, and an agitation is being made to have them rounded up and deported.

In the little hostelry close to Trafalgar Square which your correspondent frequents when in London a number of Belgians abide. They sew not, neither do they spin. The men, mostly above military age, sit and smoke for the most part, while their wives gabble or do fancy work. No Red Cross work for them.

The problem of a cool smoke with a short pipe has been solved by the invention of a pipe stem with a spiral bore.

Something About Noses

If a babe's nose received proper attention from nurse and mother, there will be no ugly noses. This feature can, like clay under the hand of a sculptor, be molded into perfection.

Even in early adult life much can be done to improve the shape of the nose. Exercise great care when bathing the face or using the handkerchief to wipe the nose downward, with gentle pressure, never forgetting that the nose is tender and the skin very thin.

When the nose becomes red, equal parts of cologne and water should be applied and patted gently in till the nose is dry. This will toughen the delicate skin and help overcome redness. A remedy which is sometimes beneficial is: Twenty grains of tannic acid to one ounce of glycerin, to be applied night and morning.

BOARD OF WORKS TO DEAL WITH CATERPILLAR PEST

Will Start a Campaign With a Modest Outlay of $250---War on Wild Cherry Trees---The Personnel of the Paving Gang---Aldermanic Wants Will Be Attended To.

The caterpillar pest is to receive some attention from the Board of Works committee. Ald. Green, chairman of the committee, has been authorized to expend two hundred and fifty dollars in mitigating the evil and when this amount is expended report back to the committee. Some of the aldermen who were present at last night's meeting of the Board of Works were in favour of giving Ald. Green a free hand, leaving the amount to be expended for the work to his own discretion. This responsibility he declined to accept. He reminded the Board that there was no appropriation for such work and that the cost would altogether depend upon the manner in which the work was prosecuted. He asked the committee to name the amount that should be expended for the purpose named. After some discussion a motion was carried authorising Ald. Green and City Engineer Parsons to adopt such measures as may be necessary to lessen the caterpillar evil with an initial outlay of two hundred and fifty dollars.

Individual Effort.

Ald. Edgar contended that owners of vacant lots should be made to look after the pest so far as their own property is concerned. To this the committee agreed. Ald. Green promised to have the City Solicitor look into the matter and determine what authority the city may have in that regard. Ald. Edgar was of the opinion that extreme measures should be adopted in an effort to deal with the caterpillars. City Engineer Parsons recommended the removal of all clumps of wild cherry trees that are found within the city limits. They constitute a favourite stamping ground for caterpillars.

The Labour Question.

City Engineer Parsons reported that he had, in company with Mr. D. M. Minicola, inspected the paving gang employed by Foley and Gleason. Fifty-five men were employed altogether. Thirty of them were identified as residents of the city, twenty were regular employees of Foley and Gleason and five were thought to be non-residents. The twenty regular men of Foley and Gleason's comprise the following: Two concrete mixers, three concrete graders, three curb and gutter men and ten regular plant men, such as firemen, stone weighers, etc. The duties of the remaining two men were not clearly defined. In future men employed in connection with street paving will not be put on the payroll unless they possess a certificate signed by the City Engineer. The latter has a list of applicants. He will undertake to see that none, other than residents of the city, are employed on city work.

Concession Allowed.

Mr. T. Lane appeared before the committee with the request that he be permitted to erect a house with a nine inch wall on Huner Street inside the western boundary of the fire limits. Mayor Buller moved that the request be granted as had been the case on previous occasions. This was agreed to by the committee.

New Sidewalk Wanted.

On motion of Aldermen Stratton and Duffus the City Engineer was asked to make a report on the condition of the road and sidewalk on Murray Street east of Dickson Street. A complaint was entered by the Dickson Company as to the dangerous condition of the sidewalk which is constructed on a steep grade.

A Voice From the North.

Ald. Langford complained of the condition of George Street between McDonnel and Smith Streets.

"That is a road that you see oftener than many others," observed Ald. Green. The chairman of the Board of Works promised to have the matter looked into.

Ald. Stratton asked to have the road repaired on Simcoe Street, east of Water Street. He said that a load or two of gravel would have the desired result. This request elicited another promise from Ald. Green.

Street Paving.

Ald. Stratton also suggested that a little more speed be introduced into the work of paving and relaying the car tracks on Charlotte Street. While the work is going on the street is closed to the public, with a consequent loss to the merchants on that portion of Charlotte Street.

Ald. Green did not think there had been any unnecessary delay, but he agreed to have City Engineer Parsons look into the matter.

Local Council of Women's Column

The Matter Published in this column will be supplied by the Local Council of Women and in the interest of their work.

Montreal now has a policewoman as well as some 1200 policemen. The first woman constable was sworn in yesterday before Mr. Recorder Geoffrion. The honour of leading in this branch of feminist movement here falls to Miss Lillian Clearitine, who has been acting for some time as an officer of the Travellers' Aid under the direction of the W.C.T.U. Her work consists mainly in protecting young girls and unattended women arriving in the city, and she has been handicapped in the past by not being empowered to make arrests. This disability has now been removed.

This is a time of great sacrifices. Everywhere men and women are cheerfully giving their time their money, their health, their very lives for others. Will you not give a few pennies on the 9th of May to help get playgrounds for the children. For the children, in many cases of the men who are giving their lives for you.

Experience has forced many communities to the conclusion that playgrounds without supervision are wasteful and worse than useless. In one city in the United States four play-grounds were established at a cost of $1,000 each, but with no trained worker in charge. They were a failure. Then the Associated Charities started a playground with a trained leader, in the same city, and soon as many children were to be found on this one playground as on the city's four.

Getting games planted so that children will play them off the playground, in the streets and back yards and other available places, is one good result of the supervised play-ground. Little children are suffering from the lack of play games, and also from the want of knowledge of how to play them. They imitate the older boys, the shining lights whose names appear on the sporting pages of the newspapers instead of playing games more suitable to their age.

HON. PRESIDENT TO BE HERE

GREAT PRAISE FOR SECOND BATTALION

When They Were Inspected by the General—Pte. Heber Rogers Writes Interesting Letter Under Date of April 10th

Pte. Heber Rogers, son of Mr. R. B. Rogers, with the Second Battalion of the First Canadian Contingent, writing to his mother under date of April 10th, in part, says:

"Last Thursday we had another hike of about fifteen miles, and are now billeted near another town. This is the best billet we have struck yet. The old man and woman are very kind to us, and the man is always coming around taking an interest in what we are doing. They have not had any English here before. There is a big brick building with the house on one side and our barn on the other. We sleep in pea straw and everything around the place seems very clean. The best of it is we wash in a basin in the back kitchen.

We have a great addition to our battalion now. Three ladies are running a soup kitchen which is an automobile, and they travel around with us. They also pay for everything themselves, which amounts to a great deal. It is open at noon when they give soup and bread to the fellows, and also at five o'clock they have tea and coffee and cocoa with some biscuits. Everything is free, and the other day they were giving away soap and socks.

Yesterday we had an inspection, by the general, of every man. We were lined up in a large field for about two hours before he came. During that time a storm came up. It rained and snowed until we were nearly frozen. Then it cleared off and the general came. In his speech afterwards he had great praise for our battalion in regard to looks, and also for our work duroing the short time that we were in the trenches. Monday we have another inspection by General Smith Dorien, as we are now in the second army.

Yesterday Gordon Graham and I took a walk to the Belgian frontier, which is only about three miles away. The country around here is much better than where we were before, as there are more hills and the country is fairly rolling."

Will Publish The Milk Tests

Every Three Months--Ald. Saunders Voted Twice

The question of publishing the result of the milk tests was raised at last night's meeting of the Property Committee and, on motion of Aldermen Duffus and Weir it was resolved to recommend that the result be published every three months.

Ald. Weir thought that the average should be published, as it would give the public an opportunity of finding out the number of milkmen supplying the proper grade of milk. The minimum is 3 per cent. butter fat. The milk is tested by the Sanitary Inspector.

Ald. Green moved, in amendment, that the result of the next test be laid before the Committee, when it would be determined whether or not the result should be published.

Ald. Duffus thought that the Committee should be guided by the Sanitary Inspector.

Ald. Edgar was in favour of leaving the matter in the hands of the Inspector with the right to prosecute milkmen who were found supplying an inferior grade of milk.

Ald. Saunders voted for both the original motion and the amendment.

A Wisconsin inventor's truck with which one man can pick up and move a piano is featured by a wide roller instead of small wheels.

Local Strawberries Are Flowering Early

New Fruit Expected About Middle of May If Late Frosts Are Not Felt

Local strawberries in bloom are reported by a gardener outside the city who is beginning to look for ripened fruit about the middle of May. The flowering is exceptionally early, as will be the fruit if they come in when expected. However, gardeners are afraid of May frosts which may do considerable harm. Canadian asparagus is arriving plentifully, and grocers and fruit dealers are well supplied. Prices to the retailer are quite reasonable. The pineapple crop has begun to arrive from Porto Rico and within the next week or two Cuban pines should be received. The crop is reported fairly large and prices are at moderate figures. The stores have liberal stocks. Onions, radishes and lettuce are selling freely, at usual prices, and the early vegetables promise well.

Harry Asher Gets Seven-year Term

Was Found Guilty of Shooting Rev. J. M. Scott

TORONTO, April 29.—Harry Asher was yesterday sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary for shooting Rev. J. McPherson Scott. The judgment was read by Mr. Justice Lennox for Chancellor Sir John Boyd, who tried the case.

His Lordship made no further statement than that an appeal to the Minister of Justice on good behaviour might shorten the term.

Sure Way to Get Rid of Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

Cooler Weather Is Promised

Warm Wave Is Passing to the East —Ahead of the Average

Cooler weather is coming after today, the weatherman promises. For some time now Peterborough has been favoured with weather from the South-Western States. By to-morrow it may be blessed with weather from Canada's own North-Western Provinces. The warm wave is passing to the east. It has been a very unusual one for April.

Gardeners are taking advantage of the unusually early opening of the season and planting seeds. In Peterborough we are a week or ten days ahead of the average. The old rule of this section of Ontario was not to plant garden seeds until May 24th, and it is possible that the forehanded gardeners may not have much advantage to boast about after all if the weather conditions become normal.

RECIPE TO STOP DANDRUFF

This Home Made Mixture Stops Dandruff and Falling Hair and Aids its Growth.

To a half pint of water add:
Bay Rum . . . . . 1 oz.
Orlex Compound . . . . . a small box
Glycerine . . . . . ½ oz.

These are all simple ingredients that you can buy from any druggist at very little cost, and mix them yourself. Apply to the scalp once a day for two weeks, then once every other week until all the mixture is used. A half pint should be enough to rid the head of dandruff and kill the dandruff germs. It stops the hair from falling out, and relieves itching and scalp diseases.

Although it is not dye, it acts upon the hair roots, and will darken streaked, faded, gray hair in ten or fifteen days. It promotes the growth of the hair and makes harsh hair soft and glossy.

BALLOTS FOR THE SOLDIERS

Huge Cases Ready to be Shipped to the Front

OTTAWA, April 29.—Although no election date is announced, preperations are certainly proceeding here as if election was assured. This morning twenty-one huge cases, filled with ballots and other election paraphernalia, ready for shipment to Canada's overseas forces, to collect soldiers' votes. Twenty are addressed to the high commissioner at London, for forwarding to the paymasters of Canadian battalions at the front, and one to the commander of the Royal Canadian Regiment in Bermuda. These are not to be opened till the receipt of actual instructions as to the election date. It is pointed out here that the British Government has not yet expressed approval or the Government's scheme of balloting among the soldiers at the front.

Prescription for German Measles

Mix some Woolwich powders with tincture of iron or essence of lead, and administer in 4-7 pills. Have ready a little British army (a little goes a long way), some Brussels sprouts and French mustard. Add a little Canadian cheese, some Australian lambs and season with Indian curry. Set it on a Kitchener and keep stirring until quite hot. If this does not make the patient perspire freely, rub the best Russian Bear's grease on his chest and wrap him in Berlin wool.

P.S.—Patient must on no account take any "Peace soup" until the swelling in the head has quite disappeared. —Com.

Proposed C. P. R. Change Will Not Affect the Lindsay Mail

The Canadian Pacific Railway Co. anounce a change of service beginning on May 1st, but as yet the complete details of the change are not to hand. However, it is said that the service to Lindsay and through to Bobcaygeon will be much improved, and that the former daily morning train to 'Caygeon will be resumed, although the hour of stopover in the latter village will not be as long as formerly.

At the present time the mixed a.m. train to Lindsay, which arrives about 7 o'clock brings the morning papers from Toronto. It also carries the Peterborough a.m. papers, which are carried through to Lindsay and then taken out again on the mixed, arriving in Peterborough about 8:30 a.m. The president of the Peterborough Board of Trade has received notification from the Mail and Empire that a change of time-table, which is surmised, will go into effect on May 1st, will cut off this morning train to Peterborough, and will instead pass through to Bobcaygeon. This means the Peterborough people will not receive their papers until about noon hour, unless some other arrangement is made.

Needless to say Peterborough Board of Trade and business men will put up a holler in regard to the service.—Lindsay Warder.

SUPERVISED PLAYGROUNDS

Proving the Efficacy of Play-grounds. The efficacy of playgrounds as a preventive of minor delinquency is generally admitted. One has but to think of the natural propensity of children to play and the conclusion follows that where the opportunity is afforded for wholesome play which will engage the energies of children, the courses of malicious mischief and of worse evil are avoided. But we need concrete examples of the beneficial influence of playgrounds to arouse enthusiasm which will make them practically efficient in our own vicinity.

In Dallas, Texas, they have a cotton mill district, a residential part of the city for the mill operatives, and partaking of the same general character as similar mill-hand quarters in other cities. The tendency in that part of the city is toward slumdom. Frowsiness and negligence of family responsibilities and especially as to the supervision of children out of school or working hours are among the distinctive features of this section of the city. As a result at one time it supplied the greater percentage of delinquency which came before the Juvenile Court. This was before the days of the playground, when the children had no other place in which to amuse themselves save the streets.

Since then a play park has been established in that particular quarter of the city; and as one result, it is given out that the cotton mill district's contribution to the Juvenile Court has been reduced over 80 per cent.

This is a single, simple fact of conclusive import to the student of sociological conditions in every city; and more especially in every city where the slum district has not as yet been clearly defined and rooted as one of the characteristics of evil in municipal life. It is worth pondering, as we bear in mind that an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure.

DEATH OF BROTHER OF MR. R. J. TODD

Mr. R. J. Todd received a telegram this morning from a brother in Stouffville, informing him of the death of another brother, Mr. S. B. Todd, which occurred yesterday in Brandon, after an illness of a couple of days.

The late Mr. Todd was at one time a carriage builder in Uxbridge. Of late years he has been in the province of Manitoba and has lately been employed as collector for the Barrie Carriage Company, with his headquarters at Winnipeg.

He is survived by his widow and one darghter, both residing in Winnipeg. Four brothers and five sisters also survive.

Mr. R. J. Todd has not received any particulars of funeral arrangements.

COMMITTEE DISCUSS QUESTION OF SITE FOR SEWERAGE DISPOSAL PLANT

Some of the Aldermen Express Doubt As to the Business Acumen of Past Councils—Mayor Buller Declines to Make Public Some of the Inner Mysteries Connected With the Scheme—Matter Will Come Up Before Provincial Board of Health on Friday

The business acumen shown by past Councils was questioned at last night's meeting of the Board of Works. The discussion centered around the question of securing a site for the sewerage disposal plant which is to be constructed by the city when ever the necessary arrangements have been completed. A representation of the City Council has been invited to confer with the Provincial Board of Health on Friday, when it is hoped to secure the Board's permission to construct the plant on the site selected across the Otonabee River, opposite Lock Street. It was when Mayor Buller announced that he had invited ex-Mayor Bradburn, ex-Aldermen Johnston and Duncan to accompany the deputation to Toronto that Ald. Stratton rose to inquire why it was necessary to add to the deputation, men who had ceased for the time being, to represent the ratepayers. He believed that there were men in the present Council who were not only familiar with the proposal but were competent to carry the matter to the Provincial Board of Health. He named Aldermen Duffus, Green and Langford as men who were familiar with the project.

Occupied the Benches.

Ald. Duffus said that his experience with deputations was that the City Solicitor and possibly one or two others acted as spokesmen, while the remainder of the deputation occupied the benches.

Ald. Edgar thought that the members of the Council would benefit if they were present at the conference with the Provincial Board of Health, and were to hear the discussion.

Ald. Weir was inclined to agree with Ald. Stratton. At the same time he remembered that the right to select deputations was vested in the Mayor. As the Mayor had probably selected the three ex-councillors named, it would hardly be right to object, although he did not think it was right to include in civic deputations men who did no actually represent the people.

Ald. Green reminded the Board that the city had on previous occasions benefitted to some considerable extent by adding influential citizens to civic deputations.

Mayor Buller was of the opinion that his policy was a sane one.

Ald. Stratton: "You take the stand that we will take so and so, and to the rest of the Council will say, come on boys, if you want to, but we don't need you?"

"I am leaving that with the Committee," replied the Mayor.

Ald. Duffus—"I think we should take the strongest men, I don't care who they are."

Will Go Anyway.

Ald. McIntyre declared his intention of being present at the conference even if it were necessary to pay his own expenses. He was desirous of familiarizing himself with the work.

Ald. Stratton moved that the Council be a deputation to wait upon the Board of Health. He himself would be unable to be present owing to a counter engagement. This was seconded by Mayor Buller and carried by a unanimous vote. It was optional whether the deputation left Friday morning or the evening before, al. thought Ald. McInyre was in favour of taking the early morning train so as to save expenses.

At this juncture Ald. Evans asked if it were so that ex-Alderman Johnston was interested in some property in the vicinity of the proposed site.

Ald. Green—"I think so, but ex-Alderman Johnston is satisfied to have the plant located where it will best serve the city's interests.

The Mayor Under Fire.

It was here that Ald. Langford opened up a hitherto unexplored phase of the situation. He wanted to know what the work would cost.

Mayor Buller explained that the plans would first have to be passed before it would be possible to determine the cost of the scheme.

Ald. Edgar countered with a query as to why the site was not first selected, before proceeding with the work.

In explanation Mayor Buller said that the Council had tried on different occasions to secure an option on the property, but so far had failed.

Ald. Green—"We are, in a manner, wards of the Provincial Board of Health. We have got to do pretty much what they say."

Ald. Stratton—"It seems to me that it is a matter that could or should have ben settled before we proceeded with the work. It shows a lack of business acumen not to have selected the site and estimated the cost before this. As matters stand the site will likely have to be obtained by arbitration and at a price considerably in excess of its actual value."

Ald. Green—"I have no doubt but what we will have to pay much more than the site is worth."

A Tribute to Past Councils.

Ald. McIntyre was satisfied that the Councils in the past had done the best they knew how, but he believed that the Provincial Board of Health was playing with the Council.

City Engineer Parsons pointed out that the Provincial Board of Health would not agree to a site until the plans were completed.

Ald. Weir observed that so far as the Council had gone there was not a scrap of paper to indicate the position of the Council in respect to the matter.

Ald. Duffus forecasted the possibility of a great big expense account.

At this stage of the discussion Mayor Buller announced that he had said all that he intended to say for one evening. He could disclose other matters that would possibly contribute to the peace of mind of those who might be in doubt as to the outcome, but he feared the spotlight of publicity until after the matter had been discussed with the Provincial Board of Health."

Ald. Duffus suggested that the eye of the public be removed and the discussion continued in camera. To this the Board would not agree.

A motion to adjourn was put and carried.

INEXPENSIVE ENTERTAINMENT

War Has Not Increased the Price of Gram-o-phone Records

It is pleasing to note, in the face of steadily increasing prices of necessities and luxuries alike, that one article—the gram-a-phone record —contributing in no small measure towards the pleasure and entertainment of the people, has not increased in price since the beginning of the war.

In a statement recently issued by the Berliner Gram-o-phone Company, Limited, of Montreal, manufacturers in Canada of the famous "His Master's Voice" Victor Records, they state that in spite of the tremendous improvement in the Victor Records of today over those of former years, the methods of manufacture, the constantly increasing array of world famous artists who sing exclusively for the Victor Records, and the range of music obtainable —unequalled in any other form of musical reproduction— their prices have remained the same.

As in all lines of business, the cost of materials and labour has increased greatly, and it requires considerable fortitude and confidence in the future to maintain the prices of more prospective times. Realizing, however, that, in times like the present, music is one of the chief sources of relief and entertainment, and because the Victor Records from perhaps the greatest, and in most cases, the only medium between the people and the fine music and the great singers and musicians of the world, it was decided to continue to offer these records at the same prices always.

As is well known, Victor Records are entirely "Made in Canada" in a large and up-to-date Montreal factory by hundreds of skilled Canadian workmen. The materials are gathered here from all parts of the world where they are converted into the wonderful black discs that delight the millions. With the sole exception of the original recording of the artist's voice, which for obvious reasons must be done where the artists are to be found, everything connected with the manufacture of "His Master's Voice" Victor Records is "Made in Canada."

What's Doing in Civic Circles--Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

It was nearly ten thirty last evening when Ald. Green applied the closure of the Board of Works. A number of matters that were to have been dealt with were laid over.

A Concrete Platform.

It is proposed to construct a concrete platform where the hogs are quartered on the market; also a cement sidewalk at some suitable point to commemorate the market clerk for the loss sustained by keeping the sidewalk opposite the Empress hotel clear of vehicles.

A Supply of Ice.

Ald. McIntyre, chairman of the Property committee has been authorized to secure a supply of ice for the drinking fountains through out the city.

Cutting Down Expenses.

An effort has been made to curtail the use of wood in connection with the incinerator; so states Ald. McIntyre. A similar effort is being made as regards the number of men employed at the plant.

Telephone Extension.

Ald. McIntyre has suggested that a telephone extension be placed in the Sanitary Inspector's office. As matters stand the Inspector is obliged to depend on the telephone in the office of the Patriotic Association or the Assessor's office.

King Edward Park.

The police will be asked to keep an eye on King Edward Park and impound any cattle that are found therein. This park is located in the south end of the city near the city limits.

For the Blind.

The Finance committee have recommended the usual grant of ten dollars to the Dominion Tactile Press which makes a specialty of supplying literature to the blind. There are nine people in the city who are blind and to whom one library is supplied.

Ice Cream Vendors.

Steps have been taken to see that all persons engaged in the sale of ice cream and soft drinks pay the regular license fee of five dollars a year.

City Refuses To Be Imposed Upon

By People Who Seek to Enter Local Hospitals as Indigent Patients —The Stamp Tax

"We are not running a maternity home," remarked his Worship Mayor Buller, at yesterday's meeting of the Finance Committee when an account was received from one of the city hospitals for the care of a patient who was confined in a private ward for five weeks.

Ald. Green moved that the hospitals be notified that the city would not be responsible for the care and maintenance of patients unless approved of by the officer appointed for that purpose. Mr. F. W. Miller, the official in question, complains that doctors frequently send patients to the hospitals without first notifying him and, later, the bill comes into the city. The rule, as adopted by the Council, is that the officer must first be notified of the doctor's intention to send an indigent patient to the hospital. The only exception to this is emergency cases. Mr. Miller states that there has been no less than eight maternity cases that unsuccessfully have sought admission to the hospital as indigent patients since the first of the year.

Disclaims Liability.

Another case reported was that of a youth who resided in Smith Township for a year. He became sick and was admitted to one of the hospitals where he remained for some time. The bill was settled by the Township of Smith. For a short time he was confined in the House of Providence and is now back in the hospital. It is understood that Smith Township disclaims further liability in the matter, claiming that he is now a resident of Peterborough. The Committee decided to notify the hospital authorities that they must look to the Township of Smith for payment.

Sale of Debentures.

The city has for sale two thousand dollars worth of sewer debentures and eighteen thousand dollars' worth of waterworks debentures. At the suggestion of Ald. Green these will be advertised locally, so that local capitalists may be given a chance to take them up. Another block of forty thousand dollars worth of local improvement debentures will likely be turned over to the City Trust Commission at par.

Stamp Tax.

The Committee refused to reimburse the Tax Collector for extra expenses incurred as a result of the stamp tax. The conditions under which he is employed by the city set out that he shall pay his own postage out of the remuneration that he receives.

ORDINARY CORN CURES ARE DANGEROUS.

Because they contain acids, but Putnam's Corn Extractor is entirely vegetable in composition. It is perfectly painless, safe, and sure to cure.

WAS REFERRED TO THE CITY COUNCIL

Question of Sanitary Inspector's Residential Status Before the Property Committee

The question of whether or not Sanitary Inspector Spence, as a city official, should reside within the city limits, as suggested by the Trades and Labour Council, was discussed at last night's meeting of the Property Committee. Ald. McIntyre, Chairman of the Committee, was not in sympathy with the proposal, and he did not fail to express himself as such. Aldermen Duffus and Weir were inclined the other way. The latter suggested that the Committee recommend that the Inspector be given six months to move in.

Ald. Edgar — "I would move that the matter be given a six months' hoist. The Inspector has a little farm on the outskirts of the city, which he owns. He is not getting much salary and I don't think it is fair that he should be compelled to sell his home because he happens to live on the wrong side of the boundary line, and is not a member of the Trades and Labour Council."

A Reiteration.

Mayor Buller—"Sanitary Inspector Spence is getting a very small salary. He owns his own property outside of the city and while I would like to see all civic officials reside in the city, this is one particular case when an exception should be made."

The Mayor's suggestion to refer the matter to the next regular meeting of the City Council was unanimously accepted, with an evident expression of relief.

It was intimated that a question of retaliation was involved.

Sanitary Inspector Spence, when pressed for a statement as to this, said that he had threatened men who he knew to be members of the Trades and Labour Council, with prosecution if they did not cease trespassing on his property.

BROKE JAIL AT FENELON FALLS

Two Men Make Their Escape —Padlock Broken With a Broom

FENELON FALLS, April 29. — A sensation was created here yesterday when it was announced that Yorke and Miller, the two men who were the day before sentenced for breaking into the G. T. R. station, had succeeded in breaking from jail and making good their escape.

Yorke is an old offender, but Miller is new at the business, and it is believed that Yorke engineered the getaway scheme. Early in the morning (about 6 o'clock) Constable Jones took breakfast to the prisoners, and on his return some 20 minutes later the birds had flown. The padlock on the door, which was apparently of poor construction, had been forced and the young men made good their escape.

Constable Jones immediately organized searching parties and the surrounding vicinity was scoured, but as yet no trace of the culprits has been secured. A searching party even drove as far as Sturgeon Point but no sign of the missing men was discovered.

The jail is a small but formidable structure, and surprise has been expressed that the lock was in such a weakened condition that it could be forced open with a broom handle, as is surmised.

BANK CLEARINGS

The Bank clearings for the week ending to-day totalled $627,228, a decrease over last week of $42,922. The corresponding week last month the clearings were $335,669.

C.P.R. Officials In Peterboro'

Were Waited Upon by Members of City Council and Board of Trade

A deputation comprising members of the City Council and the Board of Trade waited upon officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The officials included Mr. A. Price, General Manager and Vice President, Montreal; Mr. M. G. Murphy, District Passenger Agent, Toronto, and Mr. C. B. Foster, Assistant Traffic Manager, Montreal; Mr. W. S. Dodd, local Station Agent, and Mr. James Skinner, local Passenger Agent, were present.

The Council was represented by His Worship Mayor Buller and Ald. Green, and the Board of Trade and other local bodies by Messrs. E. G. Patterson, W. H. Denham, T. F. Matthews, W. J. Hopwood and T. Barrie.

A Change Suggested.

The C. P. R. officials were asked to consider the needs of the city when readjusting their freight and passenger service.

In reply, it was stated that every reasonable effort would be made to meet the needs of the shippers and travelling public, and that it might be possible to arrange it so that the noon train, due in Peterborough from Toronto might arrive one hour earlier and leave one hour later in the afternoon. It was also proposed to add a new car to the equipment.

Mayor Buller enumerated some of the advantages that might be shared by both the city and the Company if, in even of the Port McNicholl line being diverted to connect with the Lake shore line, it be diverted through Peerborough.

The officials said that nothing was being contemplated until conditions become normal and that in any case Peterborough would receive due consideration.

BRIDGES BURNED

Destruction of Great British Columbia Structure Thought to Be Work of German Sympathizers

Special to the Examiner.

VANCOUVER, B.C., April 29. — German sympathizers are alleged to have fired the Granville and Connaught bridges, the main arteries of railroad traffic southward near here to-day. The great Connaught bridge will be a total loss. The wind is unfavourable for the destruction of the Granville structure, and it probably will be saved.

Together the bridges cost over a million dollars.

The incendiarism follows closely the Canadian Government's determination to intern in detention camps all citizens of countries at war with the Allies. Officials believe Germans are responsible for setting fires. Following the recent slaughter of Canadians in the Allied armies fighting in Belgium, Vancouver Germans held a big celebration at Point Grey, a suburb, Tuesday night. This determined the Government to send all allien enemies into detention camps until the war is over. Efforts to deport penniless aliens to the State of Washington have failed, owing to the watchfulness of the United States immigration officials.

A bread route established in Vancouver several months ago is now closed, and hundreds of unemployed men and starving families constitute a serious problem.

EDGAR GROSE HAS BEEN REMOVED

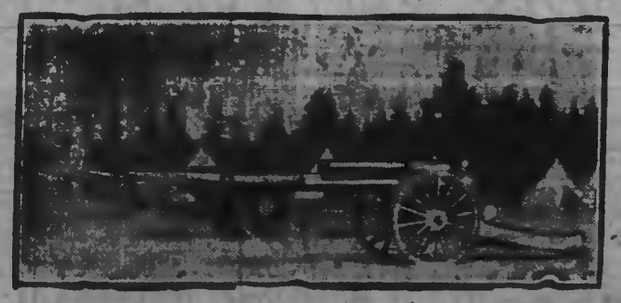
A quartette of prisoners was removed from the county gaol yesterday to the Ontario Reformatory. They were Edgar Grose, James Wilson, (alias "Sunny Jim"), Benjamin Hobson, and John Irvin. All four will probably round out their sentences at the Guelph Prison Farm. This leaves eleven in the county gaol, which should be sufficient to put in the garden and perform any other duties that may be required of them.



GUNS RECAPTURED BY CANADIANS.—This picture shows three of the four heavy 4-7 inch guns which went to France with the Canadian division, and which were taken by the Germans and later recaptured.

LIEUT. V. A. MACLEAN.—Vancouver man reported killed in action near Ypres in the recent heavy fighting in that district.

SIX LAUNCHES WERE DESTROYED

Fifteen Hundred Dollar Loss by Fire at Lindsay Garage

LINDSAY, April 29.—A disastrous fire occurred at Hall's garage, Wellington street bridge, where a large number of launches have been stored over winter and were having repairs made and their annual overhauling in preparation for the coming summer. The fire is thought to have been incendiary in its origin, and the police are working on the case. The loss is placed at about $1,500. The six launches destroyed were owned by Messrs. John Dixon, Lindsay; W. A. Lawson, Toronto; W. R. Keys, Lindsay; G. W. Hall, Lindsay; A. G. Hurst, Toronto, and W. R. Draper, Toronto.

MILKMEN WILL HAVE BIG GROUP PICTURE

The members of the Milk Dealers' Association have arranged to assemble on the market on May 15th for a group picture of their 35 outfits. This is another evidence of the reported spirit of co-operation which obtains among the milkmen as the result of their Association. The time was not so long ago when their attitude to one another was not the friendliest. But these days have apparently passed and the new spirit in their fold is said to have quietly spread among themselves and extended into charitable work. Milkmen, for instance, are said to have been supplying on their own initiative and without charge, numbers of the local poor during the past winter.

THE ALLIES ARE STEADILY ADVANCING AT DARDANELLES

In Spite of Obstacles Such as Land and Water Entanglements and Deep Pits the Allied Troops Have Secured a Firm Footing and Are Making Rapid Progress

LONDON, April 29. — The British War Office issued the following announcement last night on the Dardanelles operations:

"In the face of continual opposition, the allied troops have now established themselves across the end of the Gallipoli Peninsula, from a point northeast of Eski Hissarlik to the mouth of a stream on the opposite side.

"They have also beaten off all attacks at Aari Bair, and are steadily advancing."

"The Turks have made considerable preparations to hamper any landings. Wire entanglements under the sea, as well as on land, and deep pits with spikes at the bottom were among the obstacles overcome by the troops."

It is expected that the operations against the Dardanelles will proceed slowly, as the Turks are strongly entrenched and their wire entanglements and trenches will have to be heavily shelled before the troops can make any serious attempt to advance.

Berlin continues to send out rumors designed to discredit reports of allies' successes in the Dardanelles. It was stated yesterday that "a well-authenticated report has reached Berlin that the left wing of the allies landing force on the Gallipoli peninsula, which Gen. Liman von Sanders, the German commander of the Turkish forces, reported Tuesday as holding out, has now surrendered to the Turks.

"Halil Bey, former president of the Turkish Parliament, who is now in Berlin, received a telegram from Constantinople Tuesday night, saying that 8,000 French and British soldiers had been driven into the sea, and that 12,000 had been captured by the Turks, as a result of the attempt of the allies to land forces to attack the Dardanelles fortifications."

Berlin also reports that a wireless despatch received from Constantinople says:

"At the celebration of the Sultan's jubilee Tuesday the Minister of War announced the receipt of a telegram from the commander of the fifth army corps, Gen. Liman von Sanders Pasha, stating that the centre and right wing of the enemy had been completely defeated and that there was hope that the left wing also was beaten."

GAS CAUSED BRONCHITIS

British Physician Investigates Death Among Canadians

LONDON, April 29.—Dr. John S. Haldane, who was sent to France to observe the effect of the gases used by the Germans in opening their attack near Ypres, reports that he examined several Canadians who had been incapacitated by the gases.

"These men," he said, "were lying struggling for breath and blue in the face. On examining their blood with a spectroscope and by other means I ascertained that the blueness was not due to the presence of any abnormal pigment. There was nothing to account for the blueness and their struggles for air but one fact and that was that they were suffering from acute bronchitis, such as is caused by the inhalation of an irritant gas. Their statements were to the effect that when in the trenches they had been overwhelmed by an irritant gas produced in front of the German trenches and carried towards them by a gentle breeze.

"One of the men died shortly after our arrival. A post-mortem examination showed that death was due to acute bronchitis, and its secondary effect. There was no doubt that the bronchitis and accompanying slow asphyxiation were due to irritant gas.

"The symptoms and other facts so far ascertained point to the use by the German troops of chlorine or bromide for the purpose of asphyxiation. There also are facts pointing to the use in German shells of other irritant substances. Still, the last of these agents are not of the same brutality and barbarous character as was the gas used in the attack on the Canadians.

"The effects are not those of any of the ordinary products of combustion of explosives. On this point the symptoms described left not the slightest doubt in my mind."

Dr. John Scott Haldane is an authority of the physiology of respiration.

DREADS THE REACTION.

Archbishop of York Is Opposed to Temperance Proposals.

LONDON, April 29. — The Archbishop of York, speaking yesterday at the York, convocation expressed the opinion that if a great scheme of temperance reform were introduced during the war there would be danger of a reaction when the prohibition was removed. Then, the archbishop said would "be real and regrettable intemperance."

In the lower house of the convocation the Dean of Manchester introduced a resolution against total prohibition. The resolution which was adopted was as follows:

"Resolved, that this house, while wishing to support all such measures as may, in the opinion of the Government be necessary for the strength and safety of the nation in time of war, would look with anxiety upon the total prohibition of the sale of alcoholic drinks."

Two Convicts Escape.

FENELON FALLS, April 29.—Dago Yorke and William Miller, two prisoners, confined in the local lock-up awaiting transfer to the Central Prison, made their escape by forcing the lock of their cell shortly after six o'clock yesterday morning. It is not known whether they received any outside assistance, but it is thought probable that they did. They were convicted of entering the G.T.R. baggage-room on the night of April 26 and stealing a suitcase. Yorke was sentenced to 12 months and Miller to six months in the Central Prison.

Nansen Will Work For Peace.

LONDON, April 25. — The Hamburger Nachrichten announces that Fridtjof Nansen is on his way to New York to participate in a conference, "the object of which he will at present not discuss." The journal states that the conference is one of important men from neutral countries who desire to organize "an energetic peace propaganda and count upon the support of President Wilson."

SENTENCE IS CONFIRMED

Lonsdale to Die If the Kaiser Does Not Show Clemency

BERLIN, April 29.—The supreme military court has confirmed the sentence of death imposed Dec. 29, on William Lonsdale of Leeds, Eng., a private in the British army for attacking a German non-commissioned officer at the military prison camp at Doeberitz. The verdict of the court is subject to the approval of Emperor William and the sentence possibly will be commuted. Ronald B. Harvey, second secretary of the United States embassy, attended the session of the court.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke, the United States Minister at The Hague, and James W. Gerard, United States Ambassador to Germany, both took an interest in the case of Lonsdale at the behest of the Lord Mayor of Leeds, who sought to have the death sentence on the soldier commuted. In February it was announced that the court had commuted the sentence to 30 years' imprisonment. Later a despatch from Berlin stated that Lonsdale had obtained another appeal and that the case would be heard before the supreme military court April 27.

HINDENBURG'S STYLE.

German Tactics at Ypres Indicate That He Is There.

NORTH OF FRANCE, April 29.—Foot by foot, it is true, but after all, with considerable speed, our line is again being straightened out to its original positions north of Ypres, and the bulge caused by the savage onslaught of the two army corps, with which Von Hindenburg attempted to push apart the French and British armies operating in the district, is steadily being repaired. It seems fairly certain that Von Hindenburg is paying his long-promised visit to the western front, and this apostle of massed formations has been hurling his hordes to death with the same brutal recklessness as he displayed on the Vistula. His success has been even less than in Russia, for the allies' recovery from the first shock has been more rapid, and his original plan, which it appears was to effect a breach in our lines, may already be said to have failed.

No Peace Negotiations.

LONDON, April 29.—Answering a question in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, Neil Primrose, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, declared that the Foreign Office had no official information to confirm the recent reports that Russia had approached Austria directly or indirectly for separate terms of peace.

Germans Ignore Red Cross Flag.

PARIS, April 29.—Three hundred refugees from Poperinghe, eight miles west of Ypres, which has come under the fire of German artillery, have arrived in this city on special trains. Most of them are inmates of an orphanage and a home for the aged, conducted by Franciscan sisters.

When the bombardment of Poperinghe was begun on Sunday, the sisters declare, the institutions were not spared although they were flying the red cross flag. Three nuns were killed while superintending the removal of their charges and several of the inmates were wounded.

Reservists Called Home.

GENEVA, Switzerland, April 29.—(Via Paris.)—During the past three days, 2,000 Germans, 1,000 Italians and 1,000 Austrians, according to records made available in Geneva yesterday, left Switzerland for their respective countries. It is believed, these men are reservists and will join each fighting organization.

German Rifle Factory Bombed.

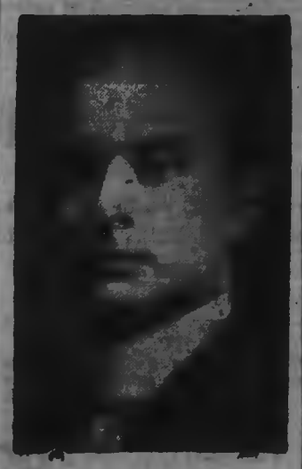
GENEVA, Switzerland, April 29.—A French airman Tuesday threw four bombs on the Mauser rifle factory at Oberndorf, near Stuttgart. Each of these missiles reached its goal, and, according to the information coming to Geneva, considerable damage was done. A quantity of rifles, together with some machinery, was destroyed.



ALBERT SEVIGNY, M.P.

Deputy Speaker of the Commons whose sister, Mme. Plamondon, sold drug supplies to the Militia Department. Mr. Sevigny gave evidence last Saturday at the enquiry.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

It has become known that a direct cable has been laid between England and Russia for Governmental purposes. Starting at Peterhead, it runs to Alexandrovsk.

Taking a quantity of nitrate of silver in mistake for medicine, it is thought, Mr. Frank Sills, of Toronto, died at his home last night before medical aid could reach him.

In a heavy electrical storm which passed over the Napanee district, the barns of Wm. O'Kara, Forest Mills, and Mr. Lawrence, Ernestown, were destroyed, with their contents.

The presence of huge bodies of cavalry horses has made all London hoarse. Doctors attribute the unusual number of colds and catarrhal affections to the prevalence of influenza among the cavalry horses.

A despatch from Geneva says the value of the German mark continues to fall and that the Swiss postal authorities have announced that after May 1 German postal orders are to be cashed at 2 per cent. discount.

King Victor Emmanuel yesterday cancelled all engagements to devote his time solely to the International situation. He has withdrawn his acceptance of an invitation to attend the Garibaldi celebration at Quarto on May 5.

Edward King a convict in the penitentiary at Kingston, has hanged himself in his cell while temporarily insane. King was sentenced at Brandon, Manitoba, in 1907, for murder and was transferred from the Stony Mountain Penitentiary to Kingston in 1908.

Germans in North Sea?

LONDON, April 29.—Capt. Scott, commanding a Norwegian steamer chartered by the Belgian Relief Commission, reports the presence in the North Sea of a German fleet, numbering no less than 68 vessels all told.

Capt. Scott, whose vessel has just come to port, reports that while crossing the North Sea he was held up by one of these German steamers. After an examination of his papers he was permitted to proceed. The German fleet was composed of vessels of all classes, from battleships to torpedo boats.

The date of Capt. Scott's encounter and just where in the North Sea he sighted this German fleet has not been announced.

CANADIANS HAVE RETIRED

They Are Now Taking a Rest on the Rear Lines

NORTHERN FRANCE, April 29. —During the last thirty-six hours the enemy attacked our lines east of the Yser Canal with redoubled violence in a last desperate effort to gain a footing on the western bank. They expended their force in vain. The allies still hold firm on the western side, and every attack was repulsed and enormous losses inflicted upon the enemy.

Appreciable progress has been made by the French north of the line and by the British in the south, in the direction of St. Julien. British troops now hold a new line of trenches north and northeast of Ypres. The Canadians, worn out by the four days and nights of unceasing struggle, have been relieved and retired to their rear lines for a much-needed rest. They retired covered with glory, but with their ranks badly thinned.

The most critical days were Saturday and Sunday. The Germans on those days brought up howitzers and heavy artillery to advanced positions. Then they threw shells of high explosives into Ypres and covered with a curtain of fire every avenue through which our reinforcements might pass. The destruction of Ypres is complete.

Hungarian People Cry For Peace And Press Echoes the Sentiment

BUDAPEST, April 29.—How absorbed the Hungarian people are in the idea of peace can be seen at a glance in the Budapest newspapers. The Nepszava, in a recent number, says:

"When they declared war they did not ask the people if they agreed; they did not care a jot if the people gave their consent or not. Now it is about time to speak of peace, and as the people want peace, those in power ought to recognize at once the wishes of the people."

The Az Est, in a leading article, is just as emphatic, and says: "The people want peace, and they want it very badly."

In fact, the whole press is beginning, feebly as yet, to sound the bugle in favour of peace. Every day, and in almost every Hungarian paper, one can find vague or pronounced allusions to the subject, and in calling for it they really do represent public opinion as well as that of men in authority. I cannot give any authority for the supposition—it is simply a conclusion derived from the various facts and circumstances—but I believe that all this peace talk is going on systematically with the knowledge and approval of the Hungarian government.

There are a dozen reasons one can bring up in support of this theory. The first and most weighty is that the Hungarian press is entirely in the hands of the government, and the pronouncedly government organs, like the one quoted above, the Az Est, are the ones who lead the campaign. If the government were displeased with these articles, or if they did not suit their purpose, these "peace longings" would not appear, at least not so systematically and persistently as they do. The other reason is that there has not been for weeks any public speech or statement on the war or on politics which did not touch on the subject of peace.

At the beginning of this peace talk, "victorious" peace, later "honourable" peace, was the phrase; now no adjective at all would do very well.

To get an idea of what kind of peace would be acceptable is impossible. I asked half a dozen men of influence, but it seems there is an impenetrable mist before the eyes of even far-seeing people on this question. "We want peace, the best peace obtainable;" that is all one can gather from them.

RUN-DOWN WOMAN

Made Strong By Our Vinol

Port Edward, N.Y.—"I was in a run-down, nervous and weak condition, so I could not do the housework for my little family of three. I had taken cod liver oil emulsions and other remedies without benefit. A friend told me about Vinol. I tried it and it soon built up my strength and made me a well woman so I now do all of my housework."—Mrs. ELMER GLIDDEN.

We guarantee Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, for all run-down, weak and debilitated conditions.

Detroit's Great Rally Was Yesterday's Feature

Tigers Drove Ten Runs Over the Plate in the Eighth Innings--Seven Straight Wins for the Chicago White Sox---Phillies Won Again.

AMERICAN.

Detroit, April 28—Going into the eighth inning of to-day's game one run behind, and up to that time having made only four hits off James, Detroit staged a terrific batting rally, two doubles, two three-baggers, and five singles, with a base on balls and an error to help, driving ten runs across the plate. The final score was Detroit 12, St. Louis 3. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| St. Louis | 1200000 00—3 | 4 | 2 |
| Detroit | 10100010x—12 | 13 | 2 |

Batteries—James, Baumgardner and Agnew; Dauss and McKee.

At Washington—Washington won a pitchers' duel from Philadelphia today, 1 to 0, by bunching a hit and a sacrifice fly with a base on balls and an error in the first inning. Philadelphia had a chance to score in the fifth, when the first two batters hit safely, but Johnson tightened, and the next three were easy outs. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Philadelphia | 000000000—0 | 7 | 2 |
| Washington | 10000000x—1 | 4 | 0 |

Batteries — Wyckoff and McAvoy, Rapp; Johnson and Ainsmith.

At Chicago — The Chicago Americans defeated Cleveland 7 to 3 to-day, winning their seventh straight game. The locals hit opportunely, with Fournier and Roth leading the attack and this coupled with their daring on the bases, gave them the game. Benz pitched in fine form and was backed with fielding bordering on the sensational, two lightning double plays being a feature. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cleveland | 100000020—3 | 8 | 2 |
| Chicago | 20004010x—7 | 9 | 1 |

Batteries — Steen, Mitchell, Harstad, Coumbe and O'Neil; Benz and Schalk.

NATIONAL

Philadelphia, April 28—Mayer kept Brooklyn's hits scattered, and did not give a base on balls or hit a batsman in to-day's game, and Philadelphia shut out Brooklyn by 3 to 0. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Brooklyn | 000000000—0 | 8 | 0 |
| Philadelphia | 20010000x—3 | 6 | 0 |

Batteries—Appleton, Ragon and McCarty; Mayer and Killifer.

At Cincinnati—Exceptionally hard hitting marked a see-saw game between Cincinnati and Chicago here, to-day, the visitors eventually winning 9 to 8. Good made five hits out of as many times at bat. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Chicago | 300402010—9 | 16 | 3 |
| Cincinnati | 410010110—8 | 16 | 1 |

Batteries — Cheney, Adams, Standridge, Vaughn and Bresnahan; Lear, Benton, Schneider and Wingo, Dooin.

At St. Louis — Butler, Carey and Wilson made home runs in to-day's game which Pittsburg won 7 to 6. The game was called in the eighth to allow Pittsburg to catch a train. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Pittsburg | 00020131—7 | 10 | 0 |
| St. Louis | 00102003—6 | 10 | 1 |

Batteries — Harmon, Cooper and Gibson; Sallee, Niehaus and Snyder.

LIEUT. G. W. BALLARD. — One of the most noted Rugby players in the Dominion, who was wounded in the Langemarck fight. He was in the Fourth Battalion.

ATHLETIC CLUBS ARE AT WORK ON PLANS

At a meeting of St. Peter's Athletic Club last night it was decided to take up baseball and lacrosse. The latter team will likely include members from the other parishes, although each parish may endeavour to develop a team. This, however, is a point to be worked out by the committees. Several members are taking up the grounds question, and it is hoped that the boys will have the work under way early in May. The Sacred Heart Church Club will likely use the Church grounds for practices, putting up a big netting as a back-

DENOMINATIONS CLASH IN CHURCH LEAGUE

The boys in the Church Basketball League had another big time in the Y gymn last night, when the Methodists, Anglicans and Baptists lined up against each other. Knox and Mark Street was the first attraction and the Presbyterian boys had things pretty much their own way, although the Mark Street boys are playing a plucky game against big odds. Lipsett, Gillespie and McIntyre all had a share in the scoring for Mark Street, while Smythe, Montgomery and Webster were the point-getters for Knox. First half ended 12-4. Final score being 22-8 in favour of Knox. Line-up :

Knox — Webster, Montgomery, Smythe, Clark, Martin.

Mark Street—Lipsett, Gillespie, McIntyre, Nellist, Hagerman.

Murray Street Baptist and All Saints' played a hard and close game, marked by lack of scoring. For the first half neither team could be accused of having its eye on the basket, although All Saints' did cage one. Many times the Anglicans displayed considerable ability in passing and combination, but the ability to cage the spheroid was lacking. In the second half the Baptists scored eight points and won 8 to 2. Line-up:

All Saints'—Blake, McLeod, LeBar, Gollop, Lundy.

Murray Street—Webb, Webb, Lewis, Pringle, Crawford.

George Street downed Charlotte Street, and the fact that they were beaten did not dull their ardour or one thing certain to the promoters and one hing certain to the promoters and followers of this league, and that is that all the basketball material is not in the senior league, for the material that is showing up in this intermediate league proves that there is a great future in this city for this best of indoor games. The George Street quintette played together like a group of veterans, and the shooting of Copp was up to anything that has been displayed all season. The Charlotte Street boys played a hard, consistent game, but the baskets failed to materialize. The first half ended 20-8, with George Street leading. In the second half there was very little scoring. Final score was 24-9. All the George Street boys got into the scoring, with Howard Copp being the shining light. Likewise on the Charlotte team, the scoring was distributed among the whole team. Line-up:

George Street —Hilson, Copp, Copp (Howard), Thorndyke, Head.

Charlotte Street — Soden, English, Thompson, Austin, Skuce.

Referee—Carson; scorer, Thackeray; time-keeper, McCarrell.

TEN VON BUELOWS IN GERMAN KILLED LISTS

The family council of the von Buelow family publishes, "in pride, gratitude and mourning," a list of 10 family members who have fallen in battle. The list includes one major general, Carl Ulrich von Buelow, shot before Liege on August 5; one major, two captains, one lieutenant commander, one first lieutenant, and four second lieutenants. There are 108 von Buelows serving in the army or navy.

Asher Gets Seven Years.

TORONTO, April 29.—In the criminal assizes yesterday, Mr. Justice Lennox sentenced Harry Asher, the young Montreal missionary, recently found guilty of shooting with intent to kill the Rev. J. McPherson Scott, to seven years in Kingston Penitentiary.

After Asher had been found guilty he was remanded to have the doctors examine him. As a result of the examination, Mr. Justice Lennox stated that his lordship, Chancelor Boyd, who tried the case was satisfied that Asher was responsible for his action. He then imposed the sentence.

The Gatling Gun.

Richard Jordan Gatling, the inventor of the gun bearing his name, was a native of Hertford county, N. C., where he was born in 1818. The Gatling gun was not used to any extent during the war between the states, a dozen or so being employed by Butler on the James river. The invention was not made fairly practical until 1865, when the gun was adopted into the United States service.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, April 28.—Wheat prices took a violent upward swing today after an early downturn. Bullish cables and active foreign demand with official reports of moisture shortage had much to do in bringing about the rebound. The close was strong, ⅝c to 1⅛c above last night. Corn gained 1¼c to 1⅛c net and oats 1⅛ to 1⅝c. In provisions the outcome varied from a shade decline to a rise of 5c.

TORONTO GRAIN MARKET.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Wheat, fall, bushel | $1 46 | to $.... |
| Goose wheat, bushel | 1 20 | 1 25 |
| Buckwheat, bushel | 0 65 | .... |
| Barley, bushel | 0 60 | .... |
| Peas, bushel | 1 25 | 1 25 |
| Oats, bushel | 0 64 | 0 65 |

TORONTO DAIRY MARKET.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Butter, creamery, lb. sq. | 0 33 | 0 35 |
| Cheese, new, large | 0 18½ | .... |
| Cheese, twins | 0 19¼ | 0 19½ |
| Eggs, new-laid | 0 21 | 0 23 |
| Honey, new, lb. | 0 13 | .... |

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

TORONTO, April 28.—Following prices were quoted on the market to-day:

Canadian western oats—No. 2, 71c; No. 3, 69c, bay ports.

Manitoba flour quotations at Toronto are: First patents, $6.20 in cotton and $6.11 in jute; strong bakers, $5.90 in cotton, $5.80 in jute.

Ontario oats—No. 2 white, 60c to 61c outside; 64c to 65c, Toronto.

Buckwheat—70c to 72c.

Bran—Manitoba, $25 to $27, in bags Toronto, and shorts, $29 to $30, Toronto; middlings, $31 to $33.

Rolled oats—$3.40 to $3.50 per bag.

Barley—Ontario, No. 2, 78c to 79c, outside.

Manitoba wheat — Bay ports, No. 1 northern, $1.65; No. 2, $1.64; No. 3, $1.62, track, Goderich; winter storage, Goderich, ½c per bushel extra.

Corn—New, No. 2 yellow, 85½c, Toronto freight, all rail; for opening of navigation, No. 2, 82¼c, c.i.f.; No. 3, 81¾c.

Ontario flour—$4.15 to $4.20, nominal, seaboard.

Peas—No. 2, $1.80.

Rye—No. 2, $1.13 to $1.14.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, April 28.—Wheat futures opened 1c to 1⅛c lower, oats ⅛c to ⅜c lower, while flax was ⅜c advanced. Later prices reacted sharply and closed at a higher level. Cash demand for wheat was good. Oats in good demand and a fair trade was done. Barley and flax unchanged.

Inspections Tuesday, 181 cars, at against 482 last year, and in sight 100 cars.

Wheat futures closed 2c to 2⅛c higher, cash 2c to 2⅛c up, oats 1⅛c higher and flax ⅜c up.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, April 28.—The export trade in wheat to-day was very quiet, the demand for all grades being still limited and the bids generally out of line. The tone of the market for oats was stronger today and prices reacted one cent per bushel in sympathy with the renewed strength in the Winnipeg option market. There is practically no demand for Canadian western oats, but there is a fair enquiry for local oats on track. Flour is firm. Demand for millfeed fair. Butter firm, Eggs steady. Cheese steady.

CATTLE MARKETS

Riverside Park has been generously offered to the City League teams to practice on Saturday afternoon. The hours allotted to the various clubs are as follows:

1.15 till 2.15—East City.

2.15 till 3.15—Classics.

3.15 till 4.15—Empire A. C.

4.15 till 5.15—Thistles.

GAMES IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOL BALL LEAGUE

QUEEN MARY SCHOOL WON.

The first game of the City School League Baseball was played Wednesday at 4.30 p.m., between Queen Mary and the Central, on the Queen Mary grounds, and resulted in favour of Queen Mary by a score of 21 to 7. The batteries for Central were Gilchrist, Green and Burgoyne; batteries for Queen Mary were Patterson and Pogue. Umpire, Frank Jobbitt.

VICTORY FOR KING EDWARD SCHOOL.

The first of the scheduled games of baseball in the School League was played yesterday afternoon at the King Edward School grounds, between the King George and King Edward teams. The King Edward School won by the score of 18—6. The battery for King Edward School was P. Taylor and F. Blondon, and for King George, Hagerman and Anderson.

SOUTH CENTRAL'S GAME.

In a game between the South Central and Queen Alexandra Schools the former won by 17 to 7. The teams wer as follows:

South Central (17)—D. Fuller, c.f.; H. Chambers, l.f.; M. Killingbeck, h.; F. Montgomery, p.; A. Stevenson, 2b.; W. Bailey, c.; F. Fuller, s.s.; H. Robertson, 1b.; H. Murdoff, r.f.

Queen Alexandra (7)—Ecobichon, Doughty, Graham, Foote, Dixon, Cameron, Wall, Kirn, Armstrong.

LACROSSE REVIVAL AT THE Y.

When the "Y" boys got out last night with their lacrosse sticks, it was like a big magnet; all the old ones passing by who had ever played the game simply couldn't stay away. They had to drop over and get the feel of the stick again. A good crowd of the boys were out and there is a lot of lacrosse instinct lying dormant that will be wakened and developed during the coming season, from last night's showing, and the "Y" should be able to put an A Class team in the field. What we want is a City League, to get all the boys going.

George Robertson and Ray Best were both out with the boys last nigh and they are going right after the developing of a fast aggregation. Next practice, Friday, at 6.30.

Denies Lord Kitchener Is Satisfied With Recruiting

LONDON, April 29.—Addressing a recruiting meeting recently, Dr. Thomas J. Macnamara, Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty, said:

"If you assume that Lord Kitchener is not only gratified but satisfied with the response to the call for volunteers you fall into a very serious error. We want more men. We want them now, so that they may be trained properly to play an effective part in the struggle."

The appointment by the government of the General Committee to deal with the question of the output of munitions is to be followed by the appointment of local committees to supervise local conditions in all manufacturing centres. These committees will have all the authority of the government behind them and will commandeer all factories capable of producing war material. Already many manufacturing firms have been informed that they must not accept further orders from private customers, but must concentrate all their energies on government work.

It is probable some of the smaller factories will be closed and their entire staffs of skilled and unskilled labour transferred to larger and better equipped plants. This is regarded as a necessary move, for the most serious matter to be faced is the shortage of labour.

Many thousands of additional men could be placed immediately if available. In Birmingham, for example, more than seventy thousand of the available male industrial population have left the city to serve with the army in one capacity or another. A large number of Belgian refugees are being employed and male labour on light machinery and in clerical work is being replaced with female labour as rapidly as possible.

Considerable criticism of the government is heard, particularly from technical journals, because so late a start was made in organizing the big manufacturing centres for the turning out of munitions.

"The authorities ought to know," writes one editor. "that the really skilled men in many factories were allowed to enlist in immense numbers, and that a considerable proportion of the men who are said to be skulking are really unskilled men and not equal to turning out what the skilled men could easily have turned out had they been retained."

Nor does the new central Munitions Committee, with Mr. David Lloyd George at its head, meet with universal approval.

"We cannot congratulate the government on its selection," says the editor of the Statist. "We were promised a very strong committee. But we fail to see that its members are qualified by training or experience to organize the country properly for carrying out in efficient manner the great conflict into which we have been forced. Instead of a committee composed of trained and highly expert business men we have representatives of the government departments and leaders of parties."

Wears 1870 Medal For First Time When He Defeats Germans

The Correspondent relates an interesting anecdote concerning General Maunoury, the Israel Putnam of the French army, who retired from the army and then left his farm to again take up active service in the present war. The General, who was wounded at Soissons, was in command of the Sixth Army, the corps which at the Battle of the Marne drove home the banking attack that broke up the general advance of the Germans and turned the tide of the German invasion.

In 1911 General Maunoury, like all the Franco-Prussian war veterans, received the medal commemorating the campaign of 1870. But he never would wear it. When, however, on September 10, at Clayo, his headquarters, he dictated to his chief of staff the text of the famous General Orders No. 5, he pinned on his blouse for the first time the humble bronze medal with its green and black ribbon.

"The success of 1914," says the Correspondent, 'authorized the souvenir of 1870."

General Orders No. 5 was the address to the Sixth Army after the Battle of the Marne, in which the General thanked it for its gallant work under conditions without parallel. It ends as follows:

"It is with lively emotion that I thank you for what you have accomplished, for I owe to you that toward which for forty-four years all my efforts and all my energies have been directed—the revenge of 1870. Thanks then to you and honour to all the soldiers of the Sixth Army."

This order erroneously was attributed at the time to General Joffre.

General Maunoury, once Military Governor of Paris, retired from active service in 1912, after a brilliant military career. He returned to his natal village of Mer, in Loir-et-Cher, and engaged in farming. On August 2 he reported for duty in Paris and was placed in charge of mobilization. On August 20 he was put in command of the Sixth Army, which was mobilized at Verdun.

His Condition Is Improving

The many friends of High County Constable Geo. Cochrane will be pleased to learn that his condition is improving. He was out for a short ride in an automobile yesterday afternoon with Chief Thompson, and expects to be able to be about soon again.

It was found that he was suffering from a fracture of his hip, which he sustained a few manths ago by falling twice on the icy road at the Hunter and George streets crossing. He evidently fractured his hip in the first fall and when attempting to get up he got another drop which reduced the fracture for a time. After resting in bed for a few days after the accident, he attempted to get up for a little exercise and the extent of the injury was then learned. He has been able to be on the verandah for a few days, but yesterday was the first time he has been out riding.

Cleaning a Gas Range.

When cleaning a gas range, make a bowl of hot, soapy water and put a tablespoonful of ammonia in it. Wash the range with this and use the same cloth to apply blacking. Each part of the burners should be washed out with ammonia water, rinsed in clear, warm water and allowed to dry thoroughly.

This treatment will keep a gas range alawys looking nice.

Use only the best paste stove blacking.

ROD AND GUN.

Rod and Gun for May, published by W. J. Taylor, Limited, Woodstock, Ont., is out with an interesting list of contests. Edward T. Martin contributes an article "Have the Pigeons Returned" dealing with the possible recurrence of the passenger pigeon, which has been pronounced extinct by as great an authority as Prof. Hornaday of New York. "A Ram of the Stormycut" is a Western story of a ram whom its pursuers regarded as a creature of the evil one. How its propensity for vanishing into thin air was finally explained and the ram secured is most entertainingly related by Ray Giddings. Other stories and the regular departments combine to make an exceptionally interesting number of this well known sportsman's magazine.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Rev. Canon Davidson arrived home last night in much improved health and entered upon his duties again today.

Miss Jessie Allen, of Millbrook, was operated on for appendicitis at St. Joseph's Hospital, Peterborough last week, and came through the ordeal with every success. She had been troubled with indications of the disease at different times during the past year and a recurrence of the pains early in the week hastened the operation, which Dr. Norman Allen, her uncle, of Toronto, performed. The ambulance came out from Peterborough to remove her to the hospital.

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, April 29.—Of a total of 172 replies now received from mayors, reeves and wardens of Ontario of all shades of politics regarding the question of putting off the Dominion elections as long as possible during the war, 150 are opposed to the elections and 20 may be interpreted as regarding the possibility of an election as an event which could be justified.

The City Will Not Alter Present Method

of Book-keeping in Order to Evade Stamp Tax—Finance Committee Unanimous

The increased expenditure to the city as a result of the stamp tax will amount to approximately $150 a year.

Ald. Stratton has had prepared a memorandum showing how the cost will be apportioned to the various departments. This he presented to the Finance Committee, which met yesterday. He expressed the opinion that the Council should make no extra effort to evade payment of the tax by paying civic employees by cheque once a month instead of semi monthly, or any other means that could be adopted. To this the Committee agreed.

The number of cheques issued by the city from January 1st to March 31st of this year, was 746, and for a corresponding period, last year, 560. It is estimated that about 4,000 cheques will be issued during the present year. This will mean about eighty dollars for war tax.

LIEUT. MATO MACDONALD, M.V.O., Commander of the Machine Gun Section of the First Battalion, First Contingent. He was killed in a gallant fight with his men to save his machine guns.

A Musk Rat Chase On Weller Street

A fur bearing animal lost its bearings yesterday afternoon, when it left the waters of the Jackson Park creek and strayed on to Weller Street. Two gentlemen residents, probably members of the "Home Guard," must have thought the big rodent was from "Germany," for they immediately gave chase, and after a few minutes of exciting dodging, finally rounded up the animal and ended its career. It was a muskrat, and had a very good coat of fur, April being one of the months in which this fur is good.

Kills Woman Who Spurned Him For Husband

CHICAGO, Ill., April 29.— North of the parallel of latitude fifty-three few letters are written. The mail service is bad for one thing, paper is scarce, and the Aurora Borealis makes poor light for authorship. So men live by the law of the tooth and nail, dig for gold and do not swamp the south-bound rural Alaskan mails with their axains.

Mrs. Gabriel Loeffler, still young and still pretty, had not heard from her husband since he went away three years ago to hunt gold in the frozen wastes, where a dog is a horse and a capable trigger finger of more value than a prayer book or a college education. At first she had looked every day for the postman, but nothing that he brought was marked from Nome and her husband's parting words began to have a real meaning to her.

"If you don't hear from me within two years," he had said, "consider yourself a free agent, because I will be dead." The two years passed and Leopold Kellner came to live at the boarding house of Mrs. Augusta Marks, where Mrs. Loeffler had a room.

They met each other every day, and Kellner made love to the woman whose status as wife or widow was in the great archives of Alaka. Kellner urged the improbability of the husband's return and questioned her right to spend more of her life waiting.

"Wait six months," said Mrs. Loeffler, "because there have been Enoch Ardens outside of a book."

Kellner passed the six months in preparing a home to receive his wife. At the end of the grace they became engaged and agreed to announce it at the birthday party of Mrs. Marks, to which they were both invited.

Saturday morning Mrs. Loeffler received a letter from the postmaster, dated from an Alaska office. The contents were just a few lines to break the three year silence and telling of victory at last, the discovery of gold, and preparations to return home.

Gabriel Loeffler ended by saying that he was coming back to share the lucky strike with his wife.

At the party in the afternoon Mrs. Loeffler called Kellner aside and showed him the letter. Kellner begged her to go away with him, to repudiate her husband and become his wife.

Mrs. Loeffler tried to explain the impossibility of the situation and told Kellner that she had no legal or moral right to marry him when she knew her husband was returning.

[illegible] at the bottom of the stairs, the letter from Alaska in her hand. She was a fair mark. Kellner raised his revolver and fired. "He'll have to come farther than Chicago to get you, dear," he said as Mrs. Loeffler dropped dead, "and now I'll join you."

Kellner put the revolver to his head. The bullet entered his right temple, penetrating the brain.

Impelled by Duty.

"I must say these are fine biscuits!" exclaimed the young husband.

"How could you say those are fine biscuits?" inquired the young wife's mother, in a private interview.

"I didn't say they were fine. I merely said I must say so."—Washington Star.

STILL HOPEFUL THAT PEACE MAY BE RESTORED

THE HAGUE, April 30.—Women in attendance at the Peace Congress were still hopeful to-day that some concrete plan would be devised that will aid in terminating the present war. Miss Fannie Andrews, of the United States, has been assigned to the task of drafting a manifesto which will embody the result of the various discussions to date.

Dr. Augspurg, one of the leaders of the Congress, declared to-day: "The German nation will only accept terms which will guarantee permanent peace and prevent any single power dominating the world." She said that the only nation that had preserved absolute neutrality in the war was Holland.

German Soldiers Use Respirators

HAVRE, France, April 30.—The official Belgian committee appointed to investigate reported violations of the laws of nations has addressed to Minister of Justice Wiart a report on the use by the Germans of asphyxiating gases. It is stated that gaseous clouds extending 300 feet into the air were carried away from the German lines by the wind. The clouds were green in colour at the base gradually shading to light yellow toward the top. Several kinds of gases appear to have been used including chlorine, the nitrous vapours of sulphurous anhydride and others the nature of which has not yet been determined.

Four methods were employed, the report states, in generating these gases. The first was to light fires in the first line of trenches and permit the wind to blow the gas formed toward the lines of the Germans' antagonists. The three other methods involves enclosing the gas in some kind of missile.

The effects of the fumes were felt a distance of half a mile. They produced a kind of stuper which lasted for three or four hours.

A German prisoner belonging to the sixteenth army corps, who was taken on April 15, stated that gas cylinders were placed along the entire front held by this corps. There was one every six feet and men especially instructed in their use were told off to see that they produced the desired effect. These men were provided with smoke helmets while all the soldiers had respirators served out to them.

Happy Swain, to little girl who is seated beside him at a tea-party—"D'ye know, Betty, that your sister Mary has promised to marry me? I hope you'll forgive me for taking her away." "Betty—"Forgive ye! That is what the pairty wis fur."

Wounded Slain In An Ambulance

Batch of Canadians Sought Out and Followed by a German Battery

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Friday, April 30.—The correspondent of the Daily Mail declares emphatically that he has never sent, and never intends to send, unproven stories of German cruelty, but he says the following is absolutely proved that "a Canadian ambulance was deliberately sought out and followed by a battery until all were killed."

"Almost for the first time," he adds, "I found in our men that feeling of bitter rancor which makes even shattered men crawl back from the hospital into battle.'

SCIENTISTS RETAIN BRITISH MEMBER.

BERLIN, via London, April 29.—The German Chemical Society discussed to-day a proposal to strike from the list of its honorary members the name of Sir William Ramsay, the British scientist, on account of his criticisms of Germany and German science.

A resolution finally was passed, against a large minority vote, postponing the matter until after the war, when an opportunity will be offered to Sir William to explain the remarks attributed to him.

FOR THE KIDNEYS

A Guaranteed Treatment. Money Back If It Fails

Kidney diseases are more prevalent than is generally supposed, and are not always recognized as such. What was at first but a slight derangement of the kidneys often results in indigestion, rheumatism, anaemia, chronic and very painful headache, neuralgia, eye weakness, and other diseases of a most aggravating type. Therefore it is highly important and absolutely necessary that the kidneys and the urinary system be kept in an active and healthy condition.

After a thorough experience with the most successful forms of kidney treatment, we are confident that the one remedy which embraces the most desirable, safe and efficacious curative qualities, so necessary to the successful treatment and positive eradication of kidney diseases in general, is Rexall Kidney Pills.

We are so positive that Rexall Kidney Pills are unexcelled, and that they will do all we claim, that we sell them with our own personal guarantee that they shall not cost the user a cent if they should fail to give entire satisfaction.

We particularly recommend Rexall Kidney Pills, for kidney ailments that resist ordinary treatment. We believe, if taken according to directions with regularity and persistency for a reasonable length of time, they will positively remove all symptoms and effect permanent relief.

Surely we could not more strongly demonstrate our faith in Rexall Kidney Pills, and our generous guarantee should convince the most sceptical that we would not dare make such a statement except we know what we are talking about. We urge you to try Rexall Kidney Pills at our risk. Price 50c. Sold in this community only at our store,—The Rexall Store.

Defeated Turks' Every Attempt Heavy Losses

ATHENS, April 30.—Reports here indicate that the occupation of the [illegible] on the side of Gallipoli Peninsula by the Allies is practically complete. The British forces on the Kum Kale side to-day defeated, with heavy losses, every attempt by the Turks to turn them back on their ships. The casualties among the Turks in killed and wounded number five thousand, and many prisoners made.

BUT FOR THE CANADIANS ENEMY WOULD HAVE BEEN BEHIND BRITISH LINES

Germans at One Time Were Barely Two Miles From Ypres ---Officers Brought Up Reinforcements on Own Initiative.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 29.—The British official 'eye-witness" in a narrative of the battle of Ypres says the Germans had prepared to attack the allied line on the 20th, but the wind, not being favourable "for their use of asphyxiating gases," they postponed it until the 22nd.

The gas, the narrative says, was distributed along the German front line in front of the French position, and the wind being from the north it was blown directly on the French. The German plan, according o the "eye-witness," was to make a sudden onslaught south-westward, which, if successful, would enable the Germans to gain crossings of the canal south of Bixschoote and place them well behind the British line and in a position to threaten Ypres.

"Allowing time for the vapours to take full effect on the troops facing them," says the "eye-witness," "the Germans charged forward over the practically unresisting enemy in their immediate front, and, penetrating through the gap thus created, pressed on silently and swiftly to the south and west. By their sudden irruption they were able to over-run and surprise a large proportion of the French troops billeted behind the front line in this area and to bring some of the French guns, as well as our own, under a hot rifle fire at close range.

"Our flank being thus exposed, the troops were ordered to retire on St. Julien, with their left flank parallel to, but to the west of the high road. The splendid resistance of these troops (the Canadians), who saved the situation, already has been mentioned by the commander-in-chief.

"Meanwhile, apparently waiting until their infantry penetrated well behind the allies' line, the Germans opened a hot artillery fire upon various tactical points to the north of Ypres the bombardment being carried out with the ordinary high explosive shells and shrapnel of various calibres and also with projectiles containing asphyxiating gas."

The "eye-witness" then tells how a battery of field artillery, which the Germans had virtually surrounded, fired upon the Germans at point-blank range, checked their rush, and did not lose a gun. The infantry meantime had withdrawn to St. Julien. Reinforcements finally were brought up officers on their own initiative to meet the Germans, who by this time were barely two miles from Ypres.

"These battalions," the narrative continues, "attacked the Germans with the bayonet, and then ensued a melee in which our men more than held their own, both sides losing heavily. One German battalion seems to have been particularly severely handled, its colonel being captured among several other prisoners.

ENEMY ATTEMPTING TO HOLD BRIDGE HEAD ON THE YSER CANAL

But Position of Germans is Desperate in Face of Allied Force---German Losses Are Enormous

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Friday, April 30.—The Rotterdam correspondent of the Daily Mail telegraphs that the German right in Belgium has been reinforced in the last two days, and they are still attempting to hold the bridge-head on the west bank of the Yser Canal in the neighbourhood of Steenstraate and Het Sas, but the positions are becoming desperate in the face of the strong allied force.

'The terrific strain is telling on the German troops,' he continues. "Many are arriving in Reuters scarcely able to walk. Hundreds of carts are bringing in the German wounded. Heaps of dead have been buried at Wyendrift, and wounded German officers have been taken to Ghent and Bruges.

"It is learned from Maastricht that the public rejoicing at Aix la Chapelle begun in the intial stages of the battle have been stopped, as enormous drafts of wounded arrived there and showed the terrible price the Germans had paid for assuming the offensive. The wounded are crowded in station waiting rooms, as all the hospitals are full. Some of the soldiers stated that they had been fighting without rest for a week, the men dropping from sheer exhaustion and suffering acutely from thirst.

MORE REINFORCEMENTS.

"The enemy continues to bring reinforcements from Germany. Trains filled with troops leave Aix la Chapelle at the same time that trains arrive with the wounded. The train service, however, is dislocated for the first time. Some of the important junction points have been attacked by the airmen of the allies, which they continued yesterday.

"An important movement of the German troops is in progress at Roulers, where the headquarters staff seems to be situated. The enemy's precautions to maintain secrecy have been redoubled in the neighbourhood of that place."

Further progress in the allied advance into territory recently gained by the Germans north of Ypres is reported in the official French statements issued to-day. The Germans are apparently on the defensive in almost the entire district, only one attack against the Belgian lines being reported.

MEANING OF THE "CALM."

The correspondent of the Daily Mail in Northern France in his despatch received last night pictures the meaning of "the comparative calm," applied to the great battle of Ypres, in the official announcement.

"When the phrase was published," he says, "there was the deafening thunder of artillery for miles behind Ypres; there was a never-ending movement to and fro of the wounded. Troops hurried here and there until a beginner would imagine himself on the edge of the field of Armageddon. Smoke rose from burning villages. All the way from Ypres to the forest of Houthoulst you could smell miles of high explosive shells, which take the place of shrapnel. Instead of dozens of aeroplanes dropping bombs, three or four only could be seen from any one place.

"Allies' Cause Is Our Cause" Says Hibernian Delegation

(By Wm. Philip Simms.)

PARIS, April 30.—Ireland's sympathy with France in the present war was voiced here to-day by a delegation of leading Irishmen, headed by T. P. O'Connor and Joseph Devlin, President of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. The delegation comprising leading members of the Irish party in the British Parliament, was received by President Poincare and Cardinal Amette, Archbishop of Paris.

Premier Viviani, Henry Franklin Bellen and Denys Cochin, members of the Chamber of Deputies, presented the delegation to the President in the Palace Elysee. Joseph Devlin read the address, which said in part: "Ireland has always considered France the greatest Celtic nation. France always has granted an asylum to exiled Irish chieftains. Ireland to-day stands by France in her great struggle against invasion by a militant nation. All Ireland joins to-day in the cry 'Vive La France." President Poincare was deeply touched by the address. The address made to Cardinal Amette was by far the strongest utterance yet made by a Catholic organization on the present war. In part it read: "The Ancient Order of Hibernians in convention assembled, resolved to offer through Cardinal Amette an expression of their profound sympathy for France in this hour of her dark trial. "The cause of the Allies is our cause. The success of the Allies will be a step forward from barbarism of militarism to a new area of progress and hope."

Another German Air Raid On The English East Coast

IPSWICH, Suffolk, April 30.—A hostile air-craft—whether a Zeppelin or an aeroplane is not known—raided Ipswich early this morning. Several bombs were dropped. One struck a house in Brookshall Road. It was an incendiary bomb and it pierced the roof and fell into the bedroom of a little girl. Some of the furniture was set afire, but the child was rescued by her father, Harry Goodwin.

The flames spread to two adjoining houses, which within an hour were almost destroyed.

Other bombs were dropped on Waterloo Road. The air craft then passed on to Whitton, where it also dropped explosives. So far as is known nobody was injured.

A Central News despatch says that a Zeppelin was seen during the night at Bury St. Edmunds, Suffolk County, where it dropped bombs and set several buildings on fire.

CANADIAN ATHLETES ON ACTIVE SERVICE

Imposing Array of Steel-muscled Youth Anxious to Come to Grips With the Huns

Canada's athletes, both amateur and professional, responded in great numbers to the call for service at the front. It was to be expected that the athletes would not be behind in taking the risks of war, but as many of them may not return and many more will win fame for their daring and endurance, it is well to run over the list of prominent ones, although the list to be complete would be much longer.

Several of the best known have fallen. Stanley Mansfield, the Montreal A.A.'s quarter-miler, was killed in action. He was the first of this prominent club to fall, although many of his clubmates are at the front.

"Nick" Carter, one of the most famous and popular lacrosse players of recent years died of meningitis at Salisbury without having a chance to try his great "boring-in" tactics on the Germans.

But there are dozens whose activities are not yet ended. Among the lacrosse stars there are Pringle of the old Capitals, Murton and Collins of the Tecumsehs. John D. Marsh of Winnipeg represents the Marathoners.

"Sport" Murton, once a student and lawyer, has been seen in action all over eastern Canada and made trips to the coast after the elusive Minto Cup with the Tecumsehs. He went with the engineers of the first contingent and was soon made a corporal. Jimmy Collins was just striking his stride as a lacrosse player when he passed up his salary and started to draw his $1.10 per day in the artillery of the second contingent. Bobby Pringle captained the Capitals of Ottawa when they won the Minto Cup in 1907 and toured England. He later starred with Con Jones' Vancouvers on the defence.

Geoffrey Taylor used to stroke the Argonaut eight at Henley and played flying wing for University of Toronto before he went to Oxford. He got to France with his Toronto chums, who included many of the Argonauts. If the Prussian Guard has any huskier men than "Jeff" they should be in training to beat Jess Willard.

Charley Gage of Hamilton is a member of the second contingent. Charley played rugby in fast company for seven years and has been heavyweight champion of Canada. He is in the artillery along with many other college athletes of lesser fame. Two famous veterans of the gridiron, Jack Williams and Eddie Phillips, are among the Ottawa sportsmen now on active service.

Just how the athletes are making good in the new game is shown by the experience of "Huster" Reid, who played nearly every position with Shaughnessy's McGill team at rugby. He joined the infantry of the second contingent as a private and in two months passed through five stages until he became full lieutenant. Another from old McGill is Eric Billington, the wonderful kicker.

"JEFF" TAYLOR

The absence of these and other stars is going to play some queer freaks with athletics in the colleges and all over the country for years. It is doubtful if Canadian yacht and rowing clubs will be able to compete to any extent with the Americans. Even such sports as curling and bowling, usually relegated to the older men, have been hit. A Fort William curler, W. J. Hueston, has been killed in action. Four members of Toronto University junior champion hockey team have enlisted. Jack Tait, the star of Canada's international relay team has donned new colors. Bobby Kerr, the former Olympic sprinter offered himself for service. McGill has lost her football captain, George Laing, and Toronto her new leader, Laddie Cassels. Mac Murray, the new captain of the Canadian rugby champions, the Argonauts, is also in the army along with several of his stars.

HAD DYSPEPSIA

So Bad Could Not Take a Drink of Water Without Suffering.

Dyspepsia is one of the most difficult diseases of the stomach there is to cure. You eat too much. Drink too much. Use too much tobacco. You make the stomach work overtime. You make it perform more than it should be called on to do. The natural result is that it is going to rebel against the amount of work put on it. It is only a matter of a short time before dyspepsia follows.

That old, forty year old remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, will cure the dyspepsia and will cure it to stay cured as we can prove by the thousands of testimonials we have received from time to time.

Miss Sarah McRae, Newfield, Ont., writes: "I write to say that I have used your Burdock Blood Bitters, and have found it the best remedy I have ever used for dyspepsia. Two years ago, I had stomach trouble so bad that I could not even take a drink of water without suffering. I took six bottles of B.B.B., and have been entirely cured, and can now eat anything without any bad after effects."

Burdock Blood Bitters is an old and well tried remedy but on account of the many substitutes we would ask you to make sure that our name appears on both the label and wrapper as this preparation is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

INDIA'S LOYALTY

Lord Bryce presided at the rooms of the Royal Society of Arts, London, when Lieutenant-Colonel A. C. Yate read a paper on "The Indian Army."

Lieutenant-Colonel Yate said at Pekin in 1900 the Germans insolently called the Indian troops "coolies." An Indian chieftain and soldier of the purest Rajput blood never forgot that word "coolie," and he and his brother Rajputs were now wiping it out on the battlefields of Europe.

Lord Bryce said some of the careers touched upon in the lecture reminded them what a magnificent training Indian experience had proved for many great British soldiers. It was Sir Arthur Wellesley's experience in India and the opportunity India gave him of displaying his great gifts that led to his being chosen at the darkest hour of England's fortunes to take command of the troops in the Peninsula in the greatest contest in which Great Britain had been engaged until the outbreak of the present war. During all these years there was ripening in the Indian army that spirit of loyalty and devotion to its leaders and among us that appreciation of the noble qualities of Indian troops, both of which had now found most remarkable illustration and display in the events of the last several months. Those events formed by far the most brilliant page in the whole long and brilliant history of the Indian army. It was impossible to conceive a more striking instance of the loyalty and attachment of the peoples, princes and troops of India to the British Empire than was displayed when that spontaneous offer which touched us all came at the outbreak of the war. Since then what deeds of brilliant valor! The Indian troops had shown themselves the worthy compeers of our own troops and the troops of our allies in courage, devotion and endurance of hardships. It was one of the redeeming accidents of a time so full of sorrow that this spirit of attachment should have been shown by the people, princes and troops of India to the British Empire and its head. We felt that that was a new tie, and perhaps the most binding of all the ties that hereafter would unite us to India, because it showed that the duties which Providence had laid upon us for India had been appreciated in India.

LIFE IS MISERABLE ON THE SUBMARINES

Commander of German Pirate Craft Tells of His Cruises—Foul Atmosphere Overpowering

Commander Claus Hansen, of the U-16, graphically described, in an interview given at Kiel to a neutral correspondent, how the German submarines carry out the "blockade" of England.

Commander Hansen explained that each submarine has a definite area to cover. He was assigned to the Channel, and told of the sinking of several vessels.

"The weather was so thick that I couldn't see far. I was compelled to submerge for hours. I came up in the vicinity of a small English ship, and ordered its crew to take to the boats. I then torpedoed her. As a number of French destroyers gave chase, I escaped by going down. The same evening opposite Havre I stopped the Dulwich, and gave ten minutes to the crew to get off in the boats. Our torpedo tore a hole under the smokestack.

"Next day we came up in front of Cherbourg, to have a look round, just as the French steamer, Ville de Lille, was coming out of harbor. Evidently believing that it was a French submarine, I suddenly come out of the water. The steamer ran up the French flag, but then started to flee regardless of our signals.

"I saw two women and two children on the deck, and, did not torpedo her with women and children aboard, so I gave chase. The Ville de Lille finally stopped, and twenty-four men, women and children clambered with alacrity into the boats.

Overpowering Sleepiness

"I sent four men aboard, placed bombs in the bottom, and sank the steamer. They found a little terrier which had been abandoned. It fought the men with its teeth, but was captured and brought along, and ever since it has been the mascot of the U-16."

Two days later he torpedoed the French Dieuzy off Dieppe, which he said was loaded with horses and artillery.

Describing the life of the submarines in the present "blockade" of England, he went on: "It is fearfully trying on the nerves. Running undersea there is a deathlike silence in the boat, the electric machinery is noiseless, and the water is a good sound medium, so that it is not unusual to hear the propeller of a ship passing over or near us.

"We steer entirely by chart and compass. As the air heats, it gets poor and, mixed with odors of oil from machinery, the atmosphere becomes fearful. An overpowering sleepiness often attacks new men, who require the utmost will power to remain awake. I have had men who did not eat for the first three days out because they did not want to lose that time from sleep.

"The stories that there is no seasickness on submarines are untrue. When there is bad weather or we are in proximity to the enemy, we remain down long, so that the air is usually bad, every man except those actually on duty is ordered to lie down and remain absolutely quiet, making no unnecessary movements, as movements cause the lungs to use more oxygen, and the oxygen must be saved just as a famishing man in a desert tries to make the last drop of water go as far as possible.

Only Obeying Orders

"As there can be no fire because fire burns oxygen, and the electric power from the accumulators is too precious to be wasted in cooking, we have to dine on cold food when cruising.

"When the crew is worn out we seek a good sleep and rest under water, the boat often rocking gently, with a movement like that of a cradle. Before ascending I always order silence for several minutes, to determine whether one can hear any propellers in the vicinity through the shell-like sides of the submarine, which acts like a sounding board."

Asked what was the greatest danger to submarines, he answered, "Just one—there is always danger of water getting in. Water is our worst enemy."

"What about the secret rendezvous that the U boats are supposed to have somewhere on the coast of England?" Commander Hansen laughed: "Let the English think so. The more their torpedoers keep hunting for that secret rendezvous the less we have to dodge."

Discussing the reports that the English intend to treat the captured U boats' crews and officers not as prisoners of war, Hansen said: "I can hardly credit that. The English are too chivalrous. They know that we but obey orders. Anyway, it wouldn't alter anything. Even if they hung those they captured we shall do our duty."

FORCING the DARDANELLES

LOOKING UP THE DARDANELLES FROM KUM KALEH

COMMODORE (THEN CAPTAIN) BAINBRIDGE, WHO MADE THE PASSAGE OF THE DARDANELLES IN 1800 DESPITE GUNS TRAINED ACROSS THE STRAITS

ADMIRAL SIR GEOFFREY THOMAS PHIPPS HORNBY, WHO SAILED PART WAY INTO THE DARDANELLES IN 1878 WHEN RUSSIA WAS AT THE GATES OF CONSTANTINOPLE.

ENTRANCE TO DARDANELLES

By Richard G. Conover.

If, in the month of dark December,
Leander, who was nightly wont
(What maid will not the tale remember?)
To cross thy stream, broad Hellespont!

If, when the wintry tempest roared,
He sped to Hero, nothing loath,
And thus of old thy current poured,
Fair Venus! how I pity both!

For me, degenerate, modern wretch,
Though in the genial month of May,
My dripping limbs I faintly stretch
And think I've done a feat to-day.

'Tis sure hard to say who fared the best;
Sad mortals, thus the gods still plague you!
He lost his labor, I my jest;
For he was drown'd, and I've the ague.
—Byron, after swimming the Dardanelles.

FORTY-SEVEN miles of dastilled waterway have been a war focus of the world for fifty centuries. The Dardanelles is the modern name of this history making strip of eddying current which separates Southeastern Europe from Asia Minor. Called the Hellespont by the ancients, it has been sailed through, steamed through and marched across on boat bridges ever since man first carried battle to his foe.

Last February the giant guns of a score of English and French dreadnoughts began belching devastation over the famous waters. The straits so often the centre of war swept cycles were again in tumult.

Pierce the Dardanelles and you can conquer Constantinople. A schoolboy strategist can see it. For five thousand years great war captains and diplomatists have made a play for the temporary use or the permanent possession of this celebrated sliver of rushing stream. Centuries before the great Emperor Constantine founded the city of his name the waterway was traversed by crude fleets to approach and attack ancient Byzantium, on the site of which the Turkish capital of to-day stands. The rich coasts of the Black Sea were also reached and ravaged through the same medium.

To balk such fleets the defenders of the invaded area sank obstructions at the narrowest part of the straits and chained barriers from shore to shore. Once the Dardanelles were chained—actually spanned—for daring to break into billows and upset the postoon transit plans of the Persians. When gunpowder came cannon were placed with scientific effectiveness to block the passage of a foe.

In short, there has been a realization through all the ages—the same as there is at the present moment—that if the forty-seven miles of the Dardanelles could not be passed through everything to the east was safe. This realization reaches beyond recorded history, well into mythology. Through the narrow Hellespont the Argonauts had to pass on their voyage in search of the Golden Fleece. From the Isles of Greece they started, crossing the god-peopled Aegean Sea and entering the mouth of the even then famous waterway. Over the same course last February the fleets of the Allies steamed, but when they neared the entrance to the Dardanelles the progress of their journey had nofurther similarity to that of their mythological predecessors.

The Argonauts rowed their fifty oared vessel into the opening of the swirling straits without opposition. The Allies had to halt far off and begin a battering down of the Turkish strongholds guarding the channel's portals. Had the Argonauts been blocked of passage, farewell to all hope of the Fleece, hanging far to the east in a grove on the shores of the Euxine. The Golden Fleece of the Allies hangs hundreds of miles nearer in the vicinity of the Golden Horn, but unless the Dardanelles be traversed it must remain out of reach.

For generations the treaties of peace made between the greater European Powers have contained provisions, remote or direct, setting forth the rights of the signers in the Dardanelles. Dog-in-the-manger-like, the Powers, lacking the effrontery to deliberately seize the pivotal passage, have, nevertheless, prevented their rivals from occupying the coveted area. This has ever been accomplished by consenting to the strengthening of the fortification of the waterway by the Turk. Hence, wherever European trouble began the Hellespont commenced to seethe.

No natural streamway on earth offers greater facilities for fortification than do the Dardanelles. From shore to shore the distance varies from three to four miles. But there is one place where there is barely a mile of water between points, and there the straits are best protected. Anciently this narrowest spot was famous as the site of Sestus in Europe and Abydos in Asia. But since modern cannon have been planted on both sides of the passage, and students have been digging about the vicinity for old-time tidings, the ancient points have been set some distance away. Artillery engineers found closer range for their guns.

On the west the Dardanelles opens into the Aegean Sea. Across its historic waters, toward the setting sun, lies Athens, the capital of Greece. To the east the Dardanelles opens into the Sea of Marmora, a body of water one hundred and seventy miles long and fifty miles wide—smaller than any of the larger lakes of the United States, though designated a sea. Once you cross the Sea of Marmora you are at the gates of Constantinople. The scheme of the Sultan, however, is to stop you at the outer gates of the watery lawn before you have a chance to get up close to the palace portico. So you see the capital of Turkey is locked up in the safe Sea of Marmora, east of the eastern opening of the Dardanelles. It was two months ago that the warships of the Allies first started to "crack" this historic safe, using the fifteen inch shells of the dreadnaught Queen Elizabeth as their most effective dynamite "blower."

Now when a battle ship intruder approaches the western opening of the Dardanelles out of the Aegean Sea he sees afar off two castles of fortresses that guard the gateway to Constantinople. On the European shore is the castle of Sedil Bahr, and on Asiatic soil is the castle of Kum Kaleh. There they loom a frowning menace to the battling "butter-in."

But these grim welcomers are not by any means the main hope—at least they have not been in the past—of the Sultan against the forcing of the straits. He has relied most upon his two crack forts, situated several miles further along the passage, where Europe and Asia are separated by not more than fifteen-hundred yards. The fort on the northwestern shore is known as Kilid-Bahr, or the Old Castle of Rumelia; that on the southeastern side is Chanak-Kalehsi or Sultanieh-Kalehsi, and was also known in the past as the Old Castle of Anatolia.

Within three weeks after the recent arrival of the fleet of the Allies at the Dardanelles the outer forts of Sedil Bahr and Kum Kaleh were reported in ruins as a consequence of the heaviest bombardment known in history. Cables said that the warships had continued their work of destruction until the straits had been "cleared" for a distance of six miles. This "clearing" must not be taken to mean that the dreadnaughts had advanced through the passage until they were in the vicinity of Chanak-Kalehsi and Kilid-Bahr—hardly so close as to call it "vicinity."

Naval experts says that no fighting contrivance ever built on a keel can withstand the fire of Chanak-Kalehsi at close range. Absolute accuracy of fire is declared to have been achieved, so that any vessel near at hand in the Dardanelles must fall a certain mark to the great defence guns. Annihilation from a long range distance must be the programme of the fleet commanders. Once the mighty works of Chanak-Kalehsi and Kilid-Bahr are crippled or destroyed the straits may be forced. This is what the naval experts say, and yet at the very moment this sentence is being read the world may learn again that some daring naval commander has braved Chanak Kalehsi and upset the sage pronouncements of the modern sea tacticians.

Still further the Dardanelles is narrowed and forty castles stand, fitted with the most up to date guns and works of defence. On the Asiatic shore lies the town of Dardanelles, spreading out from Chanak-Kalehsi or Sultanieh-Kalehsi, which is, in fact, the town name in Turkish. It is the capital of the minor province [illegible]. The military commandant [illegible] forts or rather rushes there. The [illegible] supreme control of the closely welded chain of Turkish forts stretching for miles along both coasts of the Dardanelles. There is a Turkish garrison stationed here, and near by, at Nagara in Dardanelles Bay, the site of ancient Abydos, the Turkish fleet rides at anchor.

Plainly it isn't very easy sailing or steaming to get through these forty-seven miles if the Sultan doesn't welcome you. It never has been so considered. In the past—in most instances—whenever a war ship has gotten through it has been because the Sultan has let down the wicket at the Aegean end. And between wars for many years past the guardian Turk has permitted no vessel of any description to pass Chanak-Kalehsi after dark.

Where the Dardanelles opens into the Sea of Marmora the north end of the stream passes the important town of Gallipoli, or Gallipoia, on the north, and the long known Lamsaki, or Lampsacus, on the south. If a passage from the west to the east were being forced no great harm would be encountered at these places. The Turk has figured that the enemy bent on taking Constantinople must come from the west. If that enemy passes through the forty-seven miles of the straits and Chanak-Kalehsi fails to halt him, what use for further attempt to destroy him?

Still the passage has been made in defiance of all the Sultan's rules, the Sultan's protests and the Sultan's guns. Not very often, it is true. In fact, when you come to check up there has been but one "big" instance recorded where the straits were forced. By "big" instance is meant where the ships of a first class Power "got by." No doubt little craft have many a time slipped in at the Aegean end out at the Marmora during the night. If a motorboat pilot knew the channel you can figure what a bagatelle the forty-seven mile run would be, even in the dark. Of course he would be apt to know beforehand that there are mines at the fifteen hundred yard width reaching from Chanak-Kalehsi across to Kilid-Bahr.

The one big instance of a war ship forcing the Dardanelles was in 1807, when the British Admiral Sir John Thomas Duckworth, flying his flag from the Royal George, achieved the passage. Great Britain was at war with France, and France was fiddling with Turkey. The British government knew where it stood with Napoleon, but sent Duckworth into the Mediterranean and up into the Aegean to watch what the Sultan was doing. The Admiral concluded that his billet called upon him to nose into the Sea of Marmora and the vicinity of Constantinople.

Arriving at the western opening of the Dardanelles, Duckworth steered in. He met with a warm bow de dee. Fired a few from both shores, he never faltered. On he went, tacking and sailing and dodging cannon balls. From the heights on either coast flashed the flame of the artillery, but, strange to say, the British admiral was not struck. He made the forty-seven miles without damage and sailed on it to the Sea of Marmora. There he lingered a while, watching the Turk. He would have done more than watch had it not been that Napoleon's Ambassador at Constantinople began a diplomatic flirtation with the Sultan. The Turkish ruler kept scowling with Duckworth, while all the time, at the instigation of Sebastiani, Bonaparte's representative, the Turks were strengthening and re-equipping their forts along the entire Dardanelles.

So when Admiral Duckworth started back a few weeks later he inherited all that he had missed on his reverse trip. Shot and shell smashed him and raked him every mile of the forty-seven, and when he emerged into the Aegean he was leaking badly and in great need of repairs.

How he came to escape on his east ward trip has been discussed countless times. Treachery was openly claimed at the time and the free use of English gold given as a reason why the aim of the shore guns was so poor. Naval experts of the period also ascribed it to the very limited muzzle shift of the cannon. This does not explain why Duckworth was missed going in and hit coming out.

But the British Admiral was held to merit all the praise he received for his feat in his day. He certainly dared to make the attempt, guns or no guns, and he succeeded in proving that a determined commander could go through the fortified straits theretofore deemed impassable under fire. He was the Farragut of his day, although what might have been done to him with modern guns mounted on shore is often a topic of talk with the naval chroniclers.

Another war vessel that passed Southward through the famous Dardanelles was the frigate George Washington, of the United States Navy. This was seven years before the Duckworth episode. Captain, afterward Commodore, William Bainbridge sailed the American vessel. Later, he was the renowned commander of the Constitution when that war ship beat and took the British frigate Java. There are a number of criss-cross chronicles concerning the episode, so that Bainbridge hardly can be hailed as the [illegible] first passer of the Dardanelles with a vessel flying the flag of a modern nation.

According to those historians who acclaim Bainbridge as the first naval commander to make the passage in the face of armed opposition, the feat was right gallantly performed in 1800 under the most picturesque circumstances. Bainbridge had just been promoted to captain and was sent from the United States with presents for the Dey of Algiers. These presents were given, after the custom of the period, as tribute to insure American vessels from attack by the piratical Algerians. Everybody traversing the Mediterranean paid it to escape the possible shedding of blood in addition to loss of cargo and treasure.

It is recorded by the admirers of Bainbridge that he personally was opposed to compromising with a pirate ruler, but, of course obeyed orders. After the delivery of the presents he was rather autocratically ordered by the Dey to convey an Algerian Ambassador and two hundred Turkish passengers to Constantinople. When Bainbridge demurred the Dey additionally admonished him thus:—

"You pay me tribute. By that act you become my slaves. I have, therefore, the right to order you to do as I deem proper."

"I hope I may never again be sent to Algiers with tribute," retorted Bainbridge, "unless I am authorized to deliver it from the mouth of a cannon."

But Bainbridge took the ambassador and the passengers, sailed through the Mediterranean up the Aegean Sea and finally arrived at the western mouth of the Dardanelles. It is right here that historians differ as to what followed. Those who declare that Bainbridge forced a passage through the straits say that when he arrived where Sedil Bahr and Kum Kaleh stand now that he was held up by the commanders of the forts and his passports demanded. The Turks claimed the right then, as now, to prevent the entrance of any war vessel to the narrow waterway.

It would take months to obtain passports from home, so Bainbridge, after trying in vain to convince the forts that the Sultan would be glad to receive the Dey's presents and the Dey's Ambassador, resolved to sail through anyway. He pretended to salute the forts, but under cover of the smoke of his guns was able to slip out of range before the castles knew what he was about. It was explained afterward that the shore guns could be levelled only in one direction, so that once beyond a given channel point there was no chance of the intruder being stopped.

So Bainbridge sailed on into the Sea of Marmora and anchored off Constantinople. Here again the historians differ as to what took place. Some say that the Grand Seigneur, or Sultan, received the American captain, the Algerian Ambassador and the Dey's presents with scorn and insult, so that Bainbridge weighed anchor and started back through the Dardanelles at once. He made the passage without hurt.

The other version of Bainbridge's sailings is tamer. This account says that he passed the Dardanelles without opposition, there stating his errand and proving it through the Algerian Ambassador. Upon arriving off Constantinople the Sultan was puzzled to make out exactly what sort of a war ship was in the offing, as it was the first time a [illegible] vessel flying the flag of the United States had been seen there. But Bainbridge, the story goes, was hospitably received, and upon relating the insulting language of the Dey, the Sultan provided him with a firman, or special order, rendering him and his vessel free from any detention by the Dey's Algerian vassal on the homeward voyage.

A passage of the Dardanelles stained with late history was that of Admiral Sir Geoffrey Thomas Phipps Hornby on February 13, 1878, who led a British squadron through the straits despite the protest of Turkey. But while the Sultan protested his cannon about the shores were silent, so that Hornby's trip could not be called a forcing of the passage.

The incident came at the close of the Russian-Turkish war of 1877-78. Russia had the Turk soundly whipped. First she said she would not treat for peace until she occupied Adrianople. After this city had been taken she pressed on with her victorious armies toward Constantinople, her goal for centuries. Great Britain had become aroused. The Turk might be a massacrer, but it was deemed best by the English Cabinet that he should possess the city on the Bosphorus.

Admiral Hornby was therefore ordered to steam to Constantinople in armed protest against Russia occupying the Sultan's capital. Russia, hearing of his passage of the Dardanelles, warned him off, but this not deterring him, the Russian armies advanced and took possession of a portion of the defences of Constantinople on the land side, so as to hold the city at their mercy. Hornby sent a warning in his turn, that he would use force against the Russians if they came a foot further. There they remained for many weeks, the British admiral's squadron anchored at Princess Island, thirty miles southeast of Constantinople, and the Russian armies occupying the defences of the Turkish capital. Each dared not advance for fear of precipitating a general European conflict.

While they waited thus in armed impatience the diplomats of Europe got busy. The Congress of Berlin assembled, with Bismarck president. A treaty was signed July 13, 1878. Russia got neither Adrianople nor Constantinople, although she was well salved with other territorial additions. Not until August, 1879, however, did the Russian troops begin their retirement and the British fleet sail out of the Sea of Marmora, back through the Dardanelles.

Another peaceful passage of the Dardanelles was accomplished in October, 1853, on the eve of the Crimean War. Turkey, an ally then of Great Britain and France against Russia, invited the French and English through the straits, so they might assist in the operations before Sebastopol. Sixty-two years later the fleets of France and England are at the gates of the Dardanelles, but Turkey hasn't invited them through.

The Dardanelles are as famous through myth as fact. The fable of Hero and Leander has been believed by the sentimentalists of five thousand years. It seemed too nice a story to be a lie. Leander was a handy youth of Abydos on the Asiatic side of the Hellespont. Hero was a priestess of Aphrodite on the European shore. Every night she set in the tower of her temple-dwelling at Sestus a torch, and Leander, plunging into the racing current, swam toward its light. He stayed always until dawn, when, rubbing his limbs well with oil, he swam back to Abydos. All went well during the summer and autumn, but one night in December, when half way across the raging billows, the torch of Hero was suddenly extinguished. At least it was extinguished for Leander, but in fact the high wind had compelled Hero to momentarily shield it with her robe. With no guide, Leander drowned. Hero saw his body on the shore next morning when she looked from her tower. Instantly she threw herself into the waves and shared his fate. All this happened—well, about the time of the famous siege of Troy. Maybe a short time before. Have it your own date.

Now Lord Byron, the great British poet, wrote all about this Hero and Leander affair in very fetching verse, and so convincingly that it seemed he believed the tale. It made such an impression on him that once when travelling in the vicinity of the great loss tragedy he determined to imitate Leander in his swimming feat. He already in his early manhood had [illegible] as an adventurous lover. On May 3, 1810, the "swim" was successfully made.

SKETCH SHOWING OUTFIT FOR MINE SWEEPING AND ITS OPERATION

Anniversary of the Slaying of Lincoln

NEW YORK, April 26.—J. Wilkes Booth, assassin of Abraham Lincoln, was shot and killed fifty years ago today. The President's slayer met an ignominious fate twelve days after the commission of the crime. At that moment the funeral train bearing Lincorn's body was speeding westward between Albany and Syracuse. A few hours after General Joseph E. Johnston surrendered his army to General Sherman.

Racked by pain from his broken leg, an injury he suffered when he leaped to the stage from the box in Ford's Theatre after mortally wounding the President, Booth eluded capture day after day. War Department detective sand soldiers swarmed on his trail as he made his way southward in a desperate effort to reach the Confederate lines. But, aided and accompanied by his accomplice, David Harold, and fed and sheltered by sympathizers along the route, Booth succeeded in traversing fifty miles of Maryland and Virginia swamps and thickets without detection. He even crossed and recrossed the Potomac River, which was thick with federal gunboats and patrols on the lookout for him.

Booth and Harold were trapped in a barn near Port Royal, Va., on the Happahannock River, at two o'clock on the morning of April 26, 1865. Detectives and soldiers under Colonel L. C. Baker surrounded the barn and ordered the fugitives to surrender Harold obeyed but Booth refused.

Shot by Sergeant Corbett.

At three o'clock the barn was set on fire. Booth stumbled toward the door with a revolver in his hand. As he did so Sergeant Boston Corbett, through a crevice near the door, shot the assissin in the head.

Dragged forth lying, Booth lingered for three hours, alternately losing and regaining consciousness. He was defiant to the end. His last words were, "Tell mother I died for my country."

General James R. O'Beirne, of No. 352 West 117th street, this city, special deputy in the Supreme Court, and who has been Commissioner of Charities and Commissioner of Immigration, found the clew and instituted the search that led to Booth's capture. General O'Beirne was Provost Marshal of the District of Columbia and major of the Twenty-second regiment, Veteran Reserve Corps, when Lincoln was assassinated, and he says he is the only person now living who was in the room to which the wounded President was carried. Afterward General O'Beirne was the Washington correspondent of the New York Herald.

In describing the search for Booth, General O'Beirne said:

"When I informed Vice-President Johnson that Lincoln had been shot he told me his suspicion had been aroused that night at the Kirkwood House, where he lived. In the morning I went to the hotel again, and Mr. Johnson and his negro servant said they had heard footsteps for hours in the room above them. The room, however, showed no evidence of recent occupancy, but the search of the hotel caused me to establish the plot to slay the high government officials and also Booth's identity, which until then was uncertain.

Finds Booth's Bank Book.

"In a room which had been let to George Atzerodt I found Booth's bank book, a large bowie knife, a Colt's navy revolver, and a handerchief with the initial 'H' embroidered on it. This evidence of the complicity of Both, Harold and Atzerodt, with the fact that Payne, the supposed assailant of Secretary Seward, had been a frequenter of the room, I at once laid before Mr. Stanton, Secretary of War. I also told him that Booth and Harold had got into Maryland or Virginia before our dragnet search of Washington had begun. I said I was ready to take the saddle, and was confident of taking Booth alive.

"Mr. Stanton fortnwith issued an order directing me to take up the pursuit at once, and authorizing me to call on all army and navy officers for aid. In twenty-four hours I had detectives at the gateway of lower Maryland and others on their way to join the Confederate command of Colonel Mosby.

"With six detectives and twenty-five privates and non-commissioned officers, under Lieutenant Laverty, a gallant officer, I quit the saddle, and we dashed down the Potomac on the flagship Martin to Port Tobacco, where Booth and his accomplices played poker, drank whiskey and hatched their plot.

"Going ashore, we scoured the Bryantown swamp, a noisome, pestilential, oozing morass, the home of the owl, bat and serpent, and a sink of disease and filth. After hours in this sea of slime, I stopped in a comparatively dry spot and lighted my pipe. I threw the light among dry leaves and a little blaze sprang up. As I stamped it our I saw a three-cornered hole in the ground. Booth had been there. It was his crutch mark.

"We followed that crutch mark to the river, crossed and took it up again. For miles over bog and through thicket that mark led us until my men could go no further from sheer exhaustion, after ten days of pursuit. We returned to Port Tobacco for supplies, and there met S. C. H. Beckwith, chief cipher operator on Grant's staff, who had been sent to join us. We tapped a telegraph wire and sent Mr. Stanton a message that Booth was near Port Royal. There the assasin was brought to bay the next day."

THE AMERICAN ATTITUDE

Some Canadians have appeared recently to be a little annoyed with President Wilson, a little bitter about the attitude of his country. Some Canadian newspapers have reprinted, with an unnecessary amount of scare headline, articles from obscure or ill-tempered British publications, in which the United States was accused of selfishness and baseness. Before giving utterance to expressions of this kind, Canadians should stop and think very carefully about the conditions with which President Wilson has to deal.

It is true that President Wilson has not sent the American army and navy to the defence, and the avenging, of downtrodden Belgium. Some Canadians seem inclined to make a grievance of that fact. I do not know exactly why they should. The United States was not a party to the "scrap of paper," the treaty of 1831 whereby Britain, France, Russia and the two traitorous Germanic powers bound themselves to maintain Belgian independence and neutrality. The United States has no particular business in Europe, just as the European powers have no particular business in the sphere of the Monroe Doctrine. If she entered into this war, it would be from exclusively sentimental and humanitarian reasons; and sentiment and humanity, while admirable qualities in themselves, are extremely dangerous as the sole factors in a nation's external policy. Great Britain has never made sentiment or humanity the sole motive of her actions; if she had, she would have been perpetually wading into the embroilments of the other powers of Europe and fritter ing away her usefulness and her influence in the meaningless and inconsequent fussings of a busybody.—From Beck's Weekly, Montreal.

COMFORT AND CURE FOR BABY'S SKIN TROUBLES

Dr. Chase's Ointment Cured When Baby's Body Was Covered With Distressing Eczema

If every mother could try Dr. Chase's Ointment for the chafing, skin irritation and resulting eczema which tortures so many babies, what a blessing it would be for the little ones.

This letter will give you an idea of what a wonderful work this Ointment is doing in the way of bringing comfort to children who are so unfortunate as to contract eczema. It is so easy for this trouble to develop from chafing or irritation caused by the clothing, and so difficult to get it cured, that Dr. Chase's Ointment is appreciated when once its healing qualities are known.

Mr. M. L. Duscios, Postmaster, Dugnayville, N.B., writes: "I believe it is my duty to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for eczema. My baby was seized with eczema and his face and arms were covered with this terrible disease. After trying all sorts of ointments the disease continued to spread until it covered the entire body. When the itching became bad he would scratch himself and was sometimes found in his cradle covered with blood. Hearing about Dr. Chase's Ointment I bought two boxes and before this was all used the child was cured. That was a year ago, and there has been no trace of eczema since. I recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to all who suffer from eczema as being the best treatment in the world for itching skin diseases."

Dr. Chase's Ointment is for sale by all dealers at 60 cents a box. It is a good idea to keep it at hand along with the bath soap to be used for roughness of the skin, chafing or irritation. Prevention is so much better than cure. Powders clog the pores, but Dr. Chase's Ointment cleanses the pores and thereby keeps the skin soft and smooth. Sample box free if you mention this paper. ## PRODUCED WAR FILMS

Charles Weston Describes Making of Picture Plays

Charles Weston, a well known film producer, describes as follows some of his recent experiences in making motion picture war plays:

"Producing war films is hardly a drawing-room occupation, as you will realise when I tell you about a few of the injuries I have had when trying to put realistic thrills into battle scenes. My bearing has been ruined by explosives, and I have to wear artificial ear-drums; my nose has been broken; the hair on my face has been completely scorched off by the flame of exploding gunpowder; the bone of my right leg has two silver screws in it where it was fractured; and that deep scar on my lower lip was caused by the rifle-butt of a too enthusiastic super.

"I started producing battle films the day after war broke out, for I realized that actual views of the struggle would be almost impossible to obtain, as cinema men at the front are objects of suspicion and are arrested on sight. I journeyed to the village of Irthlingborough, in North Hants, where I produce most of my war pictures. The country there, with its rolling plains, hills, and valleys, is ideal for depicting battle scenes. Also a number of iron factories are in the vicinity, from which I can obtain all the supers I require for my temporary armies. They act in their spare time and all day Sundays. I believe those supers would have worked for nothing had I asked them. They could not get into their uniforms fast enough, and they displayed such martial spirit that I trembled to think what would happen when fighting commenced. The trouble started when I began to choose several hundred actors to play the part of Germans. They all wanted to be Britishers, who would 'fight their way to victory,' for I did not need to tell the 'Germans' that their work would mainly consist of retreating at the double. The 'German' supers eventually waived their grievances when I offered them extra money. The films were a great success, for the supers 'forgot' with a will in the battle scenes, and many of them were a mass of bruises when the cameras stopped clicking. In one scene the 'Huns' had to storm a barricade set up in a village street. The din of the conflict had a very disturbing effect on the more nervous of the inhabitants, who really believed that the Germans were actually invading their town. So terrorised were they that some of the villagers barricaded their doors and windows and sat awaiting the worst!"

Gold and Silver Cannon

The Gaekwar of Baroda has a battery of artillery consisting of gold and silver guns. There are four guns, two of gold and two of silver. The gold guns were made in 1874 by an artisan of Lakha, who worked on them for five years. They weigh 400 pounds each, and except for the steel lining are of solid gold. They are mounted on gun-carriages of carved wood, overlaid with silver. In 1876, when the Gaekwar went to Bombay to meet the Prince of Wales, he took the gold guns with him to salute the Prince, and that was the only occasion on which they have been allowed to leave the State of Baroda.

German Spies

An extraordinary story is told by William Le Queux in his latest book, "German Spies in England." The author managed to secure from a German of high position a report of a secret and bellicose speech by the Kaiser, delivered as long ago as 1908. Intending to make it the basis of a book pointing out that Germany meant war, Mr. Le Queux took it to Mr. Eveleigh Nash, the publisher, who locked it in a drawer in his private writing table. Two days later, when Mr. Nash opened the drawer, he found that the precious document had been stolen! Mr. Le Queux says that German Secret Agents undoubtedly committed the theft, and he has since learned that the manuscript is now in the archives of the Secret Service in Berlin.—From Beck's Weekly, Montreal.

FEW FOLKS HAVE GREY HAIR NOW

Druggist Says Ladies Are Using Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur

Hair that loses its colour and lustre, or when it fades; turns grey, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even colour, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. Besides, it takes off dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the grey hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

VARIED CONTENTS OF SOLDIERS' "PACKS"

Small Departmental Store Carried on Fighting Man's Back—"Culture" in Germans' Knapsack

A British "Tommy's" knapsack—he invariably refers to it as his "pack," by the way—contains a larger assortment of things than most people judging by its size and general appearance, are apt to imagine.

It is his suitcase, wardrobe, and many other things combined. Besides a complete change of underclothing, including a couple of pairs of socks and a pair of "ammunition" boots, there is stowed therein a reserve pair of trousers, brushes, and a tin of blacking, a brass button-stick and brush for polishing his tunic buttons, and a hold-all containing, amongst other things, a knife, fork, spoon, razor, shaving brush and comb. There is also a spare towel and a cake of soap, a Bible and prayer-book, and his pocket ledger—known to "Tommy" as his "small book"—in which are entered up his pay and allowances, war services, decorations, wounds, etc. Therein also is stowed away his emergency ration; and a bread flannel bandage or belt, to be worn next the skin in cold, wet weather, and which is dubbed by him a "cholera belt."

Books For Germans

The German soldier's knapsack contains most of the articles mentioned above, and in addition he is burdened by the authorities with quite a little library of more or less useful books, all of which he has to produce at "kit inspection," and for the due and careful preservation of which he is held strictly accountable.

These include first of all a "Soldaten-Sprachführer," which may be best defined as a miniature German-French dictionary, specially designed for the use of soliers in the field. In it are set forth, under various headings, the French words relating to military affairs, such as scouting, outpost duty, requisitioning, sentry and patrol duties, and so on. The pages are divided into three colums, the first two being devoted to the words in French and in German, while in the third is given the pronunciation of the French words according to German phonetics.

Then there is the "Soldbuch," or wages book, corresponding to "Tommy's" pocket ledger; a book of about 150 marching songs, called "Der Gute Kamerad"; a devotional manual containing selected prayers, hymns, passages from the Bible, etc.; and a "Lehr-Zeugnis," which is a sort of trade union book, wherein is set forth his ability as a handicraftsman, where he last worked, and for whom, and so on.

Russians and Their Ikons

Like the soldiers of most other nations, the German carries in his knapsack an ordinary emergency ration, but he also carries a second one for very extraordinary occasions, and which is known as the "iron ration." This may not be eaten until he is actually starving and then only by permission of his superior officer. It is a species of compressed pemmican, very strongly spiced, and cut into small cubes the size of a chocolate drop, whih it very much resembles.

The Russian soldier's knapsack contains no books of any kind, for the very good reason that the vast majority of them cannot read, but it invariably does contain an ikon. This is usually described—outside Russia—as a "sacred picture." But this is only half the truth. The ikon is painted. It is true; but it is also stamped out in metal in bas-relief. Always, it represents some saint; and it is very, very holy, and very highly cherished. An ordinary Russian conscript would almost as soon lose his life as his ikon.

Thin Chauffeurs.

The latest disciples of the gossip of anti-fat are professional chauffeurs.

"It's scant rations for me if I want to keep my job," said one driver. "Cloak models and ballet dancers are not more careful of their figures than us fellows will have to be if the owners of automobiles keep on getting squeamish about their tires. We've got to be lightweights, every one of us. Time was when the man who wanted a chauffeur hired the chap who knew best how to manage a machine, no matter how much he weighed, but lately somebody has been giving the fat chauffeur a black eye by figuring out that his extra fifty pounds or so is a terrible wear and tear on the automobile. That has scared the owner of the car. There's no use, he argues, in adding to an automobile's unavoidable hardships, consequently only chauffeurs who are regular sylphs stand much of a show."

Self-Made.

"Man is fearfully and wonderfully made."

"Yes, and woman is fearfully and wonderfully made up."

SOFT NOSE IS BEST TO PIERCE HARD STEEL

Shrapnel Shell's Are Times to Explode —Why Greatest Guns Are Quickly Discarded

The artillery projectiles in use in the war may be broadly divided into two general classes—those to be used against armor and those to be used against bodies of men in the field. The armor piercing shell is designed to carry through the armor sheet and explode in the interior of the fortification or ship. The projectiles of the second class are broken up automatically by the action of time fuses exploding the disruptive charge within, covering the area about with flying bullets and shell splinters.

In the ever-continuing contest between the armor makers and the shell makers the armor builders at one time gained what appeared to be a decisive victory. They achieved a composition which seemed able to resist the impact of any shell. Then a curious discovery was made. It was found that a shell capped or fitted with a nose of soft metal over the hardened steel of the body of the projectile penetrated the hardest armor readily. Hence practically all armor piercing projectiles carry a cap of mild steel.

To understand this action of the soft capped shell it is necessary to put aside the ordinary conception of the qualities of steel. The soft cap under the tremendous shock of impact against the hard faced armor becomes relatively like a dab of mud thrown against a wall. This soft cap affords a sort of anchorage and support for the shell proper and under the pressure produced might almost be called a lubricant as well. The principle involved is not unlike that which enables one to drive a pin through a plank at a single blow, if the pin be first pushed through a cork.

The armor piercing shell is now generally made of forged steel and is carefully machined to dimension. Some cast steel shells are in use. The old style cast iron shell is futile against modern armor. It breaks up like a cylinder of glass.

Shrapnel shells, designed for service against forts and entrenched troops, depend for their effectiveness on the bursting charge of gun cotton or other explosive and lead bullets carried within the body of the shell. The point of explosion is determined by adjustment of the "time ring," a complicated little mechanism carried on the point of the shell. The shrapnel shell may be exploded at any point from the muzzle of the gun to its extreme range.

Every efficient steel projectile carries a copper ring near the base which is driven into the rifle grooves of the cannon and effects the double purpose of giving the required rotary motion imparted by the rifles and holding the expanding gases of the firing charge behind the projectile.

The terrific wear on the gun resulting from the high pressure of the burning powder charge and the velocity of the projectile travelling through the rifle barrel makes the life of the weapon short. In some of the big guns drops of melted steel can be seen dripping from the "lands" of the rifling after the piece is fired.

It is said that the fifteen-inch guns of the Queen Elizabeth, the big British warship used against the forts of the Dardanelles, are good for only 100 rounds.

LAUGHING AT SWORD CUTS

Experiences of a Famous General—Bullet Wound Causes Greatest Pain

Of particular interest is the confession made in "The Life of General Sir Harry N. D. Prendergast," concerning a soldier's feelings on being wounded.

"I have often been asked," to quote the words of the General, "'How do you feel when you are wounded?' Some people expect you to say that the excitement of action is such that you don't feel your wounds till afterwards. A wound in action is like any other wound; the severity of it in a measure depends upon its locality. A poke in the ribs with a finger does not hurt much, but a poke in the eye is a different matter.

"A man who is shot is generally more frightened than a man who is cut; that is, the nerves are more affected by the shock. I have seen brave men cry about bullet wounds, and others laugh at sword cuts probably quite as severe. When I was shot in the body at Mundisore, I felt the same sort of sensation as if a man had hit me hard with a stick. It was not very painful, but the wound was close to the heart, and I was very anxious to know whether it would kill me."

If only one shilling's worth of food were saved weekly in every home in the British Isles food to the value of twenty-six millions sterling would be saved in the year.

OPEN NOSTRILS! END A COLD OR CATARRH

How To Get Relief When Head and Nose are Stuffed Up.

Count fifty! Your cold in head or catarrh disappears. Your clogged nostrils will open, the air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more snuffing, hawking, mucous discharge, dryness or headache; no struggling for breath at night.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist and apply a little of this fragrant antiseptic cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothing and healing the swollen or inflamed mucous membrane, giving you instant relief. Head colds and catarrh yield like magic. Don't stay stuffed-up and miserable. Relief is sure.

COULD NOT GO TEN STEPS FOR THE PAIN IN HIS KIDNEYS.

When you get a pain in the back you may rest assured that it comes from derangement of the kidneys, for were there not something wrong with the kidneys the back should be strong and well.

Doan's Kidney Pills regulate the kidneys, and there is no further excuse for any kidney trouble to exist. What more needs to be said? While Doan's Kidney Pills are not a "balm for every ill that flesh is heir to," they are a positive, never-failing remedy for every disease that has its inception in the improper action in those delicate little filters of the blood, the kidneys.

Mr. Adelard Cleroux, Eganville, Ont., writes: "I was troubled with my kidneys for four years. They were so bad, at times, I could not go ten steps for the pain they caused me. My doctor could not do me any good. A friend advised me to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I bought five boxes, and now I have been cured for over three years. I will recommend them to whoever may be suffering from kidney trouble."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box; 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Mr. Over, a former Canadian but now a resident of Providence, R.I., is the moving spirit in a British Relief Society in Rhode Island. A large proportion of the population of Rhode Island are from Lancashire and Norfolkshire, England, and there are also a great many French-Canadians and the response to the call for help has been splendid. The sum of $10,000 in cash was collected and thousands of socks, scarfs and other comforts for the British soldiers have been sent to the front.

A Russian's Fish Story

A wounded officer who arrived at Petrograd from the front recounted an amusing instance of the benefits of teetotalism. The commander of a company ordered 800 casks of spirit found in a captured German village to be poured into a fish pond. The fish became intoxicated and floated to the surface, where they fell an easy prey to the Russian soldiers. The supply lasted some days.

THE MASTER KEY

By John Fleming Wilson

By special arrangement for this paper a photo-drama corresponding to the installments of "The Master Key" may now be seen at the leading moving picture theatres. By arrangement made with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company it is not only possible to read "The Master Key" in this paper, but also afterward to see moving pictures of our story.

CHAPTER V.

The Night Rider.

THE light in the bungalow on the hill across the valley winked as some one passed beneath it and the window.

"I can see clearly enough," said Wilkerson, "that there is a girl mixed up in this affair. Tom Gallon never walked like that."

He rode slowly down the steep hill till he reached the pumping engine. Bill Tubbs, the bulky, sodden faced engineer, came to the doorway.

"Is this 'The Master Key?'" demanded Wilkerson.

"It certainly is," was the response.

"And—old Tom Gallon runs it?"

Wilkerson pulled out a flask, divining Bill Tubbs' ruling vice, and the engineer, after a long drink, wiped his mouth with the back of his oily hands.

"So you are looking for Thomas Gallon, are you? Well, he owns this mine, but it's mostly run by a young girl there in that bungalow on the hill. You see, Tom ain't up to what he used to be. The ore is getting worse every day and the old man's sick up there in his house."

"I'm going up to see him now," said Wilkerson. He rode on a few yards and surveyed the snug houses, stamp mill and all the apparatus of the growing mine and concluded, "So this is what he wanted for himself!"

The man he was seeking lay propped up in bed. To Ruth he gave everything—silks and down and all the soft things of this life. Himself he still slept on a hard cot with a straw pillow under his head—that is, he had slept. It seemed to him that sleep had forever fled, and he was now looking up into Ruth's face almost pleadingly, trying to keep his grim old lips from asking sympathy. There was reason in his mind that he should accept no tender ministration from the lovely girl who stood beside him. His sacrifice must be complete; so when his daughter bent over him and asked him if he felt all right he mustered a smile.

"There's nothing the matter with me, Ruth," he was saying, and his glance sought that of John Dorr, who stood at the foot of the bed. The eyes of the two men met, and Dorr imperceptibly nodded his head in token that he would not tell. Not that he yet knew the secret of "The Master Key," but he recognized the fact that sooner or later he was to know.

Ruth stooped over and said:

"Papa, I don't believe you do feel well. I'm going to make you something hot to drink. I'll bring you a toddy." And she went into the kitchen and shut the door.

When she was gone John nodded a pleasant "Good night," and also left.

Then old Thomas Gallon rose and went to his worn desk and got his well thumbed diary.

"I am haunted," he wrote slowly, "always haunted. Am I to die without knowing whether Wilkerson is alive and that Ruth is safe?"

At that moment he glanced up and thought he saw the sinister face of his former partner at the window. By the strongest effort of will he managed to control himself and went on writing:

"Wilkerson still alive by night! When will he come out into the day? He shall never have the key that would unlock the secret to my little girl's happiness. I will trust John."

Fancy to yourself scenes that must have fled like swift films before the old man's eyes as he put the diary away. The desert and its mortal thirst; Wilkerson, ever drinking greedily of precious water; gold; murder; his escape with the plans, their loss in the chest when the vessel went down in a caldron of flame; the image of his dying wife; the picture of the baby he had stolen from her child hands—Ruth, for whom he had suffered. He bowed his head on his folded arms.

Such is the bitterness that the night brings upon those who are alone.

When Ruth came in with the steaming glass of toddy she quietly set the glass down and went out on the porch to look at the light across the gulch which marked John Dorr's window. Youth was calling to youth.

It was no apparition that Gallon had seen at the window this time. It was really Wilkerson, who, after one satisfied glance, rode swiftly away.

It was midnight when he rapped at the door of the Valle Vista railroad station and called the sleepy agent.

"I want to get a telegram through right away," he said brusquely. "There is an extra dollar in your pocket if you can rush it."

The slender boy who represented the Rocky Mountain Southern railroad silently led the way in, turned up the wick of the lamp and shoved blanks and pencil across the counter.

"You look half asleep to me," Wilkerson growled as he picked up the pencil.

The boy scanned the stranger quietly and opened the drawer of his telegraph desk and faced his visitor again. Wilkerson caught the glint of the steel barrel of a revolver in that drawer.

"You must have some money in the safe," he snarled.

The boy looked at him with steely blue eyes and stated in a perfectly matter of fact tone, "I merely wanted to show you that I am awake." Their glances met. It was Wilkerson's eyes that fell.

He grasped the pencil and wrote on the yellow blank:

Valle Vista, Cal., March 11.
Jean Darnell, Astor House, New York City, N. Y.:
Have found Gallon at last. Address "Master Key" mine tomorrow.
WILKERSON.

He shoved the paper across to the operator and said roughly: "Now, earn that extra dollar!" He banged two silver coins on the counter.

The operator scanned the message, took another look at his customer and shoved one of the coins back.

"Still partners in 'The Master Key.'"

"The charge to New York is $1," he said mildly.

Wilkerson scowled. "Well, rush that anyway!" He strode out of the little office and mounted his horse. The weary animal tried to turn in toward its accustomed corral, but its rider reined it sharply back into the road toward "The Master Key" mine.

"I think Gallon will recognize me," he muttered to himself.

Tom Kane, who since the beginning of the camp had been the only hunchback cook, sounded his triangle.

Immediately poured out from the quarters of the unmarried men a stream of miners. As he had done for many years, Thomas Gallon went to the window to watch this morning ceremony. He saw that the men greeted John Dorr respectfully, yet genially.

"It was a lucky day when John Dorr came," he muttered to himself. Then his eye caught the figure of a horseman riding leisurely down the street, apparently careless of the scowls from the men against whom he brushed roughly.

The old man rubbed his eyes feebly and looked again. Yes, it was true. He could never mistake that figure or that saturnine visage. God! Why had his bullet not gone through that face? He reached for his gun with somewhat of the vigor of youth; he was safe now. One shot out of that window and that figure that had haunted him for years would tumble and fall and forever disappear from his life. He could do it.

He put the gun down quietly and dropped his chin on his breast. He realized that his years of struggle had broken down the indomitable spirit of his youth and his pride. He was an old man; he could not keep Wilkerson from coming back.

Harry Wilkerson saw that face at the window, and his smile hardened. He thought he would take Gallon by surprise possibly, but before he rapped on the redwood door Gallon had had time to clutch the key—"The Master Key" to the riches in San Jacinto mine—and hurriedly thrust it into a drawer in the desk and shut it from sight.

As the door swung open the two men looked at each other. Then the younger man said softly, "Pardner!"

"Pardner!" said Gallon, as if incredulous. He called to his aid all his frail physical strength to face the final catastrophe.

"Still partners," said Wilkerson, stepping on in and closing the door; "still partners in 'The Master Key!'"

Involuntarily Gallon clutched at his throat, where that golden key hung so long. Could he live to fight this thing through? The agony in his chest was unbearable. "What do you want?" he asked hoarsely.

Wilkerson flung his riding quirt on the table and pulled off his gantlets. "Well," he drawled, "partner, I guess there are several things I want." He fixed his dark eyes on the old man. "And there's one thing I'm going to have, and that's my share of 'The Master Key.'"

"Your share?" parried Gallon.

"My share!" said Wilkerson, realizing that he controlled the situation. "I have returned for my just due!

"Now, listen, partner, I am going to stand no nonsense."

"What have you been doing all these years?" the old man asked dully. "Why haven't you been here before?"

"None of your business," snarled Wilkerson. "All I've got to say is that I managed to get to New York. Now I'm back after finding out that you made a strike, the find you made when we were partners. How did you get back here?"

Gallon looked at his enemy with the simplicity of an old man telling a proved truth. "They were all my friends," he said.

"Friends!" said Wilkerson in a suddenly changed voice, and, thrusting his contorted face close to Gallon's, "I don't care about your friends, but you better care about the enemy you made."

For one instant the mine owner's face grew stern and pitiless. But he heard a step on the outside porch, and his face softened.

"My God, Harry; I did it for the girl!"

WHERE THE CANADIANS STOOD THEIR GROUND.—The shaded portion of map shows how the Canadians stood their ground and saved the day for the Allies at Langemarck though losing many men. The shaded portion indicates territory from which the French were driven. Advancing from Bixschoote the Germans first captured Steenstraate and Het Sas on the east side of the canal and then the bridge head beyond which they advanced to Liserne, which they captured by storm [illegible] after their initial success near Langemarck. The Canadians by their gallant stand prevented further damage to the Allied lines.

The evil soul of Wilkerson flared behind those cold eyes of his, and for the first time in his life he told the truth of his inmost heart. "And I must have my share of 'The Master Key' to buy a woman."

"What woman?"

Wilkerson leaned forward, and his fine hissed hate as he returned: "Do you remember that woman in Valle Vista five years ago—that woman you thought your little daughter too good to speak to? It was you who drove her out of camp, and now"—he smiled fatuitously—"she's rich and in New York, and she hates you!"

"I can't do it!"

Gallon bowed his head.

"What is it you want, Harry?" he whispered huskily.

The other man pulled a paper out of his pocket and threw it on the table. "There's a contract for you to sign."

At this moment the door opened, and Ruth entered. She stared a moment at the visitor and then looked anxiously at her father, who said:

"This is an old partner of mine, Ruthy—Harry Wilkerson."

Ruth shyly looked at the tall stranger and then shook hands with him. He held her gentle fingers a second too long. Her face flushed, and she retired without a backward glance.

Without paying any more attention to the old man, who had now subsided into a chair by the table, Wilkerson walked to the window and watched the slim, girlish figure of the young girl tripping down the hill. Then he swung on the old man harshly: "Well, I need a job. You need a new superintendent, don't you? I guess I'll take the place."

He stepped quickly to the window once more. This time he saw Ruth, with Tom Kane, the old cook, and another, in front of the cook house.

"Come here, Tom. Who is that talking to that girl of yours?" he said.

Gallon got up heavily from his chair and walked over to the window, and he could not repress an expression of relief. "That's the mining engineer of 'The Master Key,' John Dorr!"

With a quick swing Wilkerson was back, leaning over the table. He picked up the paper. "Sign here!" he said insolently.

Gallon made a last faint protest: "I can't do it!"

Wilkerson picked up a pen, dipped it and put it in the old man's hand. "Sign!"

Just as the last letter of that signature, which had so long stood for respectability, was blotted at the foot of the paper Ruth entered.

"Your father has just made me superintendent of this mine. I'm his old partner, you know!"

Ruth looked at her father with consternation. "Why — why — I thought John"—

Thomas Gallon looked up and wiped his lips. "Yes," he said dully, "I have made my old—my old—partner superintendent of 'The Master Key.'"

"I expect we'll see a good deal of each other from now on," Wilkerson said silkily, and with those slim, white fingers of his he reached out and pinched Ruth's cheek.

Ruth did not draw back. She clinched her firm little hand and Wilkerson received a blow in the mouth that made him stagger back.

At the moment that he received that stinging blow he heard a movement to one side of him, and, with the old instinctive fear of Thomas Gallon, he drew away back with his hand on the gun at his hip. He met the flaring eyes of the old man, who had risen from his seat, and understood that until life left that decrepit frame its mastering passion—the passion which he could not hope to master—would be love for the girl whom he had just insulted.

He made a daring apology, the apology of the coward and the liar. "I beg your pardon, Ruth, but you used to sit on my knee when you were a little ——"

She merely glanced at him and went out of the bungalow. She did not see her father rise to his full height and straighten his bent shoulders to say, "I killed you once for her sake, and, d—n you, I'll kill you again, old as I am!"

"Come on," Wilkerson said roughly, "don't get excited. Now take me down and introduce me to the boys."

Gallon sighed heavily as he obeyed and took him to where John Dorr was now starting his day's work.

"John," he said heavily, "this is Harry Wilkerson, the new superintendent of the mine. He used to be my partner. It won't interfere with your work any." He paused for breath. "In fact, it will take a lot of extra details off your shoulders."

John looked at Wilkerson. His heart was filled with bitterness, but he simply said, "All right, Mr. Gallon," and left.

"Well," said Wilkerson, "I'll take charge right away." He picked up a telegraph blank and sat down at the desk with a new assurance. As if he had been dismissed by his superior, Thomas Gallon stepped feebly away.

When he was gone Wilkerson wrote rapidly:

"Master Key Mine," via Silent Valley, March 12, 12—
Jean Darnell, Astor House, New York City, N. Y.:
I have just been appointed superintendent of this mine; tell George; letter follows. HARRY.

He stared down at his own signature with a strange feeling that it was new—letters instead of figures! He winced as he seemed to hear her say: "I'll never marry you until you are rich. Get the money and you shall have Jean Darnell."

The new superintendent gritted his teeth, folded up the telegram and called roughly to a boy lounging outside on the porch:

"Here, take this to the telegraph station, and be quick about it!" Then he addressed himself to an examination of the reports and time sheets and various papers that explained the working of the mine. His soft, white fingers caressed receipts that spoke of gold extracted from the earth.

The story of The Master Key will appear each Friday and Saturday in the Evening Examiner, and will be shown in Photo Play at the Red Mill Theatre on Monday and Tuesday of each week.

Defining a Gentleman.

The true gentleman is the man whose conduct proceeds from good will and an acute sense of propriety and whose self control is equal to all emergencies; who does not make the poor man conscious of his poverty, the obscure man of his obscurity or any man of his inferiority or deformity; who is himself humbled if necessity compels him to humble another; who does not flatter wealth, cringe before power or boast of his own possessions or achievements; who speaks with frankness, but always with sincerity and sympathy, and whose deed follows his word; who thinks of the rights and feelings of others rather than of his own; who appears well in any company and who is at home what he seems to be abroad—a man with whom honor is sacred and virtue safe.—Dr. Wayland.

Notes Not Elaborate.

The bishop of St. Albans wrote that on a certain occasion he heard Bishop Wilberforce describe with such singular eloquence and power the effect on the soul of the clearing away of intellectual doubts that he begged to be shown the manuscript from which his friend had been preaching, as he wished to copy certain portions of the sermon.

Wilberforce handed him the document, turned to the page which contained the passage spoken of by the bishop and showed him a sheet of paper inscribed with the single word—fog.

Story of a Very Little Girl Who Went to School.

A VENTURESOME JOURNEY.

Stole Away From Home When Her Mother Was Not Looking—Games and Information For Small People—A New Mystery Trick.

The scholars in a school in Bronx borough, a part of New York city, were delighted not long ago when a little visitor entered the classroom unannounced. She walked right into the room and took a seat before the surprised teacher could say a word. She informed the teacher that she wanted to be a scholar. The little miss was in a few minutes Ernestine's mother appeared and took her home. It appears that Ernestine has been anxious to go to school, the sight of her older playmates on their way exciting her curiosity. So on the day in question she slipped out of her house, equipped with a bag and mother's umbrella, and made her first trip to school. As soon as she was missed her mother hurried to the schoolhouse, feeling that the runaway would be there. As it happened, a photographer was taking pictures of the schoolhouse that day, and he snapped Ernestine as she entered the door.

ERNESTINE LINDAUER.

Ernestine Lindauer, three years old.

A New "Mystery" Trick.

A trick that will cause a good deal of amusement and mystification among young folks is played as follows:

A small, bare table is placed in the center of the room in sight of every one. Two silver coins—say twenty-five cent pieces—are placed on the table some distance apart, one at the right hand, one at the left.

A member of the company, who may be called Sally, takes her place by the table, and another, whom we may call Jack, leaves the room.

Sally places her hands, or, rather, her finger tips, lightly upon the table before the two coins close to them, but not touching them, one to the right, one to the left.

"Now," says Sally, smiling at the company, "this is an experiment in telepathy. I will move one of these coins, and Jack will enter and without word or sign from me will tell you which coin I moved. Which shall it be?"

The company says, "The coin on your left."

She then places the coin back on the table just as it was and her hand just as it was and summons Jack into the room.

He enters, glances carelessly at the coins and without an instant's hesitation says, "Left."

The trick is tried again and again. Neither Jack nor Sally can be detected in the least collusion.

Indeed, there is really no necessity for any of the usual signs, for if those present are gifted with the power of keen observation they will notice that the hand that was raised above the head is for the moment very much whiter than the hand that remained on the table.

If the reader will try standing beside a table, allowing one hand to rest upon it while the other is for a moment held aloft, he will find that the test never fails.—Youth's Companion.

She Knew, All Right.

"Madam," half a dozen men hastened to assure her, "this is the smoking car."

"I know it," she said, calming seating herself, "but I am sure the men in here are more polite than they are in the car ahead. I couldn't get a seat at all in there. I don't mind the cigars, either. They're better than my husband smokes."

No further objection was offered, and the lady kept her seat.—Chicago Tribune.

The Critic Scored.

"I have just sold that picture for $2,000!" said the jubilant artist.

"I congratulate you on your ability," replied the critic.

"Thank you. It makes a difference, doesn't it?"

"Makes a difference? I don't understand you."

"I mean that it makes a difference when a man succeeds. Up to this time you have never uttered a word of praise or encouragement to me. Two or three times you have made slighting references to my ability as a painter. Now that I have sold a picture for a good price you begin to see that I have artistic talent."

"Oh, I'm not congratulating you on your artistic talent, but on your ability as a salesman."—Chicago News.

STOP THE MISERY OF INDIGESTION

A Temperance Remedy That Ends Soreness, Belching, Heaviness, Heartburn and Dizziness.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has been so successful in the treatment of indigestion, that thousands of former sufferers owe their good health of to-day to its wonderful power, and testimonials prove it.

It arouses the little muscular fibres into activity and causes the gastric juices to thoroughly mix with the food you eat, simply because it supplies the stomach with pure, rich blood. It's weak, impure blood that causes stomach weakness. Get good blood through the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and you will have no more indigestion.

It is the world's proved blood purifier. Start to take it to-day and before another day has passed, the impurities of the blood will begin to leave your body through the eliminative organs, and in a few days you will know by your steadier nerves, firmer step, keener mind, brighter eyes and clearer skin that the bad blood is passing out, and new, rich, pure blood is filling your veins and arteries.

The same good blood will cause pimples, acne, eczema and all skin eruptions to dry up and disappear. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the helpful remedy that nearly everyone needs. It contains no alcohol or narcotics of any kind. It cleanses the blood and every organ through which the blood flows is benefited. Get it to-day at any medicine dealer in liquid or tablet form.—Adv.

Dr. Pierce's medicines are manufactured in Canada at the world's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

Dr. Pierce's 1000-page illustrated book, "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," is sent free on receipt of 5 dimes, or stamps, to pay cost of mailing and duty. Address Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y.

But For the Canadians Enemy Would Have Been Behind British Lines

"Other reinforcements were thrown in. As they came up when night fell, the fighting was continued by moonlight, our troops driving back the enemy by repeated bayonet charges, in the course of which our heavy guns were recaptured. By then the situation was somewhat restored in the area immediately north of Ypres. Farther to the west, however, the enemy had forced their way over the canal, occupying Steenstraete, and, crossing at Het Sas, had established themselves at various points on the west bank.

"In the early morning of Friday we delivered a strong counter-attack northward in co-operation with the French. Our advance progressed for some little distance, reaching the edge of the wood about half a mile west of St. Julien and penetrating it.

CANADIAN LOST HEAVILY HERE.

"Here our men got into the Germans with the bayonet, and the latter suffered heavily. The losses also were severe on our side, for the advance had to be carried out across the open, but in spite of this nothing could exceed the dash with which it was conducted. One man, and his case was typical of the spirit shown by the troops, who had lost his rifle, smashed by a bullet, continued to fight with an entrenching tool.

"About 11 a.m., not being able to progress farther, our troops dug themselves in.

"Broadly speaking, on the section of the front then occupied by us the result of the operations had been to remove to some extent the wedge which the Germans had driven into the allied line, and immediate danger was over. During the afternoon our counter-attack made further progress south of Pilkem, thus straightening the line still more."

The writer then tells how the Germans, bringing up strong reinforcements, "and again using gas," captured St. Julien and managed to throw several bridges across the canal. The British made a strong counter-attack Sunday, and, while they gained some ground, it stopped in front of the village of St. Julien. The Germans, the narrative adds, made repeated attacks against the British near Broodseinde, backed by a tremendous artillery bombardment and gas, but they all were driven off with great slaughter to the enemy."

German Spies At Shorncliffe Camp Anger the Canadians

SHORNCLIFFE CAMP, April 29—Crafty agents of Germany are not wanting in this struggle for Britain. Certain their activities have been demonstrated in grass fires. Just the other day, when on a route march, a company of one of the Canadian regiments passed a spot, on the brow of a steep hill, where last year's greensward was blazing like a prairie fire. At first sight these grass fires would seem to be rather useless evidences of Teutonic spleen. But, as in most things German, "there's a reason."

Marks the Spot.

Go up in one of the aeroplanes to be seen buzzing about and you will discover that various blackened patches dot the surface of the green hills and fields that stretch all about this military depot. Supposedly these charred areas on the fair face of nature have been placed with mathematical accuracy and serve to indicate the positions of one or two rather important places to enemy flying craft. Be that as it may, a flock of British aircraft quitted their aerodrome here soon after this discovery, and a couple of days ago, just before darkness fell, glided over a neighbouring hill and out across the Channel for France.

Careless people dropping lighted matches in dry grass had best give the Canadians a wide berth.

German Wiles.

In common with soldiers of Kitchener's army, it is being impressed upon Canadians in training here that on reaching the front they must especially guard against the wiles of the enemy in his clever impersonations of British officers. The German's knowledge of the English language is a powerful weapon in his hands, but various suggestions are made whereby he may be quickly unmasked.

False orders delivered by several of these tricksters have caused great annoyance on several occasions.

"One of the blighters," said a badly wounded Patricia and one-time trooper of the Royal Horse Guards to The Telegram, "actually walked over to our trenches one night and stood out there calling 'Harry! Harry.' I don't know who the blazes 'Harry' was, but I suppose he thought that, it being a common name, some poor cove would answer to it, poke his head up, and get a German sniper's bullet through his bloomin' noodle.

"Presently Mr. German made so bold as to peek over the parapet. Then one of us grabbed him by the arm and pulled him in. He was a young officer—a kid of about seventeen."

Spring at Shorncliffe.

Golden flowers cover the gorse where sheep graze on the green slopes just below the huge garrison commons where companies of Canadians are rehearsing the grim work of war. Scattered on the hillsides in small groups, signallers wig-wag. Manipulating a tripod-supported field telescope, two men are observing the manoeuvres of a British aeroplane clattering high overhead. And sitting solitary on a hirlock hard by, a subaltern who knows more about banking practice than military engineering, ponders deeply which end of a compass needle points north.

Sweet notes of the skylark sound on all sides, and down in the woods about an old mansion at the foot of the hill the ground is yellow with primroses. Summer is coming on apace, but there is a chilly, damp wind off the Channel. The English season is rarely genially warm like ours, and residents of fashionable Folkestone adjacent, England's most favoured summer resort, declare one can wear a light overcoat off and on until the end of June. The houses are all of the most substantial kind—solid brick and stone—and such a thing as an open verandah is almost unknown.

Above the Sea.

From the eerie whereon Moore Barracks are situated, high above the sea, one looks away across the hollow in which the old village of Cherlton lies. In the distance, topping the heights at Folkestone stands one of England's finest hotels, the rendezvous of society folk when holidaying at the seaside.

Of late hundreds of British Tommies have been billeted in some of the bedrooms of its back wings. Steam-heated, this hostelry has found much favour with Canadian officers who have an eye for the pretty English girls to be met there at the "Dansant."

Out on the mile long promenade which skirts the cliffs if it be Sunday afternoon, crowds ramble to and fro. Week-end trippers from London and Belgian officers in baggy red riding trousers, old ladies leading dogs, retired colonels fiercely glaring through monocles at slackers, dapper young lieutenants adored of attendant damsels, bare-legged, sturdy children, and, every here and there among the khaki-clad, a stalwart son of Canada chatting with the ruddy-cheeked daughters of Albion and taking in the sights.

On The Sands.

If tired of the promenade, one may wander down steep pathways to the beach, where small boats line the shore, and whither a pier and casino beckon. Over at the harbour mouth three cross-Channel boats lie warped to the dock, headed towards France. Out on the smooth, hazy sea, whose wavelets sparkle in the sunshine, the observer may count four destroyers hovering watchfully among the lightships. Two cargo vessels move outward bound, defying mine and torpedo. Half a dozen trawler patrol-boats and freighters dot the middle distance, while smoke smears scattered along the horizon still further testify to Britain's mastery of the seas.

INDIGESTION ENDED, STOMACH FEELS FINE

"Pape's Diapepsin" Fixes Sour, Gassy, Upset Stomachs in Five Minutes.

Sour, gassy, upset stomach, indigestion, heartburn, dyspepsia; when the food you eat ferments into gases and stubborn lumps; your head aches and you feel sick and miserable, that's when you realize the magic in Pape's Diapepsin. It makes all stomach misery vanish in five minutes.

A Mulberry Tree Legend.

The mulberry, "wisest of trees," as Pliny termed it, really "likes" London and fruits profusely even in the grounds of the Charterhouse, at murky Smithfield. London mulberry trees are mainly derived from a fad of James I., who wanted to found a silk growing industry. With the proverbial folly of a pedant, the British Solomon introduced the black mulberry, disliked by silkworms, instead of the white variety, which forms their food. The black mulberry had been planted by Cardinal Pole at Lambeth in 1555, and there were still older specimens in the garden of Syon House. According to a pretty Greek legend, all mulberries were originally white, but a mulberry tree was growing beside "Ninny's tomb" when Pyramus and Thisbe died there, and the blood of the lovers turned the fruit to its present color.

Origin of the Onyx.

When waters charged with carbonate of calcium derived from limestone are allowed to evaporate they deposit their load in the form of sinter, or tufa. This process can be observed at many thermal and "petrifying" springs and also in the formation of stalactites and stalagmites in limestone caverns. In this way large masses of compact carbonate are formed, some of them of great beauty. The so called "onyx marbles," of which the Mexican "onyx" is a familiar example, are formed in this way. Some rock of this class is stalagmitic in caverns, and some of it is formed by springs. Its variations in color and texture, to which its ornamental character is largely due, are commonly produced by impurities or inclusions, such as oxide of iron or even mud and clay.—New York Telegram.

MEAT CAUSE OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys If Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmasy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

EVERY NEURALGIC HEADACHE CURED! USE "NERVILINE"—IT WON'T FAIL

The Miraculous Healing Power of This Liniment is Unfailing

RUB ON NERVILINE

There may be a thousand pains; yet, excepting sciatica, neuralgia is the worst. Most remedies are not strong enough or penetrating enough to relieve neuralgia. You know everything you have tried has failed to give even momentary relief, and you have decided that neuralgia must be borne forever.

Do not make this mistake—try NERVILINE.

Apply it to the sore spot. Notice the glow that spreads deeper and wider as Nerviline's curative power is carried further and further into the tissue. How quickly the pain is soothed! How rapidly it lessens! In a little while you have forgotten the pain—it has actually gone.

Neuragia gives Nerviline an opportunity of demonstrating its superiority over all other pain remedies. No magic, as you might imagine after you have used it—simply the application of scientific knowledge to the relief of pain.

Nerviline is a great outcome of modern medical ideas. You cannot afford to without it, because pain comes quickly and comes to us all. Guaranteed to cure the aches and pains of the whole family. Large bottles, 50 cents, trial size 25 cents; at druggists, or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

NEAT APRON AND DUST CAP.

By Anabel Worthington.

This is the type of apron that is so satisfactory for heavy or dusty work, as it covers one very completely but at the same time allows for perfect freedom of movement. Body and skirt are separate but joined at waist line by the belt. The sleeve, a one-piece model, is sewed into a regular armhole, and may be made full length, with a wristband, or in shorter length, as preferred. There are three pieces in the skirt, seamed at each side and gathered at the top, except across the front.

The pocket is ingenious, divided into two sections by a row of machine stitching through the middle. Altogether, the apron is of the simplest construction and can be made quickly as well as easily. The dust cap consists of two sections, the gathered part and the brim: the ties can be made of two straight strips of the material, or may be omitted altogether.

Striped gingham is a pretty material, used either for the entire apron or combined with plain gingham for the band at the neck, the belt, wristband and cap brim. Calico, percale and even lawn may be employed, the lawn answering more for dusting purposes than for any arduous occupation. When lawn is sufficiently substantial a flowered pattern, say, pink on a white ground, with plain pink for trimming, makes a very fetching cap and apron. For medium size 6¾ yards of 27 inch material would be required, with ¾ yard of contrasting material in the same width. The pattern, No. 7,105, can be obtained in sizes from 34 to 44 inches bust measure.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Address — The Examiner Pattern Service, The Examiner, Peterborough.

A HAPPY CHILD IN JUST A FEW HOURS

Mothers can rest easy after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, and they become tightly packed, liver gets sluggish and stomach disordered.

When cross, feverish, restless, see if tongue is coated, then give this delicious "fruit laxative." Children love it, and it can not cause injury. No difference what ails your little one—if full of cold, or a sore throat, diarrhoea, stomach-ache, bad breath, remember, a gentle "inside cleansing" should always be the first treatment given. Full directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups are printed on each bottle.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," then look carefully and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." We make no smaller size. Hand back with contempt any other fig syrup.

London's Calm Amazes Cousin of President

LONDON, April 29. — John Wilson, cousin of the president, has sailed for America after a stay of only one week in England. He came over on business and found none, so he was hurrying back. "I am amazed at the coolness of London in war time," he said. "They don't seem to worry a bit over the war, and don't bother about the soldiers marching along the street any more than crowds of New Yorkers would bother over boys shooting craps. All England is confident that Germany will be beaten and I suppose that is why the English strike one as being so calm over it all."

SELECT MEDICINE CAREFULLY

Purgatives are dangerous. They gripe, cause burning pains and make the constipated condition worse. Physicians say the most ideal laxative is Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut; they are exceedingly mild, composed only of healthgiving vegetable extracts. Dr. Hamilton's Pills restore activity to the bowels, strengthen the stomach, and purify the blood. For constipation, sick headache, biliousness and disordered digestion no medicine on earth makes such remarkable cures as Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Try a 25c. box yourself.

GERMAN WARSHIPS OFF BELGIAN COAST

57th Members Are Reported Wounded

DUNKIRK IS SHELLED BY VESSELS OF ENEMY'S FLEET

Civilians Are Killed and Wounded---British Squadron Thought to be on Its Way to Head Off the German Warships Which Are Believed to Have Beed Sent South to Co-operate With Germany Army in Drive Along the Coast.

ANOTHER NAVAL BATTLE EXPECTED

(Special Cable to The Examiner.)

PARIS, April 30.—German war ships are now operating on the Belgian coast, according to official information received here at the war office. It is stated that they have shelled Dunkirk, nineteen shells falling in the city, killing twenty and wounding forty-five.

It is believed here that the German war ships were sent south to co-operate with the German army in a new drive against the French coast. The success of the British war ships last fall in checking the first German drive with light draft monitors and cruisers is believed to have inspired the latest German move. It is thought that the German war ships now off the Belgian coast are fast battle cruisers of the type which raided the English coast during the winter.

It is stated here that already a squadron has been despatched to head them off, and news of another naval battle is expected at any time.

SUBMARINES AT IT AGAIN

LONDON, April 30.—The British collier Mobile and the trawler Lillydale have been sunk by submarines in the North Sea. The Lillydale was torpedoed off the Tyne. Her crew was saved. The Mobile was torpedoed off Lewis Island. Her crew was given ten minutes in which to take to the boats. They finally landed at Carloway, after nine hours in the boats.

HAVRE, France, April 30.—How a German force which tried to surrender when the retreat was cut off through the destruction of a bridge across the Yser canal, was mowed down by German guns, was related here to-day by officers returning from the front. An advance guard of four thousand Germans forced its way across the Yser canal at Steenstraate yesterday. After they had crossed, the Belgian artillery (which had the exact range) destroyed the bridge, and cut off the German retreat. The Germans facing annihilation at the hands of the Belgians, tied white handkerchiefs to the barrels of their rifles as a signal of surrender. At this moment the German guns on the east bank of the canal opened fire on them and hundreds were slaughtered. The remainder ran to the Belgian lines and surrendered.

BELGIANS ADVANCE

LONDON, April 30.—A Belgian official statement issued to-day says that on the night of April 28 and on April 29, the Belgians, co-operating with the French, repulsed German attacks from Steenstraate. Various parts of the Belgian front have again been bombarded by the Germans but the Belgians have advanced and taken the farm south of Blauw-Vortbrug.

OTTAWA, April 30.—The following casualty list was issued this afternoon:

First Battalion, (All wounded):—
Private James Winterbottom, England.
Private William Guiney, Scotland.
Private O. Gates, London, England.

SENTENCE IS SUSPENDED BY THE MAGISTRATE

THE EVIDENCE HEARD

The practice of some residents near the lakes and rivers of the County of taking drifting logs which have on them the marks of lumbering concerns and converting them to their own use, got a jolt this morning, when Mr. John H. Lloyd of Dummer Township was found guilty, before Magistrate Langley in the County Police Court, of taking logs belonging to the Peterborough Lumber Company, with fraudulent intent. Sentence was suspended, the logs to be restored, and the costs of the Court to be paid by the accused.

Crown Attorney Hatton conducted the prosecution, assisted by Mr. D. O'Connel, counsel for the private prosecutors, while Mr. V. J. McElderry was counsel for the defendant.

Mr. Lloyd admitted frankly the taking of the logs, which he believed were abandoned by the Company, and Mr. McElderry depended upon the interpretation of "fraudulent intent" for the defense.

Mr. O'Connel, counsel for the Peterborough Lumber Company, requested to be given permission to address the Magistrate on behalf of the accused, which request was granted. He referred to Mr. Lloyd as being a good man, with a wife, one child, and an aged mother, and he said the Company did not wish to impose any hardship upon the dependants, but were determined that the practice of people taking their logs without colour of right should be stopped. Mr. Lloyd had never been in any trouble before, and they did not want to make a criminal of him by sending him to jail, and Mr. O'Connel thought a suspended sentence would be as good a deterrent to others as a term in jail to the accused.

In a clear and concise judgment Magistrate Langley found the accused guilty and suspended sentence, with the provision that the logs should be returned to the Lake as he would be directed by a representative of the owners and that he should pay the costs of the Court, which amounted to about $11. He pointed out that his leniency in this instance was not to be as a precedent for others who might be committing a like offence.

The first witness for the prosecution was Mr. Dickson Davidson, President of the Peterborough Lumber Company, with limits throughout the County. Logs came down from Stony Lake and into the Otonabee River. In 1914 the Company towed logs through the Lake and scattered logs, as is nearly always the case, got loose from the booms that year and previous years. They usually tried to collect and tie them, but last year they in-

4,000 OF FOE ANNIHILATED

Belgian Heavy Artillery Destroyed Bridge and Then Field Artillery Cut the Germans to Pieces

TODAY'S COMMUNIQUE

PARIS, April 30. — (Official communique).— The War Office to-day says: "We made progress yesterday to the north of Ypres, in the region of Steenstraate.

The city of Rheims received five hundred shells, of which many were of an incendiary nature. These missiles started several fires, but it was found possible to circumscribe them and to put them out quickly. In the Champagne district the enemy shelled one of our ambulances, wounding a doctor."

GERMANS ANNIHILATED.

HAVRE, April 30.—The virtual annihilation of four thousand Germans who crossed the Yperlee over the bridge near Steenstraate is confirmed. The Belgian heavy artillery destroyed the bridge, while the field artillery showered them with shrapnel.

The enemy has fallen back on the defensive and is struggling to defend the small territory gained. Foiled in their attempt to cross the canal, the enemy made an equally vain attempt to force the passage of the Yser at Dixmude.

Standard Weights For Vegetables

Amendment to Act Does Not Appear to Be Generally Known in Peterborough

It does not appear to be generally known in Peterborough that the Dominion Government last year, under the title of "An Act to Amend the Inspection and Sale Act," passed a bill fixing standard weights for vegetables, which came into force on January 1st, 1915. These standard weights per bushel are as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| Artichokes | 56 lbs. |
| Beans | 60 lbs. |
| Beets | 50 lbs. |
| Blue grass seed | 14 lbs. |
| Carrots | 50 lbs. |
| Clover seed | 60 lbs. |
| Castor beans | 40 lbs. |
| Hemp seed | 44 lbs. |
| Malt | 36 lbs. |
| Onions | 50 lbs. |
| Parsnips | 45 lbs. |
| Potatoes | 60 lbs. |
| Timothy seed | 48 lbs. |
| Turnips | 50 lbs. |
| Weights per bag are:— | |
| Artichokes | 84 lbs. |
| Beets | 75 lbs. |
| Carrots | 75 lbs. |
| Onions | 75 lbs. |
| Parsnips | 65 lbs. |
| Potatoes | 90 lbs. |
| Turnips | 75 lbs. |

A barrel of potatoes, unless a barrel of specified size, kind or content by measure, is specially agreed on, must contain 165 Dominion Standard pounds of potatoes.

Any person selling, or offering for sale by the bag any of the vegetables specified above, in case such bag does not contain the number of standard pounds mentioned, is liable to a penalty not exceeding $25 for a first offence, and for each subsequent offence a penalty not exceeding $50.

Mr. J. Lockie Wilson, of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, says: "A number of instances have been brought to my attention where dealers have been purchasing carrots and turnips by the bushel from vegetable growers and demanding 60 instead of 50 lbs. to the bushel."

The Fruit Outlook.

BEAMSVILLE, Ont., April 30. — Fruit men without exception speak of the present season as a marvellous one. It has been a good many years since anything like the present harbinger has been remembered in the fruit district. Fifteen years ago there were ripe strawberries on May 24, a grower stated yesterday.

The profusion of bloom already forcing itself out seems to be unparalleled in the history of the Niagara district orchards. Every tree, even the smallest, is simply crowded with buds. Plums, apricots, cherries and peaches will be in full bloom by Sunday and the apples and pears will crowd them close. The district will be well worth a visit by the week-end.

A RUSH TO VOLUNTEER

248 Members of the 39th Battalion Will Go Overseas at Once to Act as Reinforcemet to 1st Division

LOCAL BOYS ENLIST

BELLEVILLE, April 29.—Two hundred and fifty men of the 39th Battalion are wanted at once for immediate overseas' purposes.

The officers commanding companies in this military unit will submit as soon as possible to the Orderly Room the names of two sergeants, two corporals and 58 carefully selected men who will volunteer for immediate service for overseas. Two buglers are also required, whose names will be submitted by the Sergeant Drummer, Sergt. Lunny.

Such is the announcement in the battalion orders for today. This will likely mean that more recruits will be required to fill the ranks of the 250 men. There is expected to be great rivalry for places in the overseas' company.

A Peterborough boy writing to the Examiner says: The monotony is broken. Considerable excitement is existing to-day upon receipt of information that volunteers, consisting of 2 sergeants, 2 corporals and 58 men are needed from each company as volunteers for immediate service overseas. This makes a total of 248 non-commissioned officers and men from the 39th Battalion.

The order reads that these men are to be carefully selected, and there has been a rush to get the coveted nomination.

If all could go who wish to volunteer, it would mean practically the whole battalion, and as a matter of course there are very many who must be disappointed, and the fortunate ones will be envied by their less fortunate comrades, who will be left behind to continue the irksome routine of squad drills.

The Examiner has been as yet unable to get the list of Peterborough men selected to go to the front in this draft. It is known that both buglers from the local detachment, Buglers Alan Sharpe and Alan Lord, have volunteered, as well as nearly all the other men.

Will Be Given a Reception This Evening—Address on Sunday Next

The Baptist church has arranged for a reception for local Chinese at the church to-night to meet Mr. George Mark of Toronto. Mr. Mark, who is a student of Toronto University, and secretary of the Chinese Christian Association, will address the Chinese of Peterborough on Sunday afternoon on the subject of "The Importance of Christianity in War and Peace."

MORE LOCAL NAMES ON ROLL OF HONOUR

PTE. WM. ALLEN, Peterborough boy with the 39th Battalion at Belleville.

Five Members of the 57th Detachment in the 2nd Battalion Are Reported as Wounded in Recent Terrible Battle.

SAM MILLS MISSING

Wounded.
Pte. T. W. Jolly.
Pte. John Ford.
Pte. Frank Richardson.
Pte. N. H. Clarke.

Wounded and Missing.
Pte. S. A. Mills.

The names of five members of the 57th detachment in the 2nd Battalion appeared in yesterdays' casualty lists, the first names of the rank and file Peterborough soldiers to appear. The relatives of four of these lads reside in the United Kingdom, but the boys are all well known here, and the news will bring grief to many families. The fifth, Pte. Clarke, comes from Omemee, but had lived in Peterborough for some time. C. Company of the 57th is well represented in this particular roll of honour. Ptes. Jolly, Richardson, Ford and Mills all being members of that company. Pte. Clarke was a member of B Company of the 57th. All five left here with the detachment in August.

Private Sam Mills.

Wounded and missing is the terse report of Pte. Sam Mills, who enlisted with the 57th detachment of the first contingent. His home is in Bury, Lancashire, Eng., where his father is station master at one of the two stations in that city. After coming to Canada about three years ago he worked on a farm near Lindsay, and with another farmer near Millbrook. His agricultural experience terminated one day when a wheel rolled from a waggon which bore a can of milk he was taking to a factory. The boy warned the farmer the waggon was not working smoothly but his advice went unheeded. When the milk was spilt, however, the old adage was forgotten by the farmer, who kicked up a rumpus and blamed the boy. Sam came into Peterborough and was taken in by Sergt. Major Howarth, who also claims Bury as his home town. He secured a position in the C.G.E. and latterly boarded with Thos. Hatley at 508 Albert Street. When the first local contingent was assembling Sam was for enlisting. He was only 18, but he was brimful of the spirit that has stirred English boys whenever the call to arms sounded in times of strife. Private Mills is another 57th C Company recruit. His friends here are anxiously waiting further information.

Private Frank Richardson.

Frank Richardson, listed among the wounded, was a member of C Company of the 57th Regiment. His home is in Chester, England, but he had lived in Canada during the past four years. For the last two years he had boarded with Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Sewell at 348 Stewart Street. When war broke out he promptly responded to the first call for recruits in Canada. Although he was scarcely the requisite height he was so eager to go that the authorities probably relaxed the regulations sufficiently to cover whatever slight deficiency in stature existed. Private Richardson was an enthusiastic soldier, had belonged to the volunteers in Chester and had seen service in China. Prior to enlisting he had been employed in the wire department (on cells) in the C.G.E. works.

The Sewell home has been deeply touched by the war. Pte. Richardson was regarded as a member of the family, and Mrs. Sewell has four brothers and five brothers-in-law at the front, and her husband is with the Mounted Rifles. Many friends of the family are also with the colours.

Pte. N. H. Clarke.

"There is the first member of No. 3 Company of the 57th Regiment to appear on the list," exclaimed a sergeant of that company as he read the casualties on The Examiner bulletins last evening. He referred to Pte. Noel Hughes Clarke, reported wounded. Pte. Clarke is a son of Mrs. N. P. Clarke, of Omemee, but has lived in Peterborough for some time before the war broke out, and was employed in the Auburn Woollen Mills. He has a host of friends among the employees of that concern and elsewhere in the city, who will be sorry to learn that he has been wounded. "Clarke was a daring fellow and he would be right out in front when there was anything doing," was the tribute his 57th Regiment comrades paid him.

CIVIC DEPUTATION WAIT UPON THE BOARD OF HEALTH

In Connection With Proposed Site for Peterboro's Sewerage Disposal Plant

WOULD COST $25,000

Special to The Examiner:

PARLIAMENT BLDGS., Toronto, April 30.—A large delegation from Peterborough and the Township of Otonabee waited upon the Provincial Board of Health in Toronto this morning expecting to get a decision from the Board which would settle forever the question of where Peterborough's proposed sewage disposal plant will be located, which has been under serious consideration for two and a half years. Representatives of Otonabee Township protested vigorously against the present site, which lies directly across the river from Lock street, and which is by them discribed as the most objectionable location the authorities of the City of Peterborough could have decided upon. Representing the City of Peterborough were Mayor Buller, City Solicitor G. N. Gordon, R. H. Parson, City Engineer, Aldermen Duffus, Weir, McIntyre, Langford and Edgar, Ex-Mayor Bradburn, ex-Aldermen Johnston and Duncan, S. R. Armstrong, City Clerk, and Ald. G. W. Green, chairman of the Board of Works. Representing Otonabee Township were Reeve J. Rnderson, Deputy Reeve Deyell, Councillors O'Leary, Howson and Eason.

Messrs. E. A. Peck and F. D. Kerr, solicitors, and a number of ratepayers of the township were also in evidence. Mr. Peck, for Otonabee, stated that Otonabee had objected for many years to the disposal of sewage into the river. "Peterborough is a growing city and the location chosen by the city is already being settled by Peterborough people which will be increased should the proposed bridge be constructed across the Otonabee river connecting the township with the city," said Mr. Peck, who also thought that the expense would be very little increased if the plant were removed further down the river.

The Alternative.

Mr. Thompson, also for Otonabee township, stated that because the location was so patronized by pleasure seekers in the summer the proposed site should be removed. When asked by the chairman of the Board for his opinion of where the plant should be located, he stated, what seemed to be the only alternative offered by any of the delegates from Otonabee, that the plant should be removed three-quarters of a mile further down the river to a point opposite Park Street. Mr. Parsons, Engineer, was called, and questioned regarding the alternative site. It was found that the elevation of land on the Otonabee side of the river was the same at the end of either street, therefore the change only amounted to a question of increased expenditure. It was figured that 16,000 feet of extra pipe laying would be necessary, which Solicitor Gordon stated would cost in the vicinity of

THE NEED AND DUTY OF THE HOUR.

The Toronto World in buttressing an argument to justify a general election says that "Canada is in the fight to a finish." This is true as an abstract statement, and that fact shows Canada her duty. We voluntarily entered this war with all the responsibility our participation involves; and we can't withdraw, because we have lost in a noble and fruitful sacrifice so many of our soldiers. Our duty is to keep up our strength in the battle line; and this can only be done by recruiting. We may send the men we now have under arms; but more will be needed as the gallantry of our soldiers in the fights depletes their ranks. We must recruit and equip more soldiers. It would seem that there is no provision made for recruiting, and we should expect the call from Major-General Sam Hughes almost any day. He is ready, no doubt; and especially after the terrible happenings of the past few days, he realizes the need of taking a still more active part in war preparations by Canada. But it is feared his hands are partially tied. He is one of the members of the cabinet greatly opposed to a general election. He realizes that that will put a stop to war preparations, will call away the minds of Canadians from the supreme and pressing duty of the hour, which is to concentrate every effort upon the work of making good the loss of men and of fighting strength represented by the long casualty lists that are passing under the ocean to us day by day. Great Britain feels the need of men, and vigorous recruiting campaigns have been, and are being conducted. There are plenty of officers and men in Canada who are ready to enlist if they were given the opportunity, and there are more that would enlist if the duty were specially brought to their attention. We need, just now, the recruiting campaign more than the political campaign. Cabinet ministers had better take the stump, in campaigning with the Opposition leaders, to call for recruits, rather than votes. We can do without votes just now. We need recruits more than anything else just now. A recruiting campaign and an election campaign won't go very well together.

WORK FOR US ALL.

News is dribbling in from day to day showing that our Canadian soldiers have been hard hit in recent fighting. With every man killed there are many wounded. We can do nothing but mourn for the departed; but the sorely, or even slightly wounded make immediate demand, not only upon our sympathy, but upon our activity. We cannot imagine the conditions that have been created by this horrible welter of war; but it needs little imagination to realize that our wounded soldiers demand proper, and as far as may be, prompt treatment. There may be adequacy of surgical treatment; but there is bound to be lack of little things. With a plentiful supply of medical and surgical appliances the doctors and the nurses will be kept busy saving lives and preventing unnecessary suffering. Though liberal supplies of these things have been sent from Canada through the Red Cross Society, the need is greater now than ever. With hundreds of Canadians wounded, and with the list growing every day as battling proceeds, the need is greater than ever for surgical and medical supplies. There is a call to all to cooperate; and with many of us, we have only to be told what to do to give prompt response. There are many others who do not see what they can do, who may think that the little they can do will be insignificant and comparatively useless. This is not the case. With everybody doing a little we shall have more accomplished than with a few doing each a great deal. When a woman begins to knit a sock for a soldier, she doesn't think of the insignificance of every loop she makes. She keeps on adding little loops to others, till the thousands needed complete the garment. Ten thousand women or more making millions of stitches an hour, make hundreds of socks a day. Little things count if many hands are doing them.

In another column on this page is found an article dealing with the Red Cross work and its needs. There is shown how all of us can do something. There is great need for bandages, and it is pointed out that if every householder should give one partly used sheet, or one stained tablecloth, such as have to be replaced with new ones, there would be a great deal of material for bandages, to bind up the wounds carried or suffered by our brave lads who have gone to fight. A housekeeper sorting her linen stores at this house-cleaning season, can easily think that she has something she can contribute that will help bind up the wounds of some mother's dear son. If she acts according to the generous impulses of her heart, she will, cooperating with thousands thinking and acting likewise, be doing a splendidly humane and effective service; and will in her way be helping wage war and fulfil the duty of Canada as effectively as the soldier fighting and bleeding in the trenches. No one will say that Peterborough has not done well in this and similar directions; but there is much more to do. The war still continues and will continue, it is to be feared, considerably longer. There will be much fearful fighting, far fiercer if possible, than the terrible struggle that has taken place; more men will be engaged; there will be more wounded, and greater necessity for caring for our soldiers who will be wounded. The Canadians have only just fairly got into the real fighting. We know that they will be at the front at the post of duty and danger. We, who are waiting at home for news from the battle front, need not, and must not, wait idly. We can, and must, be doing something. Even though our tears drop on the bandages we roll, the bandages must be supplied, and it is our work to do it. With the terrible need of our help, with our soldiers wounded, and their wounds crying for dressings, there does not seem to be room for any other thought, for any other than the most ordinary routine duties. Our women may become "ministering angels" in the noblest sense, to repair the wounds of war. While our men are engaged in the sterner, but still necessary work of providing means for the successful waging of war—the means of more deaths and wounds—for somebody—there is work for us all, and the whole nation should concentrate its mind and action upon the work to which the task of Canada doing its duty calls us all. This war, for us, changes the meaning of Kingsley's words—"for men must work and women must weep." With their husbands, sons or sweethearts in the battle line, some wounded with shot and shell, women, Canadian women, Peterborough women, must work as well as weep; and we all must take a deeper and deeper interest in the work of caring for our wounded, and supplying needed comforts.

THERE WHEN NEEDED.

"A remarkable feature noted her," says a London cable, "is that when first the news was known on Saturday, Canadians on leave rushed back to their depot, anticipating that reinforcing drafts would be called up."

This, we fancy, rather balances the slight tendency shown by Canadians—and about which so much talk was made at one time—to overstay leave when there was nothing doing.

In saying this we do not underrate the solid gold value of discipline and training. On the other hand, nobody should underrate the value of spirit, enthusiasm, enterprise as qualities in the fighting man.—Toronto Star.

The Urgent Needs of the Red Cross Work Appeal Directly to Everybody

TORONTO, April 29—Although we are now entering the eighth month of the great European War, and although we hear from time to time of peace and rumours of peace, the official reports of the different beligerent nations clearly show that strenuous fighting is still going on and will continue for some time to come. The great offensive of the allies is not yet under way though there can be little doubt that the generalissimo is but waiting for a favourable opportunity when the hosts of Britain and her allies will be hurled against the Teuton hordes to drive them back to their own frontiers.

This offensive movement will necessarily be an expensive one, and hundreds and thousands of lives will be lost, while a continuous stream of wounded will have to be carried to the hospitals flying the Red Cross flag. It is only right that we should look things in the face and be prepared for heavy losses before the cause for which we are fighting is finally accomplished.

The heavy losses suffered by the gallant troops who took part in the glorious battle of Neuve Chapelle, shows clearly that even local successes cannot be gained without great loss of life. The greater proportion of these casualties are wounded and lives can only be saved when these wounded men are attended to promptly, and when the doctors and nurses have every medical appliance at their disposal. A large amount of medical supplies have been sent from the Red Cross both to England from Canada and from Canada to the front during the past weeks and as the war progresses a still larger amount will be needed.

Funds are specially needed for these surgical supplies as the Red Cross [illegible] kind of instrument is needed at the front and in the hospitals, and they have to be purchased from the proper sources. Nevertheless, anyone can roll bandages and these are needed by the million, but word has been received from England that bandages not properly rolled should not be sent and the Canadian Red Cross Society earnestly requests that all who undertake to send in bandages should not do so unless they are prepared to carry out exactly the instructions given them. These bandages are made 2 inch, 2 1-2 inch, 3 inch, 4 inch, 5 inh and 6 inch, and 5 yards long. A cheap grade of unbleached factory cotton should be used and they must be torn, not cut, and tightly rolled on bandage rolling machines.

Old linen, cotton and flannel will be always acceptable, and there must be many housewives who have table cloths, towels, sheets, etc., which have been used sufficiently to enable them to be replaced. If every householder were to give one sheet, one towel, and one table cloth, what a lot of bandages could be made to bind up the wounds that our brave soldiers have suffered in the cause of freedom.

It is of the greatest importance that all supplies should be packed according to directions, and that the contents of each parcel should be fully described on the outside, with the number of articles, size of articles, etc. Full directions as to packing, and what is most needed, etc. can be had on application to the Superintendent of Supplies, 77 King Street, East, Toronto. A new leaflet has just been issued in which all information is given for the guidance of all those who are helping in the great cause.

Those who are assisting the work of the Red Cross little realize how their good work is appreciated by the soldiers both in the trenches and in the hospitals. Here is an answer from a Canadian nursing sister who was for some time engaged on Salisbury Plain: "Please tell any of the dear people who send Red Cross things that they will never know what a blessing the things they have made are. They cannot make too many handkerchiefs, night shirts and pyjamas. They are valuable, I can tell you."

That is one of the many messages of gratitude that comes across the sea to the splendid band of workers who are doing so much for our Canadian forces in their battle for freedom. It should stir us to greater energy and renewed activity under the Red Cross sign.

Red Cross Notes.

One of the most interesting gifts received so far by the Canadian Red Cross Society reached headquarters recently in the form of one scarf and three knitted wristlets, which were worked by Miss J. M. Barnards of Kohala, Hawaii. Enclosed in the package was a note which said: 'With this old lady's prayers and best wishes, who left England in 1851." Accompanying the message was a photograph of the sender, who, though far away in sunny Hawaii, has not forgotten our brave soldiers.

The Girls' Red Cross Auxiliary of Aurora, Ont., have for some time been making a small khaki bag containing iodine, wool pad, piece of gauze and waterproof. Altogether these girls have made 535 of these little bags. Full description and directions are printed in English and French on the outside cover which also has the maple leaf printed above the directions.

While the appeal of the society for tobacco has been met in a generous manner, a large quantity is still needed if the Canadian troops at the front are to be supplied with this luxury. Pipes, tobacco in tins, plug tobacco, and smokes of all kinds will be welcomed at headquarters, and also money to buy them. It is not necessary to point out what a great deal of comfort and pleasure a pipe of "baccy" affords our soldiers in the trenches and in hospital.

Another large consignment of Red Cross supplies left this city a few days ago when 435 cases were sent to Halifax en route to London, where they will be distributed by the Canadian Commissioner. Since September 10th no less than 8,695 cases have left headquarters and supplies from all parts of the country still continue to arrive every day. Among the articles sent yesterday were 4,861 shirts and 5,805 socks, besides a large assortment of other articles.

It is an interesting fact to note that from August 30 to December 31 last, 3,548 cases were sent from Toronto, and from December 31 to April 15 the number shipped totalled 5,145. Thus 1,600 more cases were shipped during the previous four months. These shipments do not include any article sent other than Red Cross supplies.

That the West is doing its share is shown by the fact that in the past three weeks two shipments of 48 cases each arrived from Calgary. A large consignment was also received from Hamilton, and 3,600 socks from the Brandon chapter of the Daughters of the Empire. These latter articles were for the War Contingent Association.

Colonel Gorrell, who is in charge of the Duchess of Connaught Hospital at Cliveden, England, in a recent letter to Mr. Noel Marshall, chairman of the Executive Committee of he Canadian Red Cross Society, asked that maple sugar and syrup be sent as the soldiers specially appreciated this luxury. The society will be glad to receive any maple product and the farmers of Ontario and Quebec are specially asked to assist when they express a wish for any particular luxury, they should receive it.

Although there are only twelve ladies in the town of Careross, Yukon Territory, including one Japanese, and one Indian, they have been doing a splendid work on behalf of the soldiers and have sent a parcel of knitted goods to the Canadian Red Cross. These comforts were sent by the Patriotic League of that little town in the far north.

The citizens of Guelph, through the Canadian Red Cross Society, and the people of Wellington County, have presented a motor ambulance to the society for service at the front.

The Yukon Chapter, No. 1, of the Order of the Eastern Star, of Dawson City, Y.T., has forwarded to the Canadian Red Cross Society the sum of $304. The people of the Yukon Territory have supported the Red Cross in a generous manner.

A young lawyer, formerly of New Brunswick, but now practicing in New York State, was recently called under sad circumstances to his home in Apohaqui. Hearing of the efforts being put forth by the women of Moncton to purchase a motor ambulance for service at the front, and, wishing to show his sympathy with the movement, he presented a lady with a $5 bill to be handed to the officers of the Moncton Red Cross, accompanying the unsolicited donation with these words: "Do not allow yourselves to become weary in well-doing; give of your time and your money and your sons, if need be—for Britain must win, no matter what the cost."

WHAT SHALL BE THE REWARD FOR GERMAN FIENDISHNESS?

The German official alleviators are improving, even if the improvements fail to bring success. Formerly, they had to follow up the German outrages and scurry for excuses. Now they are before-hand with the excuses. Intending to murder the troops of the allies, including Canadians, with their poisonous bombs, they paved the way by first falsely accusing the British of using these asphyxiating bombs. This manner of excusing Germany's barbaric methods contains more cleverness than the old one, but there is need of further improvement still if the world is to be deceived.

It is hard to understand Germany's total disregard for the opinion of civilization. It has long been evident that in her reversion to barbarism she allows no human consideration to influence her, but even a savage has sufficient cunning to think of the effect upon himself of his misdeeds. Germany, however, treats with contempt the opinion of the world. She seems altogether indifferent to the consequences of her actions — for consequences there must surely be. Kitchener who knows the Dervish and his ways declared yesterday that the Germans had stooped to acts "which would vie with the barbarous savagery of the Dervishes of the Soudan."

The world will have no pity or sympathy for Germany in the defeat that is so soon coming to her, and which she has so richly merited. The pronouncement of civilization will be that she deserved every particle of suffering that is to be her lot. But how would she be treated were she to emerge a victor from the war? What would the world think of her should she win by the murder of women and children, by the murder of the troops of her opponents through the employment of diabolical contrivances the use, that she herself is using contrary to the conventions governing civilized warfare? Surely she could not hope to get the recognition due to a legitimate victor. Her strength would enforce the toleration of other nations, but she would be hated even more in success than in defeat.

An honourable nation would accept defeat rather than resort to what henceforth will be known to history as "German methods" to avoid it. It would go down in honour rather than stand in disgrace. But for Germany there is both disgrace and defeat in store. One would think that for her own sake she would try to avoid the one.

If the nations that have engaged themselves to protect humanity from Germany, and who are giving so many thousands of the best of their men for that cause, act as they should they will visit upon Germany a full measure of punishment for her methods. She cannot be allowed the immunity from her deserts that would be accorded a maniac. Germany knows better. She has been bragging of her civiliation. Her murders are committed in cold blood with a full knowledge of what she is about. When the war is over there is certain to be a gathering of the busy-bodies. Those who have professed that the greatest courage reposed in "the self-mastered man who watches you with calm eye and comes in only when you have carried the thing so far that you have to be disposed of," those who have "unselfish friendship" for both sides, will be on the job, loud in their supplications on behalf of Germany, protesting against the wronging of the "innocent German people." It will be for Britain and her allies to tell these people, whose wonderful "fearlessness" has kept them out of the war, to still further display their daring by continuing to mind their own business.

Germany merits punishment. Any magnanimity that withholds this punishment will be mistaken and will be an injustice to the people who have suffered through Germany's wrongs. Self-appointed "mediators" should not be allowed to deprive Germany of what is rightly coming to her.

Moral Effect of Przemysl's Fall

The following article was translated from Le Journal of Paris:

It is a curious psychological phenomena, the importance the public always attaches to the fall of a fortress. One might almost say that in the majority of instances this moral effect is the most significant result of these victories or losses. In the eyes of the average person a fortress personifies the strength or the weakness of the warring parties. Capitulation on either side is ostensibly a self-acknowledgment of failure, without its being necessary to await any further continuance of the victory to draw final conclusions. The very fact that a fortress has surrendered suffices for the average imagination.

There are infinite precedents indeed which could be quoted in proving that, what ever the strategic effects of the taking of Przemysl may be, and they are not to be denied, the moral effects far outweigh them. The conquered as well as the conquerer is equally influenced by the surrender. Triumphant flags at Petrograd bear this point out, as well as do the efforts of influential men at Vienna, who dismiss the whole affair as a futile incident and endeavour to prove that their armies have more than made up for its downfall.

This same moral effect, however, is likely to act in two ways now. In the first place the fall of Przemysl is a decided admission in Russian eyes of the complete conquest of eastern and central Galicia. This fact was realized in advance from the moment that it became known that the fortress would succumb. Russian military men knew how fatal the fall of a fortress can be. Now to-day the whole world and not alone the military circles appreciate this point, and the chances of Russian success are strengthened, while the likelihood of Austrian victories grows less.

In the second place this psychological value will make itself felt in a wavering on the part of the German allies. For some time the Austrians have been diminishing in enthusiasm toward the Germans and this lukewarmness, considering their extreme egotism, is likely to be exaggerated rather than lessened. Besides this they are cherishing additional grievances because of the large number of Beskides and which suffered such wholesale demolition. It would only be human on their part if they did not experience a reaction of their one time pro-German enthusiasm. And especially if the Austrians become suspicious that the Germans are not enirely unresponsible for their misfortunes.

One might go further and argue with every reasonable justification that the fall of Przemysl will affect the internal relations of Austria-Hungary. Again Hungary, is finding herself directly menaced.

Thus will be seen the triple moral effect of the Przemysl capitulation on the Germans, on the Austrians, and on the Austro-Hungarians.

Voice of The People

Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Kindly allow me space to deal with a statement appearing in last night's Examiner that the action of the Trades and Labour Council re Sanitary Inspector Spence was a measure of retaliation because the Inspector had stopped members of the Trades and aLbour Council from trespassing on his property. As chairman of the Municipal committee of the Trades and aLbour Council from trespassing emphatic denial to that statement. No member of the committee has ever been on Mr. Spence's property, and I personally do not know where it is situated, except that it is out side the city limits. The action of the Council was not due to any desire to get after Inspector Spence but to get after the City Council who refused to employ non-residents, enforce it very strictly with regard to a workman looking for a day's work, but allow an official to draw a salary from the taxpayers of the city, and pay no taxes in the city that pays his salary. The excuse is that Mr. Spence's salary is so small that he cannot afford to live in the city. Well, there are many hundreds of taxpayers in the city who are paying rent and keeping a wife and family on a great deal less than $700 a year. If it is the City Council's opinion that Inspector Spence cannot live in the city limits on $700, how can they expect the labourers employed by the city to do it on 22c. per hour, with about 8 months work in the twelve. Personally I have no objection to the city giving to Mr. Spence a raise, for I think $700 a year for a Sanitary Inspector—especially one that attends to his duties as well as Mr. Spence does—is a disgrace to the Council. But that does not alter the fact that the Council have a rule about non-resident workment, and Mr. Spence should be made to live up to it as anyone else.

Thanking you for the space in your valuable paper, I am,

Yours truly,

R. MITCHELL

Fire.

(By Lieut.-Colonel Kaden.)

As children many of us have played with it, some of us have seen an outbreak of fire. First, a small tongue-like flame appears; it grows into a devastating fury of heat. We out here in the field have seen more than enough of it.

But there is also the fire of joy, of sacred enthusiasm, it arose from sacrificial altars, from mountain heights of Germany, and lit up the heavens at the time of solstice and whenever the home countries were in danger. This year fires of joy shall flare from the Bismarck columns throughout the length and breadth of Germany, for on April 1, just one hundred years ago, our country's greatest son was born. Let us celebrate this event in a manner deep, far-reaching, and mighty!

Blood and Iron!

Let every German, man or woman, young or old, find in his heart a Bismarck column, a pillar of fire, now in these days of storm and stress. Let this fire, enkindled in every German breast, be a fire of joy, of holiest enthusiasm. But let it be terrible, unfettered, let it carry horror and destruction! Call it hate! Let no one come to you with "Love thine enemy!" We all have but one enemy, England!

How long we have wooed her almost to the point of our own self-abasement. She would none of us, so leave her to the apostles of peace, the "No War" disciples. The time has passed when we would do homage to everything English—our cousins that were!

"God punish England!"—"May He punish her!" This is the greeting that now passes when Germans meet. The fire of this righteous hate is all aglow.

You men of Germany from East and West, forced to shed your blood in the defence of your homeland through England's envy and hatred of Germany's progress, feed the flame that burns in your souls. We have but one War-cry, "God punish England!" Hiss this to one another in the trenches, in the charge, hiss as it were, the sound of licking flames. Behold in every dead comrade a sacrifice forced from you by this accursed people. Take tenfold vengeance for each hero's death!

You German people at home, feed this fire of hate!

You mothers, engrave this in the heart of the babe at your breast!

You thousands of teachers to whom millions of German children look up with eyes and hearts, teach Hate, unquenchable Hate! You homes of German learning, pile up the fuel on this fire! Tell the nation that this hate is not un-German, that it is not poison for our people. Write in letters of fire the name of our bitterest enemy. You guardians of the truth, feed this sacred Hate!

You German fathers lead your children up to the high hills of our homeland, at their feet our dear country bathed in sunshine. Your women and children shall starve; beastial, devlish conception. England wills it! Surely all that is in you rises against such infamy?

Listen to the ceaseless song of the German forest, behold the fruitful fields like rolling seas, then will your love for this wondrous land find the right words, "Hate, unquenchable Hate! Germany, Germany, above all!"

Let it be inculcated in your children, and it will grow like a landslide, irresistible, from generation to generation.

You fathers, proclaim it aloud over the billowing fields that the toiling peasants may hear you, that the birds of the forest may fly away with the message into the land that echoes from German cliffs send it reverberating like the clanging of bells from tower to tower throughout the countryside: "Hate, Hate, the accursed English, Hate!"

You masters, carry the flame to your workshops; axe and hammer will fall the heavier when arms are nerved to this Hate.

You peasants, guard this flame, fan it anew in the hearts of your toilers that the hand may rest heavy on the plough that throws up the soil of our homeland.

What Carthage was to Rome, England is to Germany.

For Rome as for us it is a question of "to be or not to be."

May our people find a faithful men-

Only Six Months To Live is Why He Could Not Fight at the Front

PARIS, April 29. — Few young or middle-aged men are to be seen in the provinces of France now, but there are enough of them promenading the Paris boulevards to exasperate mothers, wives, sisters, and sweethearts of soldiers.

"Why isn't he at the front?" has been a constantly growing question, generally followed by a denunciation, and sometimes resulting in deplorable incidents.

A young actor was hissed at Lyons when some one in the audience put that question. He asked for a hearing and in a choked voice said he was obliged to speak of something that he had tried for a long time to ignore himself.

"It makes no difference now, though," he said. "The physicians give me only six months more to suffer. It would be a great consolation to me if I could pass that time fighting for France, but in spite of my supplications they won't have me."

Many incurables have been obliged in this way to disclose their secret sufferings. Many foreigners also who passed for French in the Boulevards have declared they were Russian, British, or Belgian. Mr. Henri Galli, a Deputy for Paris, asked why they were not serving their respective countries. The reply was that the Russians were mostly political refugees who would be put in prison instead of in the army if they returned, while Britain has no obligatory service, and Belgians benefited from the old law under which conscription was by lot. Some of them also, having served in the civic guard or being married, are exempt under existing laws. Mr. Galli remarked that there was nothing to prevent the British and Belgians from enlisting in their own armies, and as for the Russians, there was room for them in the Foreign Legion.

The Belgian army has been refusing to volunteers the privilege of choosing their regiments, and this is supposed to confirm the report that the government intends by decree to modify the existing recruiting laws and call out all physically fit men between the ages of 19 and 25, married as well as single. No more passports for Holland are delivered to men in this category wishing to return to Belgium.

DRAMATIC STORY OF STOLEN PLANS OF ESQUIMAULT

Related by a Traveller From British Columbia Who Says It Is Authentic — Example of German Espionage

Not the least interesting tale of German espionage is that woven around the theft of the plans of the fortifications at Esquimault, the Pacific naval base on the British Columbia coast. The story as narrated to an Examiner reporter this morning by a British Columbia man visiting in Peterborough, affords another example of the minute ramifications of the German spy system.

Alvo Von Alvonsleiben established himself in the best circles in Vancouver and Victoria, had a beautiful home, entertained handsomely, and was a member of the select clubs. He owned a big mine on Vancouver Island, and was intimate with the manager of a trust company, the dissolution of which enters to some extent in the Esquimault affair. The plans of the fortifications were supposed to have been in the sole possession of a public man very prominent in British Columbia affairs. The latter's private secretary was an intimate friend of the head of the trust company which had reached a precarious condition through its manager's financial plunging. Von Alvonsleiben, the recital, proceeds, was aware of the above facts, and approached the trust manager with an offer for Esquimault's plans to be obtained through the private secretary.

Shortly afterwards Von Alvonsleiben's brother left British Columbia for Germany, and apparently decided to investigate Gibraltar. He was arrest- [illegible] the plans of Esquimault were found upon him. He was summarily disposed of in the manner prescribed for spies, but there was a hurry-up call to the British Columbia trusted officials. The cable announcing the arrest of the lesser Von Alvonsleiben was opened in the department office by the private secretary, who pulled out a desk drawer in which he kept a revolver. To the scandal of the department he added a tragedy.

The cablegram included a summons to the public official to proceed immediately to London, a fact which the press recorded shortly after the outbreak of war. Of course the tangle was straightened out, but Alvo Von Alvonsleiben's big residence is now occupied only by his wife. There are rumours of a high-powered gray car making night trips from Seattle where Alvo has been interned, but this is not vouched for. However, there is the story in its barest details. It was related to the reported as a real fact, and even as fiction, its outline is almost worthy of E. Philipps Oppenheim.

PETERBORO' MAN FORECASTED THE CANADIAN DASH

Private Phipps Formerly of Kidderminister Wrote From Trenches to His Old Home Paper

Private A. W. Phipps, of A Company, 87th Regiment, who enlisted with the 1st Canadian Contingent, wrote the appended letter on April 2nd to the Kidderminster, Eng., "Shuttle," in his old town. Private Phipps was unmarried, but his parents reside on Fradett avenue, in this city. In the following letter written early in the month he makes a promise for the Canadian which he possibly did not think would be fulfilled so soon:

Having seen in your valued paper the experiences of countless Kidderminster men serving in different branches of the H. M. farces, I'm sure the people of Kidderminster would be pleased to hear that the old town is also well represented in the Colonial forces, myself belonging to the Canadian Contingent, and I know at least five other Kidderminster men in my own battalion. The contingent has not yet done any very hot fighting, but I believe that the little we have done has been highly praised by the men in supreme command. You may be sure that we follow the doings of our county regiment with intense interest. The Worcesters have indeed covered themselves with glory. They have done a lot towards driving home to the Huns the fact that all is lost. We have been at the front about two months now, and have been in the trenches at several points on the firing line. But the task of getting to Berlin does not seem half so hard now as it did while we were training on Salisbury Plain. Lord Kitchener tells us not to underestimate an enemy, but no self-respecting man can help but feel contempt for an enemy that wages war on defenceless woman and children. You may be sure that when the time comes to strike we will do it with a will. But one thing is sure, anyway, the "made in Germany" trade-mark has vanished for ever from the British market. The old town should be more prosperous, too, for (according to election speeches) Germany has always been well to the fore in the competition for trade in the carpet line. My comrades and I wish Kidderminster and Kidderminster men every success.

Early Trips To Stoney Lake

The first boat for Stoney Lake points will likely leave Lakefield the first week in May. A number of "Early Birds" will take advantage of the initial trip to migrate north, for the summer.

There is a certain advanage in going back so soon for by so doing, a couple of peaceful weeks are to be enjoyed before the invasion of mosquitos and black flies, the former arriving a few days ahead of Victoria Day and the latter, about a week later.

Victoria Day, this year, comes on Monday, and, according to the custom of former years, there will be a boat on Saturday, Monday and Tuesday. A large number of Toronto people, as well as the majority of Peterborough cottagers, will take advantage of the holiday and visit their summer homes, for the purpose of fixing up a bit, and putting in their gardens.

From Victoria Day to the first of June there are usually two or three boats. From the 1st to the 15th of June a daily service is maintained, while from that to the first of July there are two trips made each week day.

This season the Stoney Lake Navigation Co. will pay special attention to the service up and down the canal. The steamer Manita, which they purchased last fall, will likely be placed on this route. She will leave Peterborough about 8 o'clock, and arrive back about 6 p.m. This quick service will be made possible by the canal steamer meeting the morning boat from Lakefield at Mt. Julian, where passengers for the Upper Stoney Lake points will be transferred. On the down trip, which will be half an hour later, from Juniper, the canal steamer will help out the afternoon boat between Juniper and the Point—a part of the lake where calls are numerous and far apart—and passengers will be transferred as the boat lie side by side in the locks at Young's Point.

This arrangement should provide a very efficient service and will, no doubt, be appreciated by the many cottagers and visitors to Stony Lake.

—Monty La Rock.

GIRL GETS VIOLETS FROM WAR TRENCHES.

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 29.—There is a Hungarian girl here employed as maid for a well-known family who received to-day a letter from a brother in one of the armies of Austria-Hungary. He said he had not been out of the trench for three weeks.

"Within an arm's reach, however," the letter read, "on the sod outside the trench the violets are growing in a solid bank. I can reach out my arm and pick all I want."

Pinned to the letter is a little spray of violets which he gathered.

Special Facilities For Storing Furs

Have Been Provided by the Barrie's, Ltd.—Firm Has Removed to New Quarters

Barrie's Ltd., furriers, have removed from their temporary premises at the corner of George and Brock streets to their new quarters next to the Customs House. This includes both factory and retail store. While the barricade will not be removed from the front of the building for another week or two, the firm will be in a position to carry on business and meet the demands of their customers. Special storage facilities have been provided and are available to all who contemplate storing furs for the season. In connection with this department there has been installed special cleaning machinery of a kind that is seldom seen outside the large centres. With this it is possible to guarantee furs protection against moths and other destructive elements common to that class of goods. All of this is in daily operation. When the front of the store is completed it will be possible to remove the barricade. This is the time of the year when furs are stored for the season, and for this purpose special provisions have been made. The factory, as well as the fur cleaning department, is complete, and in daily operation. The 'phone number of the firm is unchanged.

Sentence Was Suspended

Frank Seaton was allowed off on suspended sentence by Magistrate Dumble this morning on a charge of stealing a bicycle, the property of Harvey Henry, an employee of Messrs. Hopwoods Limited, provided he pays the costs of the Court, amounting to $13.42. His employer, the proprietor of the Mallory Cheese Factory, was present in Court and said he would pay the amount and keep it out of Seaton's wages, which was satisfactory to all concerned.

Chief Thompson and Detective Newhall went after the accused yesterday afternoon, a drive of about sixteen miles.

MILLBROOK, April 30.—Peterborough Presbytery met at Millbrook yesterday to induct Rev. W. D. Lee, M.A., of Toronto, into the pastoral charge of Millbrook and Garden Hill Presbyterian Churches. Rev. Mr. McDonald, Warkworth, presided. Rev. Mr. Bennie, of Grafton, preached the sermon. Rev. A. H. McConnachie, of Centreville, addressed the people, and Rev. G. L. Crow, of Springville, the minister. A reception was held later for Rev. and Mrs. Lee and family.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The observation trips conducted by the Boys' Department of the Y.M.C.A. are certainly proving very interesting and instructive for the boys. Thursday afternoon the boys had the pleasure of visiting the Brinton Carpet Co. On arrival at the factory the boys were received by the officials of the Company and divided into three groups when they were shown the making of carpets and rugs. It is safe to say that the "Y" boys will be able to tell their parents when they have purchased a carpet if it is a good one or not.

The next trip will be to the Bonnar Worth Co. on Thursday afternoon, May 13th.

The older boys' bicycle club will meet to-night at 7.30 to elect their officers and draw up their summer programme.

Every boy who has a lacrosse stick is requested to turn out for practice Saturday morning at ten o'clock. Their will be two groups formed, one for junior boys and one for older boys so every boy will have a good chance to learn the game.

Spring Seeding in Peterborough County

Reports From Various Sections of the District Indicate That Prospects Were Seldom Better —The Fruit Outlook

This week should see the finish of the bulk of the spring seeding. A number of farmers have already reported the completion of this all-important operation. There has been some little delay on the low land which is only to be expected, and on some of the larger farms, there is yet some seeding to do. The season is easily two weks ahead of last year, [illegible] reports received from various parts of Peterborough County indicate that prospects were seldom better than they are at the present time. The only thing to be feared is late frosts, which are apt to result when the season opens as early as it has done this year. However, there are few farmers who would not sooner take a chance on the early seeding even at the risk of having it partially killed out by frost.

Death of a Former Well-known Resident of Peterborough

Mrs. Sophia Elder, wife of John Elder and mother of Neil E. Elder, of Alameda, Cal., died last night at the local sanatorium, Alameda, Cal. Mrs. Elder was 72 years of age and had lived in this state 36 years, having come from Peterborough, Canada, where she was born.

Many friends will mourn her loss, as she was well known in church circles in this city. The family has resided here for over ten years, and formerly conducted a dry goods store.

The funeral will be held Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the undertaking parlours of George Murphy, [illegible] Central Avenue. The remains are to be cremated.

Mrs. Elder was born in Peterborough Canada, June 27th, 1842. She was the daughter of Charles Commander, a prominent educator of that city. Her early life was passed in that place, until her marriage in 1862 to John Elder, a prosperous dry-goods merchant. Her early married life was passed in Peterborough, Canada, from which place she removed to California about thirty-five years ago.

Her subsequent life was spent in the bay region, chiefly in San Francisco. She has been a resident of Alameda about ten years.

Mrs. Elder's circle of friends were unusually large, people being drawn to her by her equal strength and beauty of character.

A memorial service will be held next Sunday at 10 a.m. by the Good Cheer Bible Class of the Presbyterian church, of which she was a member.—Alameda Sun.

Remandrd Until This Afternoon

County Constable A. Moore returned last evening from Moose Jaw with his prisoner, Harold Williamson, who was arrested by the R.N.W.M.P. in Saskatchewan on the charge of having had illicit relations with a Norwood girl under the age of 16 years. Williamson appeared before Magistrate Langley this morning and was remanded until 3.30 o'clock this afternoon to give him time to consult a solicitor.

Supervised Playgrounds

The Local Council of Women are receiving, through the kindness of the Playground and Recreation Association of America, of whom Theodore Roosevelt is Honorary President, a number of slides, including views showing the need of playgrounds, playground equipment and activities, and other subjects of interest. These will be shown on the evening of May 6th in the gymnasium of the Y. M. C. A. A silver collection will be taken up in aid of the playground.

Playgrounds develop—

Honesty—By causing the child to repudiate any success that does not come through fair play.

Imagination—By lifting the child out of the commonplace and filling him with enthusiasm.

Self confidence—By giving the child some responsibility in the games.

Obedience—By teaching the child to respect the leader.

Justice—By teaching the child to have consideration for those who are physically and mentally weaker.

structed Mr. Brooks, at Young's Point to do the collecting. He did not finish the job. Their marks were "P. L.", a star and "E. Z." Any pine logs with the "E. Z." mark on it did not belong to the Peterborough Lumber Co.

Have Missed Logs.

For a number of years they have missed logs. Witness personally found some of them in the yard of Mr. Lloyd, the accused. These logs were marked "P. L." The Company has used this mark since 1906, and to his knowledge, no other logs in Stoney Lake had the mark "P. L."

The logs he found numbered about eleven. It was last Friday.

To Mr. McElderry, witness stated that if logs were in the water for nine years they would not depreciate in value to any great extent. If they were on the shore they would depreciate according to the kind of timber.

Any star marked logs in the lake would be six or seven years old. In the spring the company's men are instructed to go out and pick up all the logs with the company's mark, irrespective of their apparent value.

Mr. Lloyd did not try to conceal the logs in any way. He was not at home the day witness was there. He met Mr. Lloyd since in Mr. O'Connell's office, where accused wanted to know the value of the logs and offered to draw them back to the lake, acknowledging taking them.

A letter produced in re-examination by Mr. Hatton, was recognized as one he had seen in Mr. O'Connell's office and which Mr. Lloyd admitted in his presence that he had written.

Used Neighbour's Sleighs.

Robert Miles, a resident of the township of Dummer, testified that he had seen the prisoner taking some logs away from his place which somone had brought there and left a day or two before. When he saw them first they were on a pair of his sleighs, which Mr. Lloyd had asked permission to use to save rolling the logs onto the ground. There were four logs, but he did not examine them for marks.

Were Marked "P. L."

Archibald Miles, son of the previous witness, called, said he remembered seeing the logs his father mentioned. There were four logs and one or two of them were marked "P. L."

Eleven Logs.

Mr. Michael Lynch, a resident of Peterborough, who has been employed in the lumbering business for a great many years, testified that he saw logs belonging to the Peterborough Lumber Co. on Mr. Lloyd's property on March 4 and also at a later date. There were nine logs marked "P.L.," one other marked with a star end another marked "K.L." which was not recognized as the company's log.

Nine of the logs were hemlock, eight of them being marked "P.I."

Conscience Not Troubled.

Mr. Lloyd went into the witness-box in his own defence. He said he had been doing business along the Lake for years. One log he took, belonging to the Peterborough Lumber Company, had lain on an island for over three years.

"What did you think when you were taking those logs?"

"My conscience was clear that I was not doing anything out of the way and it is just the same to-day. I did not think the company would bother with them."

Mr. Lloyd said he was asked by Mr. O'Connel to come to his office, which he did. He offered to bring the logs back and wanted to settle. Mr. Davidson was there and they would not settle. He had never taken any logs before.

To Mr. Hatton, in cross-examination, witness said the ice was on the Lake when he got the logs. He got two the first load and nine the second, dropping four on the sleighs of Mr. Miles. He did not think it was wrong to take the logs.

MORE LOCAL NAMES ON ROLL OF HONOUR

A cablegram has been received from Lt.-Col. Young, of Peterborough, medical officer of the Canadian Engineers, that the Engineers of the 2nd Contingent had arrived safely in England.

The Minister of Militia has assured the directors of the Central Canada Exhibition Association that the soldiers now training and mobilizing on the Ottawa Fair Grounds will be away from there by July. The mobilization on these grounds last year caused some rumours that it would hinder the 1914 Exhibition being held. In order to prevent a reccurrence of similar reports regarding the 1915 Exhibition President Bate and Manager McMahon interviewed General Hughes. Besides assuring the Exhibition officers that the troops would be removed in midsummer, the Minister asserted that the militia authorities would place the buildings in the same condition as when they took possession of them. Several alterations had to be made for the accommodation of the troops.

ROW AT ALIEN CAMP

KINGSTON, April 30.—There was a lively row at the Fort Henry alien camp last night when a fight started between the prisoners and the guards. After some dispute, the guards drew their bayonets to quell the disturbance, and one of the Germans was stabbed near the heart, and another on the wrist. The former is in a dangerous state.

NO TRUTH IN RUMOURS

OTTAWA, April 30.—There is absolutely no confirmation in official quarters here of the reports of the sinking of transports with Canadian troops off the French coast. "Rot," said Deputy Minister Fiset this morning when questioned about it. "We certainly would have heard of it if it had happened, but we have not heard a word about it. There is no truth in it at all."

(By William G. Shepperd, Copyright 1915, by United Press, Copyrighted in Great Britain.)

Headquarters of the British Army in Northern France, April 29th, 10 p.m., via London, April 30.—The great artillery duel, one of the most colossal of the war, abated to-day. Only a few shells are falling today along the battle line, where General French's forces have once again thrown back the high tide of the German offensive.

Ypres suffered greatly, but the wonderful cloth hall tower, the most noted land mark in Flanders, still stands. It miraculously escaped destruction in the hail of shells with which the town was deluged by the enemy. The entire battle front was comparatively quiet to-day—an eloquent tribute to the valor of General French's men who still hold the gateway to Calais.

There have been some pathetic incidents. A long range German shell falling in the yard of a convent in I[illegible]gringhe, blew off the top of the head of the aged Mother Superior whi[illegible] was engaged in gathering aged and infirm inmates about her preparatory to leaving for a place of refuge. Another shell killed three of the nuns, and wounded four.

LONDON, April 30.—The Admiralty to-day announced that the German steamer Macedonia, which escaped from Las Palmas some time ago has been captured by a British warship.

RUSSIAN TORPEDO BOATS SINK TWENTY-EIGHT TURKISH STEAM AND SAILING SHIPS IN WEEK

LONDON, April 29.—The Times Petrograd correspondent telegraphs:

"According to details furnished by the Odessa correspondent of the Russkoe Slovo, the net result of last week's operations of the Russian torpedo boats off the Anatolian coast is four Turkish steamships and twenty-four sailing vessels destroyed. Considering the paucity of the Turkish transport resources these losses are deemed considerable."

AUSTRIAN ARCHDUKE AND VON HINDENBURG AT LOGGERHEADS

LONDON, April 29.—The Daily Mail's correspondent telegraphs. via Petrograd:

"As a result of a difference of opinion, such as caused the down fall of Permysl, Archduke Frederick and General Von Hindenburg are now declared to be at loggerheads, as to the best method of conducting the defence of Cracow, which it is believed may be threatened by the middle of June. The Prussians declare the city is more vital to German than to Austrian interests and demand forthwith a radical thinning of the population, coupled with the subordination of everything to military requirements, including the destruction of certain parks and suburbs, in the fear of a rising of the Polish population against Prussian domination. The Archduke is declared to be in a state of great perpexity regarding what course to take.."

LONDON, April 30.—Among the killed in the latest list of casualties received from the front is the name of Brig.-General Riddell, commander of the Northumberland Fusiliers Brigade.

BERLIN, via wireless through Sayville, April 30.—To-day's official report from the war office tells of the shelling of Dunkirk and the British fortress at Harwick. declares that the French and British offensive in the north has been checked. The report makes no mention of the reported German raid by warships of the lower Belgian coast, and in discussing the shelling of Dunkirk, which the Paris official statement says was from war ships. says it was by "German artillery.". Regarding the Harwich report, the statement says, "Our aerial forces have bombarded the fortified town of Harwich."

NEW YORK, April 30.—Despite the reports from Paris early to-day that Dunkirk had been shelled by German war ships there was grave doubt this afternoon as to whether this was so or whether the shelling was by the great German 17-inch guns. Most of the experts were inclined to believe that the latter might be the case.

LLOYD GEORGE PLANS TO RAISE TAX ON ALL SPIRITS

They Say Proposals of British Chancellor Will Hurt Ireland—Double Tax on Spirits is Made Effective at Once by Vote of House to Prevent Withdrawals From Bond During the Debate.

LONDON, April 30.—The proposals introduced in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon by David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, to double the duty on spirits, quadruple the duty on wines, and to substitute an increase by graduated tax on beer—to encourage the use of lighter beers—were strongly opposed, and it is generally believed that the new taxes will have to be moderated before Parliament will accept them.

The O'Brienites, as a protest against an additional taxation on Irish whiskies and beers, brought about the first division in the House since the outbreak of the war by taking the unusual course of voting against the provisional resolutions bringing the taxes into force at once, to prevent withdrawals from bond while Parliament is dealing with the matter. The resolution relating to spirits was passed by a vote of 89 to 6, the minority being composed of O'Brienites.

The Nationalists also protested against the measure, but did not vote. The Unionists, who withheld criticism until all the facts could be placed before them, also abstained from voting.

Usually these provisional resolutions are carried without division, for should Parliament refuse to sanction the taxes, they are refunded to those who may have paid.

The Laborites promised to reply to the Chancellor's charges that a minority of the workmen, lured away by drink, were not putting their best [illegible] forth into the work of producing material, which is so badly needed by the soldiers at the front.

The extra taxes will be included in the budget which Chancellor Lloyd George will introduce in the House of Commons on Tuesday next, and the bill, which is an amendment of the Defence of the Realm Act, will be proposed for the second reading at a later day, when the debate on it will take place. Before that time the Chancellor has promised to place in the hands of the members a series of reports of independent investigators, on whose findings the Government decided to take the action it has.

Besides the Irish opposition to the spirit duties, many members opposed the new wine taxes on the ground that they strike at France, Australia and South Africa. The proposed appointment of a board of control, and the proposal to take over for canteen purposes the saloons in the munitions of war areas and to compensate all interests are generally approved by the members.

Regarding beer up to 43 specific gravity, there is to be no change. Above that there will be a graduated surtax to discourage heavy brews, rising to 36 shillings ($9) per barrel.

The duties on wine are to be quadrupled. Sparkling wines will pay 15 shillings ($3.75) a gallon.

Lloyd George said that in areas producing materials of war or in which transport work is performed, and in some camp areas, the Government is to have complete control of the sale of drink.

Civic Deputation Wait Upon, etc.

$25,000 because of the quick sand which would be encountered in this locality. Mayor Buller stated that he would be sorry to interfere in any way with the progress of Otonabee township, that if it were a matter of delett say only 7,000 or 8,000 dollars for the cost of the difference in the location of the site, they would be willing to change it. Accordingly, Mr. Douglas, appearing for Mr. H. P. Kennedy, who owns the property, was questioned regarding the value of the thirty-five and a half acres upon which it is proposed to build the plant, but refused to place a value upon it.

An added Burden.

Mr. Gordon, representing the City of Peterborough, stated that the engineers had found the proposed location the best for the disposal of Peterborough's sewage, and declared that the disposal plant was not a nuisance. Experience with similar plants at Columbus, Mt. Vernon, Baltimore and other places had proved that such was the case. "An extra cost of $25,000 would be levied immediately and greater up-keep cost would be on our shoulders for the future" said Mr. Gordon, "and the danger of breaks and other troubles assoiated with the added length of piping would be very great. In summing up, Mr. Gordon stated that Otonabee relies on the city of Peterborough for its growth and progress, and should be prepared to accept its responsibilities as well. He stated that the plant would cost $100,000, and an extra cost of $25,000 for a trunk sewer would also be levied.

When questioned by Dr. McCullough of the Board as to whether there would be any repetition of the complaints by Otonabee's residents should the city apply for a location further down the river, Deputy Reeve Deyell, who lives near the proposed site, stated that he was quite sure there would be no objections if the site at least half a mile further down the river were chosen. Mr. Deyell, complaining about the expected odors from the disposal plant and the depression in value of his property, which adjoins the site, was asked by Solicitor Gordon whether he was aware that he could collect damages from the city.

Solicitor Peck answered that the law only provided that damages could be granted when the properties are contiguous and that in most cases it would be impossible to collect damages.

The chairman of the Board stated that he was glad to have met the representatives and that he hoped the decision of the Board, which would be granted later, would be satisfactory to all concerned.

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

Those who left for Toronto yesterday in connection with the civic deputation were His Worship Mayor Buller, Aldermen Duffus, Green, Edgar, City Solicitor Gordon, ex-Mayor Bradburn, and ex-Ald. Duncan. Others of the City Council left this morning.

Building Permits.

Three building permits have been taken out within the past two days. They are as follows: N. Nichols, summer kitchen at 212 Barnardo avenue, cost $50; Bradburns Ltd., alterations to King George Hotel, Simcoe street, cost $800, and J. A. Perry for garage at 316 Maitland avenue, cost $25.

Building By-Law.

City Engineer Parsons is still engaged in the preparation of a building by-law suitable to the needs of Peterborough. He has prepared to date about one hundred and twenty pages of material, which he hopes to some day, submit to a civic committee of builders and contractors.

UNUSUAL COMPLICATION IN NEW YORK GAME

Benny Kauff's Jump to the Giants Causes Trouble--Yankees Beat Boston---Another Win for Borland---Detroit's New Phenom

NEW YORK, April 29.—Boston defated New York by the score of thirteen to eight here today in a game that was started after an unusual complication had arisen over New York attempting to play Benny Kauff who jumped to the Giants from the Brooklyn Federal League club just before play was called. Umpire Quigley at first declared the game forfeited to New York when Boston refused to play with Kauff in New York's line-up. Meanwhile Umpire Eason had been in communication with President Tener of the National League, and, according to a statement by Secretary John A. Heydler of the National League reported that he had received instructions to forfei the game to Boston if New York persisted in playing Kauff, whom President Tener had declared ineligible. The clubs then took the field, after Manager McGraw of New York had called attention to the fact that Umpire Quigley had previously declared the game forfeited to New York. Kauff was not in the New York line-up when actual play began.

Under President Tener's ruling as reported by Secretary Heydler, the game stands as played as a victory for Boston. The game was a see-saw affair from start to finish and was called at the end of the seventh on account of darkness. Mages made two triples and a double. Murray hit a home run, triple and singles nd scored four runs. Cather also scored four runs, hitting a homer and two singles. In the fifth inning Gowdy hit a home run with the bases full.

Fred Merkle, the Giants' first baseman, broke his left arm in the sixth inning when he fell trying to field a wild throw by Marquard. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Boston | 13 | 14 | 1 |
| New York | 8 | 14 | 3 |

Batteries — James, Hess, Crutcher, and Gowdy; Marquard and Meyers.

At St. Louis.—Cincinnati beat St. Louis 10 to 9 here to-day in a seesaw game marked by heavy hitting and numerous errors on both sides. Score.

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cincinnati | 10 | 17 | 7 |
| St. Louis | 9 | 11 | 2 |

Batteries—Douglass, Dale, Benton, and Wingo; Doak, Griner and Snyder.

At Philadelphia—Brooklyn hit the delivery of Demaree hard, and, aided by errors of the home team, defeated Philadelphia, today by 7 to 4. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Brooklyn | 7 | 13 | 2 |
| Philadelphia | 4 | 9 | 6 |

Batteries—Dell and Miller; Demaree, Oeschger and Killifer.

Detroit, Mich., April 29. — Earl Hamilton, who was severely injured in an automobile accident last year, pitched his first game of the season for St. Louis to-day, and Detroit beat him 5 to 2. Beland, a recruit, pitched his third consecutive victory and in the three games his opponents totalled only three runs. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| St. Louis | 2 | 7 | 2 |
| Detroit | 5 | 9 | 0 |

Batteries—Hamilton, Wellman and Agnew; Boland and Baker.

At Chicago—Cleveland stopped Chicago's winning streak to-day, defeating the locals five to four, after a ninth inning batting rally, in which they drove Cicotte from the mound. Poor base running by Chicago was another factor in their defeat. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cleveland | 5 | 16 | 1 |
| Chicago | 4 | 13 | 1 |

Batteries—Morton, Coumbe and O'Neill, Billings; Cicotte, Russell and Schalk.

At Boston—Outbatted eight hits to eleven, New York won an erratically played game from Boston to-day, 6 to 4. Hartzell's triple in the fourth inning with three men on bases, proved to be the deciding factor. Speaker was responsible for an unusual play in the second, when, having caught a fly off McHale's bat, he purposely dropped the ball, threw to second, forcing Nunamaker out, and Wagner relayed the ball to Hoblitzell, catching McHale, who had not run out his hit. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| New York | 6 | 8 | 4 |
| Boston | 4 | 11 | 5 |

Batteries—McHale and Nunamaker; Shore, Leonard, Collins and Cady, Thomas.

At Washington—Philadelphia won the third game of the series here today 3 to 1. By bunching a hit and a sacrifice fly with an error in the eighth inning, the visitors broke a 1 to 1 tie and attained a lead which Washington could not overcome. Score:

| | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Philadelphia | 3 | 8 | 3 |
| Washington | 1 | 4 | 2 |

Batteries—Pennock and Lapp; Ayres, Shaw and Henry, Ainsmith.

ODD MOVES MADE BY STARS AT BAT

Batters have their peculiar notions about taking their position at bat, and most of them have some oddities they indulge in just before stepping to the swat station. A few really believe that by going through a certain set of motions and imbecile didos it will bring good luck. Others do it for effect, a grand stand play, or for their own amusement. However, the great baseman of the game rarely indulge in any of this fancy stuff either before or after getting to the plate. Sam Crawford, Lajoie, Honus Wagner, "Home Run" Baker and a few others of our famous batsmen have a very businesslike air about them when taking their position before the hurler. The fact they are there is anfficient to worry any well-balanced hurler.

"Whitie" Lewee, who used to play with Kansas City, had a stunt he always pulled off before hitting at a ball that reminded one of an Indian medicine man going through his mysterious incantations invoking aid from the Fathers of the Great Waters. Just before his turn came to face the pitcher, Lewee would take his cap in his left hand, then, swinging it slowly around, would face the sun; that is, if it was visible; then walk slowly to the plate, step on it with both feet, carefully turn around twice, step back, and then strike.

Cobb Makes Great Fuss.

Ty Cobb makes a great fuss before going to the plate and generally creates a great fuss after reaching it. Ty swings an armful of bats for a real long time before he stalks to the plate, but he only uses one, although many hurlers imagine he still has the armful by the way in which he lambasts the pill. Cobb has some very annoying stunts, annoying to the pitchers, that he pulls off in between balls and srikes, which ever the case might be. He will pose as if ready for the onslaught, then suddenly stoop down and grab a handful of dirt just as the pitcher is about to pitch. Ty doesn't seem to worry whether the ball goes over the plate or not, for Cobb takes a strike about as meek as any man in the league. But he can afford to.

"Lefty" Davis, formerly of Columbus, in the American Association, is another player who goes through some mystifying motions. "Lefty" stalks to the plate, turns his back to the pitcher all right before the catcher proceeds to put a large quantity of tobacco juice on the trade mark of his walloping willow. After this performance Mr. Davis is ready for anything the pitcher may have to offer, for "Lefty" is a hard man to fool.

Latham Hurler Annoyer.

Both the famous "Mike" Kelly and the noted Arlie Latham are given credit for being the first players to take their bats and draw a line indicating his position, or where he would stand and dare the hurler to put the ball within a mile of it. Sometimes after drawing the line Latham would pull his cap over one eye, cross his legs, and lean on his bat, and challenge the pitcher to stock three out of eight over (eight chances those days.) "Cap" Anson never said much before coming to bat, for he, like Cobb, had very little regard for balls or strikes, for he knew he could hit when he was ready. But after hitting, if the umpire's decision robbed him of what he thought was a safe drive or a decision at first went against him, hen you would hear your Uncle Adrain roar a mile away.

A great many batsmen give their little exhibition after they are through batting, or trying to bat. It is always amusing to watch a batsman after he takes three healthy swings at the ball and misses. Very few take it gracefully or without a murmur. The poor manager has to sit on the bench and hear the alibis.

NORWOOD HIGH SCHOOL CLUB

NORWOOD, April 30.—Norwood High School has organized a lacrosse team with the following officers: Hon. President, R. G. Lawlor; President, W. E. Thomson; Captain, H. Ennis; Manager, H. Tudnope; Secretary-Treasurer, E. Hall; Committee, A. Weir, R. Williamson, L. O'Keefe and K. Irwin.

Holberg's Sinking Confirmed.

LERWICK, Scotland, April 30.—The finding yesterday near the south end of this island of a lifebuoy marked Kolberg is believed here to confirm the report made at the time the German cruiser Kolberg was sunk in the battle in the North Sea Jan. 24th.

In his report on the battle in the North Sea last January the British admiral Sir David Beatty, after mentioning the destruction of the armored cruiser Blucher, said the German light cruiser Kolberg also was sunk. The German Government, however, later declared that Admiral Beatty's report concerning the Kolberg was false.

SLOW PITCHERS ARE POOR ONES, SAYS KLEM

ST. LOUIS, April 29.—Before the Cubs left Chicago, Umpire Klem was credited with the assertion that every first-class pitcher he has seen has been a fast worker on the slab. He added that if they have the "goods" they do not have to stop to think or stall for rest, and that only the "necr-pitchers" toil slowly because they haven't the brains to hurry and think at the same time.

Manager Bresnahan does not agree with Klem's ideas, nor does he approve of the official marking such remarks. The manager contends that it is not up to the unpire to say whether a man is a poor twirler just because he performs slowly; and, furthermore, he does not think an umpire should criticize the work of the twirlers.

The Cub leader, for one, does not believe in a pitcher hurrying on the slab, nor does he believe in his loafing; but he does think that a man should be allowed to pitch the way best suited to him. George Pierce, the former Bison twirler, now with the Cubs, is a slow worker, but Bresnahan has not mare any effort to jog him up. He has done the opposite. He has encouraged Pierce to take his time, for when he does he pitches a better article of ball.

Star pitchers in the Notional and American Leagues do not waste any time walking around the rubber, rubbing the ball, stepping to one sine to see the signals, or waiting several seconds before going on the slab.

Nearly all of them are fast workers. Walter Johnson, Jess Tesreau, Jim Scott, Christy Mathewson, Jim Vaughn, Nap Rucker, Fred Pfeffer, Harry Sallee, Rube Benton, Rube Marquard, Grover Alexander, Erskine Mayer, Joe Wood, Dick Rudolph, George Tyler, and Bill James are pitchers who will finish a game in less than 1½ hours, unless the opposition is exceedingly dilatory.

Umpire Klem's object in making his criticism that all good pitchers work fast undoubtedly is to hurry the games that Chicago fans have to be dragged almost unbearably.

KUBAT IS A HOLD OUT

OTTAWA, Ont., April 28—The Ottawa Baseball Club received a surprise in its mail this morning. It came in the form of a letter from Pitcher Frank Kubat, in which the star southpaw of the Canadian league announced that he had made up his mind not to come to Ottawa, but will play professional baseball in and around Chicago. He has a position with the railroad companies there and he states that he would be able to do better by sticking to it rather than coming to the Capital for the Summer.

Kubat intimated incidentally that a subsantial salary increase might induce him to change his mind. However, the Ottawa Club is already up to the $1,400 mark and they do not intend to exceed it. They wired Kubat that he would be suspended unless he forwarded his signed contract at once. Two months ago he accepted terms.

Smykal is working with a similar threat, but Manager Shaughnessy believes both will report when the time comes. They have all been ordered to report at Chatham on or before May 12.

Shaughnessy will go up on the 9th and his pitchers are due the following day. Catcher Artie Lage has written the Ottawa Club asking that he be raded or sold to some other club. He is anxious to come back to the Canadian League and offered to play one of the outfield positions if the Ottawas considered his catching unsatisfactory. Outfielder Fred Rooney, who played for Peterborough last season, has been offered an Ottawa contract and will likely report to replace "Lefty" Rogers.

Lajoie Going Fine, But Fans Can't See Him

PHILADELPHIA, April 29.—Pitchforked into as tough an assignment as ever was drawn by mortal ballplayer, Larry Lajoie is patiently enduring an experience without parallel in all the years he has been playing major league baseball.

For the first time in the almost 20 years he has spent under the big tent, Lajoie finds his home fans almost entirely out of sympathy with him and all his works, more reluctant to grant him the recognition he deserves than if he had done each of them a personal wrong.

Philadelphia is visiting upon Lajoie the resentment it feels toward Connie Mack for disposing of Eddie Collins last winter. If an apponent's hit finds its way through the infield at any point within 30 yards of Lajoie's station many of the fans take a peculiar pleasure in speculating as to what Eddie Collins would have done with the play, and almost invariably they agree that with Collins at second the thing would have been on easy out.

When Larry does field a batted ball the fan makes a point of describing with what infinitely smoother skill Collins would have handled it.

Because Larry did not annihilate seven Boston pitchers and eight or ten Boston infielders while the Red Sox were here last week, these fans decided that Larry had seen his day; that never again would he be the larruping marvel of old, and that in foisting him upon them after Collins had been sold—sold for mere money—Connie Mack had done the glorious fandom of Philadelphia an irreparable wrong. And so most of Philadelphia is "off" Lajoie.

But not all the Quaker City. There are a few fans in town who have been able to see that Larry has "come up" with every batted ball he has been able to reach—and that he has reached more than the average infielder tries for; that he has yet to make a poor throw; that he alone of the entire Athletics team has been untouched by the epidemic of duck flutters that has made the outfit the despair of the dopesters who expected it to be a strong contender despite the things that happened to it last winter.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, April 29.—Wheat averaged lower in price today, affected somewhat by the lack of any important fresh export demand. The market closed unsettled, 5-8c off to 1-8c up, compared with last night. Corn finished at 1-4c decline to a shade advance, oats 1-4c to 3-8c to 1-2c down and provisions varying from a setback of 2 1-2c to a rise of 15c.

| Eggs, new-laid | 0 21 | 0 23 |
| Honey, new | 0 11 | .... |

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

TORONTO, April 29.—Following prices were quoted on the market to-day:

Canadian western oats—No. 2, 71c; No. 3, 69c, bay ports.

Manitoba flour quotations at Toronto are: First patents, $8.20 in cotton and $8.11 in jute; strong bakers, $7.80 in cotton, $7.60 in jute.

Ontario oats—No 2 white, 60c to 61c, outside; 64c to 65c, Toronto.

Buckwheat—70c to 72c.

Bran—Manitoba, $25 to $27, in bags, Toronto, and shorts, $30 to $30, Toronto; middlings, $31 to $33.

Rolled oats—$3.40 to $3.50 per bag.

Barley—Ontario, No. 3, 72c to 75c, outside.

Manitoba wheat — Bay ports, No. 1 northern, $1.65; No. 2, $1.64; No. 3, $1.62, track, Goderich; winter storage, Goderich, ½c per bushel extra.

Corn—New, No. 3 yellow, 85½c, Toronto freight, all rail; for opening of navigation, No. 2, 82½c, c.i.f.; No. 3, 81½c.

Ontario flour—$6.15 to $6.20, nominal, seaboard.

Peas—No. 2, $1.80.

Rye—No. 2, $1.12 to $1.14.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, April 29.—Strength was shown in the local grain market on the appearance of buying orders, few being inclined to sell, and prices advanced ½c to 1¼c from the opening level. Excellent crop prospects generally caused a sagging spell from the high points, but later higher points than in the early hours were reached.

Wheat opened 1¼c lower to ½c higher, oats ½c to ½c lower, and flax unchanged to ¼c higher. Barley was unchanged. Wheat futures closed ¾c to ⅞c lower, corn ⅛c to ⅜c lower, oats ⅛c to ⅜c up, and flax ¼c to ½c up.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, April 29.—There was a slight improvement in the demand from foreign buyers for new crop American wheat and sales of a few loads were made for August-September shipment, but prices bid for Manitoba wheat were out of line. Local trade in coarse grains was slightly more active and sales of No. 4 Manitoba barley were made for shipment from Ft. William at 54c per bushel afloat and No. 1 feed oats 65 1-2c. Trade in oats steady.

Spring wheat flour in fair demand. Local trade in flour quiet. Millfeed steady. Butter 1 1-2c to 2c per pound declined. Cheese firm. Eggs active and firm.

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN MARKET.

MINNEAPOLIS, April 29.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.64½; No. 1 northern, $1.63¾ to $1.61¾; No. 2 do., $1.55¾ to $1.60¾; May, $1.57¾.

Life-long Resident of City is Dead

Was a Veteran of the Fenian Raid —82 Years of Age

Death claimed a well-known resident of Peterborough when Mr. John H. Mowry passed away at the family residence, 297 Sherbrooke Street, this morning at the age of 82 years. He has been ailing some weeks, but the cause of his death was decline, due to his advanced age.

The late Mr. Mowry has been practically a life-long resident of Peterborough, having been born October 10th, 1833, in the Scotch Village (afterwards known as Ashburnham and later as East City), in a house on the east side of the Hunter Street Bridge, known recently as the William Faint property. His father, Marcello Mowry, came to this country from Vermont in 1816, landing first at Kingston, and walked all the way to Cobourg. Here he remained for some time working in Port Hope as a blacksmith, walking back and forth, night and morning. A few years later he moved to a farm on the Communication Road near Bridgenorth, but, preferring work among machinery, he soon came to Scotch Village and started up a machine and blacksmith shop at the north side of Hunter Street, at the end of the bridge. In these shops were erected the first threshing machines made in this vicinity. It was here the first whistle was made and operated that regulated the few old wooden-wheeled timepieces of Peterborough. It gave forth such a piercing note that it could be heard distinctly as far as Bridgenorth.

The late John H. Mowry started to work in his father's shops when he was fifteen years old. An expert moulder and machinist was brought from Rochester, and Mr. Mowry picked up a great deal of information from him during the year he remained with them. When seventeen years of age Mr. Mowry made all the patterns and castings that were used in Charles Perry's mills at Nassau, and the stone grist mill at Lindsay.

Mr. Mowry did not turn a deaf ear to the call of his country to defend its shores against the attacks of the Fenian Raiders, but marched proudly forth with his brave companions from Peterborough to protect the homes of our fair land. His name is thus enrolled among the famous "Veterans of '66."

The late Mr. Mowry was married sixty-two years ago to Miss Selina J. Martyn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Martyn, and she survives him. On February 10, 1913, Mr. and Mrs. Mowry celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary. After their marriage they resided on Mary street, later removing to Burnham street, where they lived for forty years. For a few years they lived in Toronto, but the climate did not suit Mr. Mowry, so they returned to Peterborough, taking up their residence at 297 Sherbrooke street, where Mr. Mowry passed away this morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Mowry have five children living, twenty-six grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren. One grandson, Pte. Mortimer Mowry, is at present with the 21st Battalion at Kingston.

Their children are as follows: Messrs. Marcello Mowry, city; John H., of Chicago; Martyn C. and Richard B. of Toronto, and Mrs. R. J. Weir, Burnham Street, East City.

Mr. Mowry was a Methodist in religion and a member of the Canadian Order of Foresters.

The funeral will take place on Monday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock. Service will be conducted at the residence, 297 Sherbrooke Street, at 2.00 p.m.

WILL ISSUE NEW LICENSES MAY 5TH

They Will Hear the Name of the Provincial Commission

The new licenses for the hotels, shops and clubs will bear the name of the new Provincial commission. Although licensees are now paying their quarterly fee of $400, the new licenses will not be issued to the hotelmen and shopkeepers till after May 5. They are not yet printed. The King's Printer was awaiting for the engravings of the new commissioners' signatures. In the past all licenses issued carried the signature of Mr. Hanna and the local commissioners in which district they were issued.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. T. H. Adams has returned to the city from Hamilton.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Kenneally, Raymond, South Dakota, is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Clancy and other friends of this city, after an absence of thirty years.

After an illness extending over three weeks, Mrs. (Dr.) Young, 305 Stewart Street, wife of Lt.-Col. Young, has recovered sufficiently to enable her to be removed from Nichols Hospital to her home. She is much better, and this morning she was pleased to receive a cable from her husband, Lieut.-Col. Young, M.D., which read as follows: "Arrived safely and well."

A very pleasant evening was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Conroy, Concession street, East City, on Wednesday evening, on the occasion of Mr. and Mrs. Conroy celebrating their silver wedding. A large crowd was present and the evening was spent very pleasantly in dancing, card-playing and other amusements. Mr. and Mrs. Conroy received many congratulations and costly presents.

Splendid Offer to Local Organist And Soloist

Services of Mr. John Allan and Miss Dorothy Allan Wanted at Vancouver

Mr. John Allan, organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's Church, and his daughter, Miss Dorothy Allan, soloist at St. Paul's, have received a splendid offer from St. Andrew's Church, Vancouver, to go there in similar capacities.

St. Andrew's is one of the largest, wealthiest and most important Presbyterian churches in Canada, and is possessed of a magnificent four manual Casavant Organ, with 92 speaking stops, a carillion, and many mechanical devices, and is rightly regarded by organists as the "plum" of the West.

Mr. Allan did not know the position was vacant, as it has not been advertised, until receiving a letter from Professor Pidgeon of Westminster College, one of the Elders of St. Andrew's, a month ago, asking if he would be available.

Rev. E. Leslie Pidgeon, B.A., a former Pastor of Mr. Allan's, at St. Thomas, now minister of St. John's Church, Vancouver, also recommended Mr. Allan most highly.

Mayor Buller also received a telegram from the Mayor of Vancouver enquiring about Mr. and Mrs. Allan.

Mr. Allan naturally feels flattered at St. Andrew's action, coming about as it has done, absolutely without any effort on his part. The splendid organ is undoubtedly a great attraction to Mr. Allan, but the unsettled conditions of things pertaining generally throughout the country just now makes such a big removal a matter for serious consideration. If Mr. Allan does decide to go to Vancouver he would not leave Peterborough until August.

Opening of Canal Delayed to 1916

Obstructions Will Not Be Removed Until Next Spring, Says Minister

Some little time ago citizens were enquiring of the local member when the canal would likely be opened. The question was raised on account of the numerous obstructions remaining in the way. The minister has replied to the effect that submarine dredging the G.T.R. bridge at Campbellford and all other obstructions will be removed in time for the promised opening next spring.

ALLIED ARMIES LAND AND CAPTURE TOWNS IN THE DARDANELLES

Australian and New Zealand Contingents, in the Thick of the Desperate Fighting—Acquitted Themselves Nobly —Casualties Were Heavy.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, May 1.—After very serious fighting, in which the Turks offered a stubborn resistance, British troops have firmly established themselves on the Gallipoli Peninsula and made considerable advance toward the narrows of the Dardanelles, while the French have cleared Cape Kum Kale, on the Asiatic side of the straits, of the Turks. Thus it may be said that the second and most serious attempt to force the Dardanelles has been fairly launched.

In an official statement issued last night, the Admiralty gives the first detailed story of the landing of the troops. The Turks made a desperate [illegible] entrenched positions on the Gallipoli Peninsula as far inward as Krithia, about five miles from the tip.

It is admitted that the landing operations cost the army a heavy toll of lives. It is announced that the casualties in the fleet, which supported the landing parties are small.

THE BRITISH STATEMENT.

The British War Office last night made public an official communication concerning the operations of the allies against the Dardanelles.

"The disembarkation of the army in the Dardanelles began before sunrise on April 25. Six different beaches were used, and the operation was covered by the whole fleet.

"The landing was immediately successful on five beaches, although it was opposed with vigor by a strongly entrenched enemy in successive lines which were protected by barbed wire entanglements, in some places fifty yards wide, and supported by artillery.

"On the sixth beach, near Seddul Bahr, the troops could not advance until evening, when a fine attack by the British infantry from the direction of Cape Tekeh relieved the pressure on their front. The arrangements for landing had been concerted in the utmost detail between the fleet and the army.

"The result of the first day's operations was the establishment of strong British, Australasian and New Zealandforces at three points, namely, the Australian and New Zealand troops on the lower slopes of Sari Bair, to the north of Gaba Tepe; of British troops at Cape Tekeh, at Cape Helles and near Morto Bay, and of a French force on the Asiatic shore at Kum Kale, after a gallant attack toward Yeni Shehr.

DISEMBARKING THE ARMY.

"During the afternoon of the 26th strong counter-attacks by the enemy began and hard fighting took place. Meanwhile the disembarkation of the army proceeded, and was continually favoured by good weather.

"At daybreak on the 25th the enemy was still holding the village and position of Seddul Bahr, which was a labyrinth of caves, ruins, trenches, pits and entanglements. Aided by the gunfire of the fleet this position was stormed by the British in frontal attack through undamaged wire entanglements Seddul Bahr was taken about 2 p.m., four pom-pons being captured. The situation at this end of the peninsula thus was definitely secured and the disembarkation of French and British forces proceeded.

"On the morning of the 27th, after repulsing a Turkish attack upon their left towards Cape Helles, the allied force advanced, and at 8 p.m. was established in an entrenched line running from a point about two miles north of Cape Tekeh to a small plateau above De Tots battery. From this line an advance since has been made to the neighbourhood of Krithia.

WORK OF THE AUSTRALIANS.

"Meanwhile the Australian and New Zealand troops at Sari Bair, who pushed on with the utmost boldness, after the landing on the 25th had been engaged almost constantly with the enemy, who made strong repeated counter-attacks which invariably were repulsed. The Australian and New Zealand troops fought with a fine spirit of determination.

"On the morning of the 27th a fresh Turkish division was launched against Sari Bair, preceded by a heavy artillery fire. A hot engagement followed. The enemy came on boldly time after time, but the Australian and New Zealand troops defeated their every attempt and by 3 p.m. had resumed the offensive.

"The French troops at Kum Kale also were four times strongly counter-attacked on the 26th, but retained all their positions. Five hundred Turks who, in the course of one of these counter-attacks, were cut off by the fire of the fleet were made prisoners.

TURKISH OFFICIAL STATEMENT

Special to The Examiner:

CONSTANTINOPLE, via wireless, May 1.—The Turkish official statement, issued to-day reviewing operations in the Dardanelles, claims land batteries have sunk a British destroyer, badly damaged the French battleship "Jeanne D'Arc" and the British battleships "Triumph," "Majestic" and "Vengeance." It also declares one British transport has been driven on shore and several sail boats loaded with soldiers have been sunk.

NEW STRENGTH IN THE SPRING

Nature Needs Aid in Making New Health-Giving Blood

In the spring the system needs a tonic. To be healthy you must have new blood, just as the trees must have new sap to renew their vitality. Nature demands it, and without this new blood you will feel weak and languid. You may have twinges of rheumatism or the sharp stabbing pains of neuralgia. Often there are disfiguring pimples or eruptions on the skin. In other cases there is merely a feeling of tiredness and a variable appetite. Any of these are signs that the blood is out of order—that the indoor life of winter has lessened your vitality. What you need in spring is a tonic medicine to put you right, and in all the world of medicine there is no tonic can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills actually make new rich, red blood—your greatest need in spring. This new blood drives out the seeds of disease and makes easily tired men, women, and children bright, active and strong. Miss Edith Brousseau, Savona, B.C., says: "I was as pale as a ghost, suffered from headaches, severe palpitation of the heart at the slightest exertion. I had little or no appetite and seemed to be drifting into a decline. I was attending High School in Vancouver at the time and the doctor advised me to stop. I did so and took his treatment for some time, but it did not help me in the least. Upon the advice of a friend I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and in a very short time they gave me back complete health, and enabled me to resume my studies. I have enjoyed the best of health since, and owe it all to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

These Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or can be had by mail a 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. Brockville, Ont.

Will Identify Canadian Dead

Provision to Permit Removal of Bodies to Canada

OTTAWA, May 1. — Arrangements for the identification of Canadian soldiers killed in battle with a view to the return of their remains for interment at home if their relatives so desire will be made as a result of representations by General Hughes, Minister of Militia, to the British authorities. The Minister of Militia suggested that some distinguished feature should be placed with every soldier buried in France. During the South African war the method adopted was the inscripion of the soldier's name on a sheet of paper, but this was made possible by the exceptionally dry climatic conditions. Other methods have been to place the name and address in a bottle which is buried with the soldier, while still a third which has been recommended in this case, is to establish identification by means of perforations in the soldiers clothing at burial. As for outward marking of the graves, that is impracticable in many cases, since such signs would be obliterated. It will, of course, be easiest of all to record the soldier's identity on his uniform while living, but this is contrary to modern military practice, as it would afford the enemy into whose hands the dead might fall an opportunity of ascertaining the location of different units.

LIEUT. FESSENDEN REPORTED MISSING

Was An Officer in the 48th Highlanders, Toronto

In the list of casualties issued this morning the only Peterborough name appearing is that of Lieut. C. V. Fessenden, of the 48th Highlanders, Toronto, who is reported missing. Lieut. Fessenden is a son of Mr. C. Fessenden, of the local Collegiate Institute staff.

JESUS COLLEGE BANS ALCOHOLIC DRINKS.

OXFORD, April 30.—It was announced to-day that Jesus College has decided to ban alcoholic beverages while the war continues.

Similar action as been taken by Oriel.

It is expected other colleges will do likewise, and that the entire university will soon bar alcoholic drinks.

A Difference to be Considered

The difference in cost between a pure, wholesome cream of tartar baking powder and one made of alum is a mere trifle, perhaps one cent for a whole cake or pan of biscuits.

But there is a vast difference in healthfulness in favor of food made with Royal Baking Powder.

Read the label on your can of baking powder and see what it is made of. There is

FRENCH MAKE PROGRESS ALONG THE ENTIRE FRONT NORTH OF YPRES

Berlin's Claim That Germans Had Re-captured the Alsatian Peak of Hartmanns-Weilerkopf is Disproved —British Operations Confined to Artillery Engagements

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, Saturday, May 1.—The Rotterdam correspondent of the Daily Mail, says:

The fighting in Flanders is practically limited to attack on the German bridge-head at Steenstraate. This point has been greatly strengthened and so far the efforts of the allies have failed to dislodge the Germans.

Yesterday and to-day allied aeroplanes have been active on the coast. Bombs were dropped on Ostend.

The enemy is now making extensive use of cavalry to relieve the exhausted infantry. Large forces of mounted men have left the Dutch frontier for the Ypres area.

BRITISH ARMY RESTING.

The semi-weekly report from the headquarters in the field of the British Commander-in-Chief, Field Marshal Sir John French, dated April 30, was given out here last night as follows:

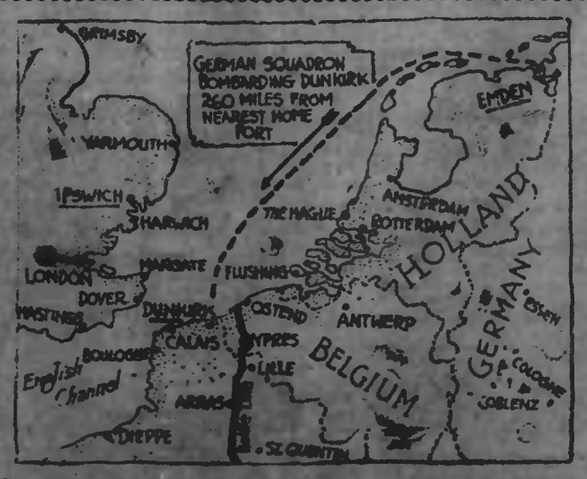
"The situation on our front has remained unchanged during the last 48 hours. The area in the neighbourhood of Ypres has been the scene of great artillery activity throughout this period, but there have been no other operations so far as the British army is concerned.

"On our immediate left the French made counter-attacks yesterday, supported by our artillery fire, which made sensible progress.

"Yesterday a German aeroplane was attacked in the air and, fired at by our guns, was brought down at our lines east of Ypres.

"Successful mining operations have been carried out south-west of Wytschaete and in the neighbourhood of Givenchy."

The French War Office states that Frederick Palmer, Associated Press correspondent, visited the summit of Hartmanns-Weilerkopf yesterday, thus disproving the Berlin claim that the Germans had recaptured the Alsatian peak. It also states that in Belgium, to the north of Ypres, the French have progressed along the whole front to a depth of two-thirds of a mile.



THE SITUATION NEAR YPRES. — The Allies have been reported since the Langemarck fight to have made slight gains northward of Ypres, but the map shows that the Germans still retain most of the ground they gained in this region.

The Russian Situation Is Unchanged

Special to The Examiner:

VIENNA, May 1—(Via Wireless)—The War Office, in its official statement, issued to-day, characterizes the general situation as unchanged. It says: "There has been little change in the situation on the Russian Polish and Carpathian fronts. A Russian attack in Opor Valley has been repulsed; elsewhere there have been only artillery duels."

Ten Per Cent Increase To All Miners

LONDON, May 1.—An offer of the Mine Owners Association of ten per cent. increase to all classes of mine employes, was rejected by the Miners' Federation, who demand 20 per cent. It has been decided to leave the whole matter to the decision of Premier Asquith and there will be no strike.

Ban of Alcohol Falls Lightly on King George

British Monarch Seldom Drinks Anything But Distilled Waters With His Meals

The banning of alcohol from the royal household will fall rather lightly on King George, who, according to court officials, is almost an abstainer even in normal times. He has occasionally taken a small glass of claret with his luncheon, but more often he preferred aerated water. At dinner, burgandy and champagne were always served, but the king frequently tasted neither one, and never indulged in more than a minute quantity.

The queen's taste in alcoholic beverages is as restricted as the king's, while Princess Mary scarcely knows the taste of wine.

Since the ban on alcoholics at court was promulgated, the energies of the kitchen staff have been turned to devising various palatable temperance drinks. The usual parchment "wine list" is still made out daily and laid on the king's table in its customary silver frame, but the list of available drinks is limited to lemonade, ginger beer, soda water, fruit cups, and the king's favourite, barley water.

Although the royal wine cellars, with their almost priceless store of vintage wines, are technically fastened up for the duration of the war, they are not really kept sealed, for periodical entrances have to be made, as special temperatures and humidities must be maintained in various compartments, according to the character of the wines stored there.

But it is fairly certain that not a single bottle will be opened, nor any tap of the countless great barrels turned, until the king gives the word. For the royal cellars are managed in business-like fashion, and every pint removed from shelf or cask must be shown on the ledgers with proper indorsement.

For the present, all these ledgers and stock books are clasped on their shelves, and the bookkeepers and wine butler's assistants have been assigned to other duties about the palace. The king was most particular to direct that no one employed in the wine cellars should be dismissed as a result of the ban on alcohol. Other posts were found, at the same wages, for all those displaced, some in the new kitchen department, which provides lemonade and barley water for the court.

The king's ban does not prevent any member of the royal household from purchasing and drinking alcoholic liquors outside the palace, but as a matter of fact, the majority of the household staff have followed the royal example of total abstinence throughout the war.

It is rather curious to note, however, that alcoholic drinks of all kinds can still be obtained within what are legally the palace grounds. The "verge" of Buckingham palace, which is administered by the lord steward's department, stretches in two places as far as the Thames, and embraces considerable business property, including a number of saloons.

The licenses of these are controlled by the king's board-of-the-green-cloth, and the master of the royal household is the chairman of the licensing court, which has just held its annual session and approved the renewal of all the licenses. Thus there is the anomaly of the royal potentate residence under the control of which licenses for the sale of intoxicants have just been issued.

FOR THE KIDNEYS

A Guaranteed Treatment. Money Back If It Fails

Kidney diseases are more prevalent than is generally supposed, and are not always recognized as such. What was at first but a slight derangement of the kidneys often results in indigestion, rheumatism, anaemia, chronic and very painful headache, neuralgia, eye weakness, and other diseases of a most aggravating type. Therefore it is highly important and absolutely necessary that the kidneys and the urinary system be kept in an active and healthy condition.

After a thorough experience with the most successful forms of kidney treatment, we are confident that the one remedy which embraces the most desirable, safe and efficacious curative qualities, so necessary to the successful treatment and positive eradication of kidney diseases in general, is Rexall Kidney Pills.

We are so positive that Rexall Kidney Pills are unexcelled, and that they will do all we claim, that we sell them with our own personal guarantee that they shall not cost the user a cent if they should fail to give entire satisfaction.

We particularly recommend Rexall Kidney Pills, for kidney ailments that resist ordinary treatment. We believe, if taken according to directions with regularity and persistency for a reasonable length of time, they will positively remove all symptoms and effect permanent relief.

Surely we could not more strongly demonstrate our faith in Rexall Kidney Pils, and our generous guarantee should convince the most sceptical that we would not dare make such a [illegible] we are talking about. We urge you to try Rexall Kidney Pills at our risk. Price 50c. Sold in this community only at our store.—The Rexall Store.

Aged, Wrinkled Face Easily Rejuvenated

An aged face is often only a mask to a comparatively youthful person. Beneath is a countenance young and fair to look upon. It's a simple matter to remove the mask. Ordinary mercolized wax, to be had at any drug store, gradually absorbs the worn-out surface skin; in a week or two the user has the loveliest pinky white complexion imaginable. An ounce of the wax usually is sufficient to complete the transformation. It is put on at night like cold cream and taken off in the morning with warm water.

This remarkable treatment is invariably effective, no matter how muddy, sallow or discoloured the complexion. Freckles, moth-patches, liver spots, pimples, blackhead and other cutaneous blemishes, naturally vanish with the discarded skin.

To remove wrinkles, here is a recipe that cannot be too highly recommended: Powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pint witch hazel. Use as a wash lotion. It acts instantaneously and is wonderfully effective.

Probably nothing would afford the small boy more pleasure than the privilege of assuming the role of father to the man occasionally.

Lieut. Gee. Richardson, of Kingston, reported wounded in France. He is one of the greatest hockey players Canada ever produced.

SHORTAGE OF TORPEDOES

The Enemy's Submarines Have Been Very Prodigal of These Weapons

If we could only get behind the scenes we should find, the London Daily Telegraph's naval writer is convinced, that Germany has suffered very heavy losses of submarines that she has not more than about three dozen remaining, of which about a dozen, are of the seagoing type; and that she is running short of the very effective torpedoes with T.N.T. which were used in the early days of the war. It is impossible even to estimate the number of these weapons which have been used, both in the seaways round the British coasts and off Belgium, and which have failed to hit anything;; but the number must, from all accounts coming from the British fleet, be so large as to have made appreciable inroads on the enemy's reserves. Torpedoes cannot be turned out rapidly like rifles; they are completely equipped automobile vessels of very delicate construction. In engineering details they are beautifully contrived. It must be apparent that torpedoes are not to be turned out rapidly by the thousand. The mere fact that a single one of the 21-inch type costs about $5,000 is proof of the niceness of the work involved in manufacture. I am convinced that the Germans have already made such demands on their supplies of torpedoes that they think it wise to fall back for their submarine operations on older and less powerful types which they had by them, and which they never expected circumstances would force them to employ.

A BRITISH CAPTAIN ON A GERMAN BOAT

Von Weddigen Entertained Skipper on the U-29 While Sinking His Ship

"Give our respects to your Mr. Churchill." These were the last words of Captain von Weddigen of the U-29 to Captain Leonard Malley of the Ellerman liner Andalusian as the crew of the Andalusian put off from the submarine which had just completed the destruction of their vessel. Captain Malley was able to smile at the cynical bravado of Captain Weddigen as he talked to a correspondent in his home near Liverpool, sitting, with a smashed leg in splints, propped up on a chair.

"I was the last to leave my ship," he said, "and as I slid down the rope to a small boat a big wave heaved the boat up and caught me between the boat and the ship and smashed my leg." The captain of the submarine took me aboard and down into [illegible] cigars and port while the crew of the submarine opened the injector valve of the Andalusian and set her afire.

"They did not fire a torpedo, as Captain Weddigen said. Opening a valve and setting the ship afire was a much cheaper way of getting rid of the ship. When I went aboard the submarine I thought I recognised the commander from pictures, and asked him if he were not the man who had sunk the Aboukir, the Cressy and the Hogue.

COMMANDER OTTO WEDDIGEN

"'The same,' he replied. 'I was commanding the U-9 then, and now I have the U-29, which is the last word in German submarine construction. We have two machine guns, instead of one, and on the surface we can catch anything up to 17 knots.'

"He was very courteous to us, and I tried to be as courteous to him, but I took the opportunity of telling him as politely as I could what I thought of German policy toward merchant shipping. He said: 'It's our duty, but at the same time we don't want to take civilian lives. It's ships we want.'

"He seemed greatly distressed that there should be war, but considered it inevitable. 'It's an awful business,' he said, 'but I hope it will soon be over. England and Germany ought to be allies, not enemies.'

"While I was below with the commander the crew of the Andalusian was massed on deck of the submarine with two sailors each with two revolvers standing guard over them. One of the officers of the submarine passed cigars around among the Andalusian's crew and they had to stand there on the deck of the submarine for nearly an hour and watch their own vessel a couple of hundred yards away burning to the water's edge. Finally we were all put in our own boats and transferred to a French barkentine, which in turn put us aboard a British ship that landed us at St. Mary's."

Neuve Chapelle and Waterloo

British casualties at Neuve Chapelle mark that battle as more costly to British arms than any conflict prior to the present war. Here is how it compares with Waterloo:

| | Killed and Missing | Wounded | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| Chapelle ... | 4,373 | 8,533 | 12,811 |
| Waterloo ... | 3,009 | 4,922 | 6,922 |

The total casualties of Britain and her ally at Waterloo were 22,976.

At Paardeburg the British casualties were only 1,440 and at Colenso 1,160, so that the South African battles are in a different class altogether from that at Neuve Chapelle.

TRICKS OF BULLETS

Occasionally They Defy All Rules and Make Seemingly Impossible Flights

It has been truly said that, once you fire a bullet from a modern rifle none can forecast what it will do or where it will ultimately come to rest. Even when a bullet has an uninterrupted course, says Mr. Frank Scudamore, in the London Globe, it is capable of upsetting all known calculations of its flight and range. Before the Battle of Omdurman a rick officer was taken across the Nile and placed undtr an awning at least 5,500 yards from the nearest point of possible fire. This should have ensured him an ample margin of safety, but none the less a stray bullet ate up the intervening three miles of desert, struck him in the head, and killed him.

Shortly before the Battle of Ginise, in Sudan, General Sir Archibald Hunter, Colonel Hacket-Thompson, C.B., and another officer whose name escapes me were reconnoitring through an opening in the wall of a disused sakeeyeh, or waterwheel. The hole in the wall was so small that the officers had to stand one behind the other to see anything. The officer whose name I forget was in front using a pair of binoculars, while Sir Archibald Hunter was in the rear. The glint caused by the setting sun shining on the glass of the binoculars attracted the attention of a dervish who, together with others, was retiring along the Nile. He stopped, took aim, and fired. It was a very good shot, for it sped through one lens of the binoculars, through the brain of the officer holding them, killing him on the spot, through the shoulder of Colonel Hacket-Thompson, and finally lodged in the breast of Sir Archibald Hunter, where, I believe, it remains to this day.

The vagaries of a bullet when it touches the human frame are almost beyond belief. During another Sudan battle I saw an officer, a friend of mine, go down apparently shot through the head. To my surprise and relief I met him walking about after the battle apparently none the worse, save that his head was bandaged. Then he showed me how a bullet, striking and deflected by one of the hooks of his helmet chain, had run right round his forehead, cutting a groove under the skin, and had then glanced off the helmet hook on the other side.

CRANK INVENTORS

One Sings Praises of a Gun That Hurls Sneezing Powder

Would-be inventors of new devices to wipe out whole armies at a clip, sink powerful dreadnoughts, reduce big Zeppelins to powdered form, guns that will carry great distances, fade-away howitzers, etc., are haunting the offices of London patent agents day and night. The war has caused inventors' ingenuity to run riot. Here are a few inventions from the clever brains of engineers and others:

New gun that will bag a Zeppelin at any height, with an ingenious range-finder.

A dozen or more types of submarines. One has a magnetic nose and cannot miss the mark. The armor plate on the vessel draws the torpedo right to it, even if the gunner does shoot a few hundred yards to the left.

A gun that can fire a projectile miles beyond the range of the biggest guns now used by Germany.

Projectiles that carry all kinds of acids and chemicals that put soldiers into their death sleep if they take a sniff. One inventor with long hair and green eyes would like to finance a company to make a projectile that carries tons of snuff. On explosion regiments are thrown into violent fits of sneezing and taken prisoners before they can recover.

Aeroplanes that can be perforated with bullets and still navigate.

Mines of all shapes and sizes, guaranteed to annihilate whole cities and make a fleet of battleships good material for the scrap heap.

Royal Assent as granted to bills that have passed through both Houses of the British Parliament is still written in the French language.

German Helmet a "Hoodoo"

Driver Fred Rogerson, of Preston, England, says that a German helmet is regarded as a very bad omen in his battery. "A gunner of ours got a helmet at Chevny; the next time we came into action he was killed. The helmet changed hands, this time to a corporal, who had his horse's head and his own leg blown off by the enemy's shell. Again the helmet was given to a gunner, who has his head blown off at the battle of the Aisne. The helmet then passed to a sergeant-major, who was killed at Ypres. Since then," adds Rogerson, "no one who has been with us long will touch one."

Attitude of Japan Towards China Scored

LONDON, April 30.—In an outspoken editorial article, the Daily News vigorously condemns Japan's attitude towards China. It says:

"Japan's demands in their new, as [illegible] fold judgment that they conflict with the established rights of other powers, they violate the principles of equal rights, and they are inconsistent with either the integrity or sovereignty of China. The net effect of acceptance by China would be that China would in time become something very like a dependency of Japan, and Japan would have it in her power to drive a wedge between north and south and deny at pleasure to a central government, military means of asserting its authority.

British Interests Involved.

"Now that the Foreign Office has so far unbent itself as to allow us to know what is being demanded of China, perhaps it will unbend a little further and let the country know how it regards those demands. Not only are British material interests involved, but also our relations with regard to other countries.

"There need be no surprise that the Chinese are disappointed at the revised version, which does not fit in with Count Okuma's hints of serious modifications. There is not a people in the world, however mild in temper, which would not be stirred to the very depths by such demands as Japan is now pressing.

Japan Warned.

"The European war has given Japan a tempting opportunity, and possibly no other great power would [illegible] wisdom in moderation as well as in promptitude, and the Japanese Government would do well to consider whether it is taking a long view in exploiting its chance so miserably. There is the future as well as the present to be taken into the reckoning."

The Stubborn Battle For Ypres.—Het Sas and Liserne were recently recaptured after the Langemarck defeat, by the allies. The battle line shows Ypres is now being attacked from three angles.

RESPIRATORS GALORE.

Enough Now Ready For British and French Troops.

LONDON, April 30.—A remarkable response has been made by the public to the appeal for respirators to protect the British soldiers in the field against the gases employed by the Germans. The War Office announced yesterday that it already had received a sufficient number of these respirators, and that no more were needed.

La Liberte, of Paris, states that the Government has ordered a large number of special masks to protect the troops from asphyxiation by gases from the new German shells.

Eugene Turpin, the inventor of melinite, said last night:

"The French army can combat the new danger by pumping liquid ammonia into the gas clouds as soon as they approach the trenches."

Cannot Lure Riley Back.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., April 30.—Thomas M. Riley, of Everton, Mo., released from prison in Ontario, Canada, on a pardon which Canadian officials maintain was intended for another, refuses to return to the Dominion to serve the fourteen years remaining of a fifteen-year sentence.

He made this declaration yesterday to Rev. H. H. Bingham, who came here from Canada to plead with Riley voluntarily to return to prison.

Advise American Tourists.

KINGSTON, April 30. — United States Consul Johnson has sent a statement to Washington for the benefit of American tourists who intend visiting Canada this coming summer. He advises all German-Americans to bring their naturalization papers along lest they be held up by immigration officers on the Canadian border.

German Steamer Sunk.

LIMA, Peru, April [illegible] — A despatch to La Prenza last night states that the British steamer Oreoma has sunk a German merchant steamship near Bayovar. It is also stated that the British cruisers Kent and Orama have received coal from the British steamer Eggesford at the port of Bayovar.

The last report received from the Orcoma was to the effect that she had arrived in Liverpool Feb. 16 from Valparaiso. It is possible that since then she has been armed and sent back to South American waters.

SPAIN GETTING READY?

She Is To Buy Cartridges, Automobiles and Aeroplanes.

NEW YORK, April 30.—Spain is also preparing for possible war.

A special commission of the Spanish Government, it was learned, has opened headquarters in New York for the purpose of buying 250,000,000 cartridges, several thousand war automobiles, and a large flotilla of aeroplanes.

The commission is also expected to order a number of submarines. They are to be of two tonnages, a large type for ocean cruisings and a smaller craft for the shallower waters of the Mediterranean.

The Bank of Spain has established large deposits for the purchase of war supplies with the National City and First National Banks.

CRACOW IS MENACED.

And Germans Want It Put In Condition of Defence.

LONDON, April 30. — The Daily Mail's Warsaw correspondent telegraphs, via Petrograd:

"As a result of difference of opinion, such as caused the downfall of Peremysl, Archduke Frederick and Gen. von Hindenburg are now declared to be at loggerheads, as to the best method of conducting the defence of Cracow, which it is believed may be threatened by the middle of June.

The Prussians declare the city is more vital to German than to Austrian interests and demand forthwith a radical thinning of the population, coupled with the subordination of everything to military requirements.

CIRCULARS DISTRIBUTED.

Germans Take Advantage of Women's Congress at Hague.

THE HAGUE, April 30.—The entire session yesterday of the International Congress of Women was devoted to the discussion and adoption of two resolutions. The first provided for democratic control in framing the foreign policies of nations. As amended and adopted, this resolution recommended the nullification of all secret treaties and the participation in the adoption of future treaties, of the people, at least through the legislative branches of Governments.

The second resolution, presented by Miss Emily Balch of Wellesley College, opposed the transfer of territory from one nation to another without the consent of the inhabitants.

Large quantities of pamphlets dealing with conditions in Poland were distributed among the delegates. This aroused some feeling on the part of the women who characterized it as anti-Russian propaganda emanating from German sources. Dr. Zofia Golinska, of Munich, and Emily Napieralski, of Chicago, made speeches in support of the movement for the freedom of the Poles.

FRECKLE-FACE

Sun and Wind Bring Out Ugly Spots. How to Remove Easily.

Here's a chance, Miss Freckle-face, to try a remedy for freckles with the guarantee of a reliable dealer that it will not cost you a penny unless it removes the freckles; while if it does give you a clear complexion the expense is trifling.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from any druggist and a few applications should show you how easy it is to rid yourself of the homely freckles and get a beautiful complexion. Rarely is more than one ounce needed for the worst case.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine as this is the prescription sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

The Green Flames.

The greatest discovery of borax ever made was the result of the purest chance. A number of years ago a man named Aaron Winters was prospecting for gold or other precious metals in that American inferno known as Death valley. He had his wife with him, and they two worked together until their provisions were at an end; then, bitterly disappointed at their ill success, they started back toward civilization. The first night they camped in Ash valley. Here they lit a fire and prepared to cook their supper. Mrs. Winters called her husband's attention to the peculiar green tinge of the flames. He did not speak, but with shaking hands scratched away the earth and suddenly shouted: "We're rich, Rose; we're rich! It's borax!" He was right. They subsequently sold their claim for a very large sum.

British Field Marshals.

A British field marshal never retires from the army. He may be placed on half pay, but is still borne on the active list. By the regulations there must not be more than eight field marshals receiving pay as such—that is, exclusive of honorary field marshals, such as foreign kings, emperors and princes. Of the eight regular field marshals two must be selected from the Indian army. The position of field marshal is a great one. The field marshal commanding in chief in the Mediterranean gets £5,000 a year. Probably a field marshal actively employed will get at least £3,000 a year. This is better than the pay of an admiral of the fleet, who may be said to be a naval field marshal, and gets only a little over £2,000 a year, exclusive of allowances.—Ireland's Own.

Recovered From Wounds; Then Killed in Action.—Wm. John Dixsee, of Second Overseas Battalion, killed at Langemarck on March 3rd. He was reported wounded, but he apparently recovered and returned to the front in time for the great battle in which he fell. He was thrice Mayor of Campbellford, Ont., and a very prominent citizen of Eastern Ontario.

Life Insurance In a Crisis

Every time a great Crisis occurs LIFE INSURANCE has an opportunity to show what a giant of trength it is. Tremendous burdens are placed upon its shoulders, but it never shirks, never hesitates or groans.

When the Titanic took its awful plunge, carrying 1500 human souls into the deep, thousands of widows and orphans were left throughout the world. LIFE INSURANCE accepted the burden without the quiver of a muscle, and spread its protection around the Globe.

When seven years ago the financial world was labouring under an attack of indigestion due to unliquezied securities, and people could not get even their own money out of the Savings Banks, LIFE INSURANCE furnished spot cash to its policy holders upon application.

To-day when a gigantic struggle wages across the Seas and it is difficult to get loans from banks or money lenders, they find the solution again in LIFE INSURANCE.

It is to-day saving thousands of men all over the world, not only embarrassment but actual failure.

LIFE INSURANCE protects your wife and family.
" " will meet their needs when you are gone.
" " is always a resource.
" " contributes to your estate.
" " increases your savings.
" " increases the savings habit.

Money invested in LIFE INSURANCE is sure to come back to you or your family.

Your credit is made better by the amount of LIFE INSURANCE you carry.

The need for LIFE INSURANCE to every man with a family is as fixed as the daily need for bread, and that need is well met by a policy in THE SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA.

New Way to Curl Hair Without Heated Irons

Hair tortured with the curling iron is bound to become dry, harsh and brittle, as so many know from sad experience. It's far more sensible to use plain liquid silmerine, which can do no harm and which produces the loveliest wavy effect imaginable. It takes no little time to apply the silmerine and the hair can be made to curl in any form, to any extent, to conform with any style of hair-dressing. A few ounces from the druggist will last a long time, so it is not at all expensive. Liquid silmerine is not greasy or sticky and it doesn't stain or streak the hair or the scalp.

A convenient way to use it is to pour about two tablespoonfuls into a saucer and then with a clean tooth brush apply evenly to the hair from root to tip. If this is done before retiring the added glory to one's "crowning glory" will be quite in evidence in the morning.

NATURE AND MEDICINES

Nature and Medicine: To the recent graduate from a modern medical college all country doctors are old fogies and most of the men who graduated from other colleges are still in the dark ages of medicine. Recently I read an article in one of the standard medical publications, evidently written by a graduate of this kind, and he spoke of the past age of medical darkness in which the herbs and simples were used in the treatment of sickness. Now I do suppose that if this man was called to attend one of your children he would at once inject some form of serum or vaccinate in some manner, in order to kill the germs of the disease while as a matter of fact the germs do not cause the disease at all, and so far as the serum is of value in aiding Nature to cure anything I prefer to take chances with the non-poisonous simples.

Now, I will admit this much. If the man who treats acute attacks like diphtheria will use only the ingredients with which he sterilizes and preserves his serum and inject that only, he will destroy much of the ptomaines that are permitting the germs to propagate and Nature will then quickly destroy them.

A real scientist recently isolated a substance fro mthe polishing of rice. This substance he called "Vitamines." There was only ten grains of it in a ton of rice and yet its removal from the exclusive rice diet of the natives in the tropical countries caused a serious disease with which the medical profession was unable to successfully contend, by restoring this apparently infinitismal quantity of vital element to the food the patients recovered.

The same results are obtained in other conditions through the use of the old-fashioned herbs and simples of the old apothecary and the good old grandmothers. By them a certain herb is credited with certain curative powers and they get the desired results through its use, then comes the chemist and takes the humble herb to his laboratory in order to find out wherein the cure is to be found and why. He bakes and boils and stews and distils, he sterilizes the extracts, reduces and extracts again with the result that the real curative element is lost in the scuffle and he reports that the curative power is a myth. He can find nothing that would have an effect such as claimed for the little herb and says it is one more of the superstitions of medical darkness exposed by the light of modern science and chemistry, but the old grandmother goes right on successfully relieving pains and aches and fighting off death with the humble little wayside plant in which an Allwise Creator has secreted a tiny speck of a chemical compound prepared in the mysterious laboratory of Nature for the purpose of giving health and strength to some one of the ductless glands and when that natural chemical compound is not destroyed or left out in the preparation of the remedy it does the work with no chance of killing the patient or of injecting into the pure blood stream of an innocent child some vile substance that may cause lifelong suffering and possibly immediate death.

I am a thorough believer in real scientific investigation into all manner of diseases and causes of diseases, but I believe that we have gone so far that it has caused us to lose sight of the fact that the laboratory of Nature is the greatest on earth and from it we get our best and most reliable remedies.

SOME VERY CHOICE RECIPES

Nut Gingerbraid.

Cream together cup of butter, 1-2 cup of lard and 1 cup of sugar; add 1 cup of good molasses and 1 cup of sour cream (1 cup of soer milk may be used in place of the cream); beat thoroughly, then add 1 tablespoon of ginger, 1 teaspoon cinnamon an a cup of nut meats that have been cut into small bits; dissolve a small teaspoon of soda in a little lukewarm water and stir in; use enough flour to make a soft dough that can be rolled; flour the pastry board well and roll out to the thickness of about an inch (if you do not wish a thick cake); cut into squares and cover the top with chopped nuts and a little sugar; bake in a quick oven. If desired, an egg or two may be added to the batter.

Graham Muffins.

Please try these if you have never made any like them. Mix together 1 cup graham flour unsifted, 1-2 cup white flour, 1 heaping teaspoon Indian meal, 2 heaping teaspoons baking powder, 1-2 or 3-3 cup sugar and 1 teaspoon salt. Then add 1 full cup milk, 1 beaten egg and 1 tablespoon melted butter. Bake in moderate oven.

Boiled Rhubarb Pudding.

Chop enough rhubarb to weigh half a pound. Put it into a basin, add five cupfuls of sifted flour, half a cup of finely chopped suet, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one of sugar, a stiff batter; tie in a floured cloth, put in boiling water and boil for three hours and a half. Serve with hard sauce.

Hot Water Sponge Cake.

Beat the yolks of three eggs and add to them one cup of sugar. When well blended fold in one cup of flour sifted with one level teaspoonful of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Two tablespoons hot water will be needed to thin the batter, also one tablespoonful of lemon juice, and the whites of three eggs.

Banana Sherbet.

Put two quarts of scalded and cooled milk in a freezer, add one-half pint of heavy cream, three cups of sugar, the strained juice of four lemons and six bananas peeled, scraped and pressed through a sieve. Pack in ice and salt and freeze.

Marshmallow Dessert.

Cut one-half a pound of marshmallows into small pieces, then add to them one cup of whipped cream, one and one-half tablespoonfuls of sugar, the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs, one cup of sliced bananas, one cup of chopped nut meats, and flavour to taste. Set in a very cool place for one and one-half hours, then serve in glasses.

Oatmeal Bread.

Pour two cups of actually boiling water over one cup of oat flakes, one-half cup sugar, two tablespoons of butter, and one teaspoon of salt. Cover and let stand until tepid; then add one-half of a compressed yeast cake, which has been dissolved in one-quarter cup lukewarm water. Stir all together, add four cups wheat flour, stir well with a spoon and put in a warm place to rise. When light, put in two well-greased pans and let rise again until light. Bake in a moderate oven until very well done. Very simple, as it does not rise over night and requires no kneading.

Eggs a la Creme.

Boil twelve eggs just hard enough to cut up into slices; cover the bottom of a baking dish with crumbs of grated bread; upon these place a layer of eggs, strewing each such layer with breadcrumbs, pepper, and salt; put a quarter of a pound of fresh butter, with a little flour well rubbed into it, in a saucepan, with a little chopped parsley (if liked and in season), salt, pepper,, and half a pint of sweet cream; stir it over the fire until it begins to boil; then pour at once over the eggs and put it in the oven, and when nicely browned, send to table. Nice luncheon dish.

TO REMOVE GREASE STAINS

To remove grease stains from wallpaper mix pipeclay with water to the consistency of cream, spread over the stain and allow to remain for two days, then remove with a stiff brush, and the stains will have disappeared.

This [illegible] is a nice cheese pudding, much more easily digested than [illegible] was at one time a favourite with many, eaten with oatmeal cake or toasted bread. Cut up the cheese into small pieces and place in a saucepan. Mix two tablespoonfuls of corn flour in a breakfast cupful of milk and pour into the saucepan. Allow to boil a few minutes. Take off the pan and add a well-beaten egg.

The frequent variations of temperature during the spring makes it highly dangerous to change children's clothing too hurriedly. It is a mistake immediately a hot day comes, to pack away the warm "woollies" and take out the lighter summer clothes. Many a serious cough and illness has been the result of this premature change. The alteration from winter clothing should be gradual. Wool should always be worn next to the skin, as this protects the child from sudden chills, and a thick vest is necessary [illegible] the weather is quite warm and summer-like.

Man Afraid of Flirt Most Feared

"Broadly speaking, men may be divided into two classes," dated my friend the business woman. "Those who are willing to flirt with almost anything that wears petticoats, and those who are deadly afraid that some designing female will attempt to flirt with them."

"And I don't know but I'd rather run up against the flirtatious male than the other kind," speculated she. "You can glare at a masher and e'en stab him with a hatpin or poke him with your umbrella. But you're absolutely helpless before the opinion the other sort of fellow holds about you.

"Now I've got beyond that point where I think that every man who notices me or smiles upon me is in love with me. I've been in the business world long enough to overlook the matter of sex. I'm not always thinking that a man is a man when I talk to him or sit next or opposite to him. I like a lot of men. Heaven bless 'em, just as I like a lot of women, and I'd sure hate to see a manless world or have women rule the earth without masculine aid or interference, just as I am opposed to an existence run entirely by man-made rules. I haven't an iota of sex egotism about me. Sex-antagonism isn't one of my characteristics. And so, you see, I'm plain sensible — a human being regarding other human beings in a simple, friendly, human spirit.

"And yet," snorted my friend the Business Woman, "there are men who actually look upon me in that Satan-get-behind-me fashion simply because I don't blush and stammer and get tongue-tied if a masculine critter speaks courteously to me without a formal introduction, and I have the temerity to reply!"

"Well—" I opined, getting ready to dodge, "you are pretty fresh about making new acquaintances. Nobody ever properly introduced me."

"There is a community of holier-than-thous living in a pretty little private park. They've boned themselves into an exclusive set that fattens itself with an idea of its own importance. The women think they are away up in society because some of the items they send to the society editors are printed. The men are the kind who talk of 'my employes,' though about all the employing they do is to employ their time earning what the boss pays them. They're of the genius clerk at about $125 a month—just enough to keep their heads soft and their collars white.

"Occasionally I walk up to their station to wait for the car. Everybody knows my name and every other place I go I get cheerful good-e mornings from the men-folk who are also waiting for the car, and we chat about things in general. But at this station, if a 'Good Morning' is hastily squeezed out of me, it is with the infliction that I must not take advantage of it.

And when I see any of these fuzzy-minded critters on the car —our gossipy, neighbourly suburban morning car, where everybody talks to everybody—there is a mental turning of backs for fear that I might presume upon those inadvertent greetings. They seem to spread out their spiritual skirts so there won't be room for me to sit anywhere near them. Say—" she suddenly emanded, "do I look like a temptress?"

I bowed low.

"You look," said I, "very charming in that new spring hat."

"Get along wid you, I'm busy," giggled my friend the Business Woman.

Give Your Child a Party

Nowadays a few refreshments and one's best clothes do not constitute a children's party. Plans are laid as carefully as for a card party or dance for the older folk. Prizes are provided and, above all things, the methods of amusing are not left to the last moment, with sublime faith in an inspiration to be furnished by the children themselves. Prize games of all sorts appeal to children and for these prizes raid the five and ten-cent stores. You will be surprised at the number of pretty little things you can pick up for five cents, from rubber balls and whistling balloons for the little tots to nice paint books, boxes of dominos, etc., for those a trifle older.

A variation on the old fishpond idea is this: Cover a clothes basket or tub or large bowl, according to the number of your little guests, with tissue or other thin paper, in which small round holes have been cut. Through each hole run a string. These may be different lengths and colours and the end of each is attached to a small prize or present in the receptacle. Each child chooses his string, but can judge nothing of the prize to be drawn by the length or thickness of the string, and then, when all pull together, the paper covering flies into a hundred pieces and out pop the prizes. Another game for which only two prizes are provided, is the peanut hunt. For this hide peanuts in every conceivable place on the lower floor, behind pictures, in the tufting of furniture, etc.

The children are then instructed to hunt, taking care not to touch bric-a-brac or vases, where no nuts must be hidden. This will keep them busy for perhaps 10 minutes, then the nuts are counted and the one who has found the most nuts receives the first prize, while the child standing next on the list receives a consolation prize. These can be penwipers with wee figures on them made with peanut heads and gay flannel or silk shirts.

Baby's Food Step by Step

You know all about cow's milk and preparing it for baby's bottle. You know the difficulty of making it digestible, and that the modifying must be changed to provide for baby's growing needs. You know the milk is likely to be infected with germs and often causes grievous troubles.

You must have the best for baby. Just a word about the 'Allenburys' Foods—fresh, pure, rich milk from healthy cows pastured in old England—handled in model laboratories in these ideal surroundings—and modified by expert staffs in accordance with highest medical knowledge of baby's needs.

The 'Allenburys' Foods comprise a series of three foods each to suit baby's needs and progress. A moment's thought will convince every mother of the reasonableness of this method. What could be more irrational than to feed a baby of three weeks and one of six months on exactly the same food?

Allenburys' Foods

Milk Food No. 1. From birth to 3 months. Milk Food No. 2. From 3 to 6 months. Malted Food No. 3. From 6 months.

No 1 gives the healthy mother's milk that it can be given to the youngest and most delicate baby, either in substitution with the breast or alone. No 2 is prepared similarly as No 1, with necessary additions for the formation of bone and strong nerve tissue. No 3 food affords the ideal food until the mixed diet is introduced.

WASHING BLANKETS

Choose a bright, sunny, windy day. Be sure that the clothes lines are in good condition and will bear the weight of wet blankets. What is more trying, even to the most angelic disposition, than a broken line and freshly washed articles on the muddy ground?

Be sure, too, that the clothes line is clean and will not streak the blankets. If you are not sure, use a sheet between the line and blankets.

Do not be afraid of using hot water, in spite of all you have been told. By hot water is not meant scalding, but hot enough to remove the dirt quickly. To a tub of hot water use half a package of good soap powder, first dissolving it in a small quantity of warm water and then adding it to the tub. Stir it into good suds.

Then immerse the blankets, one pair at a time. Look for any spots before the blankets are entirely wet and you can see better to remove them. Do not rub them as this will harden them and beat down the nap. Neither must they be put through a wringer.

Press them gently with the hands, moving them up and down through the water. Do this again and again, changing the water two or three times if the blankets are very dirty and always using the soap powder in each water. Do not omit it, even in the final rinsing water, as it keeps the blanket soft, while clear water stiffens the wool. A little bluing may be added to the last water to keep the blankets from turning yellow.

If one person is doing the wringing alone, she should use a heavy stick or broom handle, twisting the blanket in one direction and the stick in the opposite. Or thrust a loop of the blanket, run the stick through and twist as if to a rope.

Germans Believed to be Preparing Huge Drive

LONDON, April 30. — The Belgian troops, their ranks thinned but unwavering, again are bearing the brunt of the fighting in the region of Ypres.

Together with the French they have pressed forward vigorously to the north, along the west bank of the Yser, and have thrown back a German attack to the north of Ypres. This, delivered late Wednesday night, seems to have been the final effort of the Germans, and yesterday was comparatively quiet.

The Germans have again given their attention to the section of the front held by the Belgians, and have bombarded it vigorously. They have reached out Ramscapelle, Poreyse, Lampernisse and Oosteporen with their guns, and the Belgians, co-operating with the French, have replied vigorously.

The Belgian and French artillery has been particularly active in directing a violent fire upon the Germans who hold a bridge-head at Steenstraate, on the west bank of the Yser. This is one of the positions captured in their drive of last week which so far the allies have failed in every effort to regain.

Fighting still violent, but apparently regarded as nothing unusual after the fierce intensity of the German drive and allied counter-drive last week, continues to the north and northeast of Ypres. Here the German attack has been definitely halted, and there are no signs that it will be renewed. The allies claim that the Germans are again using, this time in meeting counter-attacks north of the Ypres salient, noxious gases and asphyxiating fumes, the employment of which is forbidden by the terms of The Hague Convention.

Unofficial reports reaching London yesterday indicate that the Germans are preparing for a new drive. Halted at Ypres, it is rumored that their new offensive will be in the region of Arras. The preparations now going on, especially in artillery, indicate that this new action will exceed in intensity even the terrific bombardments of Neuve Chapelle and Ypres, to say nothing of Hill No. 60.

In the fighting around Ypres it is reported that more than one-third of the Canadian officers engaged were killed or captured. The gallant Canadian troops are now recuperating from the terrific strain they underwent in the trenches in positions in the rear. They will be brought back to the trenches in a few weeks.

British Factory Owners Preferred Commercial Profits to War Orders

NEW YORK, April 30—Manufacturers acquainted with the situation in England say the appointment by the British Government of a general committee to deal with the question of output of munitions, which is to be followed by the appointment of a committee to supervise local conditions, with power to commandeer all [illegible] material, is the result of many English firms showing an unwillingness to put aside commercial work for war material production.

Despite the war many English machinery plants have persisted in attempting to supply well established markets overseas, and many of these plants could not undertake war material production without seriously disrupting their general arrangement and shop schemes.

The principal private ordnance producing shops in England are the Coventry Works; Vickers, Sons & Maxim; Elswick; Beardmore & Son; Whitworth, and various Sheffield firms. These plants are fully equipped for producing just what the British War Office requires, but the facilities of these great plants, to say nothing of the government arsenal at Woolwich, long since have been over absorbed. These private ordnance plants were developed largely through orders received from foreign governments with the possible exception of the Coventry works, which are the latest built of the above lot and when came into being largely through British government orders.

The public sentiment has appealed to many machinery plants to take up war equipment outputs, only to learn that the machine tools necessary were not obtainable. It was under such conditions that the British War Office, through various commissions was compelled to turn to the United States, and to judge from reports received from across the water the American manufactureds have now learned to appreciate the difficulty of obtaining in a hurry machine tools suited to the making of shrapnel and fuse, rifle barrel boring machine and jigs and fixtures required for making rifles.

Many machines installed in British works can be turned to service in producing war equipment, but heavy expenditures are required to complete the facilities in order to put these shops on a basis whereby they can operate independently. The more desirable of these works will doubtless be outfitted by the War Office, but the commercial business of the plants undoubtedly will have to cease and it is this fact which will be felt more than any other feature by the shops commandeered. The inevitable result will be to bring still closer home to English men the real meaning of the titanic struggle in which Britain at present is engaged.

Lightly Turns to Thoughts of Love.

To him she is always the same—the dearest, the sweetest, the prettiest girl in the world. In his heart she reigns supreme—his ideal of all that is best in womanhood.

His eyes reveal her to him as the possessor of a fascination and attractiveness of which nothing can deprive her. She may not wear elaborate and expensive dresses, she may not even have a pretty face, according to worldly standards. Her chiefest claim to beauty may even lie in a mass of glittering, fluffy, natural hair, growing on her own head. But certainly no hair can be charming or even attractive if it is not properly dressed and intelligently cared for. There is a subtle charm about beautiful hair that lends more to personal adornment than the combined skill of the beauty doctor and modiste.

To the girl or woman desiring always to be at her best and to make the most of Nature's richest gift, we recommend

Activity On the Niemen

Germans Are Evidently Preparing For An Offensive

LONDON, April 30.—North of the Niemen river another big German advance is apparently gathering headway, and Russian advance troops are slowly retiring before the enemy, fighting as they fall back. The advance guards of a German army were reported last night as having passed Bossiany and as having approached the line of the Dubissa river. The artillery firing on this front is reported as growing more intense and collisions between reconnoitering parties are becoming more frequent. Isolated attacks, but none of them decisive, were delivered by the Germans against the Russian positions west of the Niemen and north of Warsaw.

An offensive of the Germans was checked north of Suwalki and in the Kalwaryia region, east of the East Prussian frontier, was checked without any particular effort.

After occupying Lubnia, which commands the railway feeding the Austrian and German forces in the Uzsok pass, the Russians defeated an attack on a hill northwest of that point and they also defeated repeated and desperate attacks in the Gaulet Golonetzko district with Stryj as their objective, "all being successfully repulsed with the bayonet."

It is thought that the enemy might have persisted a little longer against the impossible in the west, but for the arising of a new anxiety on the eastern frontier, and it is taken as quite probable that the Russians have commenced to deliver some stroke that is creating immense alarm in Berlin. The reported capture of Lubnia, which is a point of vantage on the railway line feeding the German-Austrian forces in the Uzsok pass and the threatened cutting off of a large army may have led to the hurried recall of Von Hindenburg, who is believed to have engineered the poison gas episode. It is peculiar of Von Hindenburg to be always trying some new trick, which usually gets him nowhere important.

Latest Move In Thaw Case.

NEW YORK, April 30. — Deputy Attorney-General L. J. Obermeier has prepared a writ of prohibition, restraining Supreme Court Justice Hendrick and a jury from inquiring into the mental status of Harry K. Thaw. It was forwarded to Albany on Wednesday for the approval of Attorney-General Woodbury, and will be presented to the Appellate Division.

New Zealand's Praise.

WELLINGTON, New Zealand, April 30.—The press speaks in the highest terms of the Canadians courage in the fighting near Ypres, and emphasizes the value of the stand they made in promoting a similar spirit among other overseas forces of Great Britain.

300,000 Families Expelled.

GENEVA, April 30.—Swiss charitable societies have been notified by Germany that between 250,000 and 300,000 French families, expelled from northern France by Germany because of lack of food, will pass through Switzerland during May.

Sir Galahad.

The most conspicuous of the Knights of the Round Table was Sir Galahad, the son of Launcelot and Elaine. The familiar words, "There Galahad sat, with manly face, yet maidenly sweetness in his form," sufficiently indicate the qualities for which the knight was famous—to wit, firm hearted courage combined with beautiful gentleness of spirit," the strength of the oak with the soft beauty of the lily.

HOUSEHOLD RECIPES

APPLE SNOW.

Pare, slice and quarter five good-sized apples, steam until tender, put through a sieve, let them get ice cold, then add grated rind and juice of one lemon, one-half cup sugar, or more, according to the sweetness of the apples, and the whites of three eggs. Beat to a froth. Sometimes I make a soft custard to serve with it from the yolks of the egg. Put the custard in a dish and heap the snow on top.

SALMON SALAD.

Mix two cups of cold cooked salmon with enough dressing to make it creamy. Pack in timbale moulds and chill. Remove from moulds. Serve on lettuce and garnish with cucumber and dressing.

CURRIED VEGETABLES.

Cut half an onion in thin slices and cook until yellow in three tablespoons of butter, blend in three tablespoons of flour mixed with one teaspoon of salt, three-quarters teaspoon of curry powder and one-quarter teaspoon of pepper, add slowly one and one-half cups of milk, cook and stir until thick and add one cup of peas, one cup of diced cooked carrots and one and one-half cups of diced cooked potatoes. Heat thoroughly before serving.

HAM SAVORY.

Chop finely enough ham (cold boiled) to make one and one-half cupfuls and slice thinly an equal amount of cold baked potatoes. Melt one tablespoon of butter, blend in the same amount of flour and gradually one pint of hot milk. Stir until smooth and thick, and season to taste. Arrange the ham and potatoes in layers covering each with a little of the sauce. Sprinkle the top with cracker crumbs and dot with bits of butter. Bake in hot oven until nicely browned.

RHUBARB MOLD.

Wash and cut into small pieces enough young rhubarb to fill a quart measure. Put into an enameled pan with one and one-quarter pounds sugar the grated rind and strained juice of one small lemon. 12 almonds blanched and chopped finely. Boil quickly until they look like a rich marmalade, then add a half ounce of gelatine dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of boiling water. Pour into a mold wetted with cold water. Set aside till firm. Turn out and serve with cream.

STUFFED EGGS.

One dozen hard-boiled eggs cut in halves. To the yellows add one teaspoon each mustard and salt, two tablespoons melted butter, three tablespoons of vinegar, dash of pepper. Mix well. Fill whites with this mixture.

BAKED HOMINY.

Gradually beat 2 cups of milk into 1 cup of cold boiled hominy. When smooth, add 1 tablespoon of butter melted, ½ teaspoon of salt and 4 well beaten eggs. Beat until very light, turn into a buttered baking dish and bake in a moderately hot oven until firm in the centre.

RHUBARB TARTS.

Beat one egg until light, add one tablespoon of cornstarch, stir until smooth and add a dash of cinnamon and one pint of stewed and sweetened rhubarb. Line patty tins with good paste, fill with the rhubarb and bake. Serve cold with a garnish of whipped cream.

FISH CUTLETS.

Mince cold, boiled or baked salmon, haddock, cod or any other firm fleshed fish. Season to taste and mix well with a little rich drawn butter, made quite thick with cornstarch. Spread upon a broad platter, and, when stiff, cut into the desirable shape with a tin "form." Roll in fine crumbs then in egg and in cracked crumbs again; leave on the ice to get firm and fry in deep, boiling cottolene or other fat which has been heated slowly.

SEA FOAM CANDY.

Two cups brown sugar, half cup water, boil together until it hairs. Add vanilla to taste, pour into stiffly beaten white of one egg. Beat hard till it is rather thick. Stir in chopped nuts or candied cherries, or both, and drop on buttered tins.

FRIZZLED SMOKED BEEF.

One small can of dried beef. Pour boiling water over it and let it stand 10 minutes. Drain and heat in it 1 tablespoon of hot butter, to curl or frizzle it. Make a cup of thin white sauce with 1 cup of milk, 1 tablespoon of butter and 1 tablespoon of flour. Pour it over 1 well-beaten egg when ready to serve.

WORLD'S GREATEST KIDNEY REMEDY

"Fruit-a-tives" Have Proved Their Value In Thousands of Cases

WONDERFUL RECORD OF A WONDERFUL CURE

Only Remedy That Acts On All Three Of The Organs Responsible For The Formation Of Uric Acid In The Blood.

Many people do not realize that the Skin is one of the three great eliminators of waste matter from the body. As a matter of fact, the Skin rids the system of more Urea (or waste matter) than the Kidneys. When there is Kidney Trouble, Pain In The Back and Acrid Urine, it may not be the fault of the kidneys at all, but be due to faulty Skin Action, or Constipation of the bowels.

"Fruit-a-tives" cures weak, sore, aching Kidneys, not only because it strengthens these organs but also because "Fruit-a-tives" opens the bowels, sweetens the stomach and stimulates the action of the skin.

"Fruit-a-tives" is sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

EDUCATION OF A GENTLEMAN

Speaker Made Point Which Most Men Will Feel Qualified to Answer.

Friday afternoon was "debate day" in a Virginia rural school. On that afternoon classes after two o'clock were let go, and the assembled school listened to shyly spoken pieces of poetry and addresses to gladiators. Then came the climax, the debate when world issues were settled for once and all. The speeches were after the pattern of this one, which one teacher recalls:

"Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen: I rise to defend the affirmative of the question whether it is better to have wealth or education. Mr. Chairman, if you will to get a kiss-letter from a lady and couldn't read it, wouldn't you just feel like going away and dying? I close now to give place to an abler speaker."

POLAND IS TRAMPLED

Millions Are Homeless, Workless and Starving on Vast Battlefield

The attention of the world has been so concentrated on the ruin of Belgium and the terrible sufferings of its people that almost similar conditions in the eastern theatre of the war have attracted little notice in Britain or America. Yet we are told that the suffering and want in Poland have been appalling since the very first weeks of the war. M. Henri Sienkiewicz, the author of the world-famed novel "Quo Vadis" says that in the kingdom of Poland alone 15,000 villages have been burned or damaged, a thousand churches and chapels have been destroyed. In nine out of ten provinces the Germans have seized everything, even to the peasant's chicken. Homeless, the villagers have sought shelter and found starvation in the forests.

The correspondent of the "London Chronicle" summarizes the situation as follows: Over a line of 600 miles some 2,000,000 Austro-Germans and 4,000,000 Russians have been fighting each other ever since the war began. They have been treading down and tearing the Polish land and famishing and exterminating its inhabitants. The Poles have furnished 1,500,000 soldiers, almost equally divided between the Russian and Austro-German armies. Everywhere the tide of fighting has repeatedly over-run the country. It has submerged about 200 towns and 9,000 villages. The material damages amount to more than $600,000,000. About 5,000 villages have been razed to the ground, either in battle or in retreat. All stores of corn and forage have been seized or destroyed and 1,000,000 horses and 2,000,000 cattle have been taken for the armies or have perished for want of pasture. The rural population of 7,000,000 is reduced to beggary.

All factories have long ago stopped working. Many are greatly damaged; 100 very important ones have been destroyed. The whole of the industrial production amounting to above $400,000,000 yearly, has been ruined. [illegible] are now without means of subsistence, together with a multitude of artisans and tradesmen deprived with their families of any earnings. The great majority of townsmen, 2,000,000 in number, are destitute.

M. Sienkiewcz, in appealing for aid for his suffering countrymen says: "Two countries have especially suffered in this frightful war in which the demons of Death and Destruction are struggling for the empire of the world. These countries are Belgium and Poland. The splendid help that many peoples have given to Belgium honors humanity. We are not jealous of the sympathy shown to that little nation; we know that we should have similar sympathy if the world only knew the miseries that our unhappy people have undergone and are undergoing."

FIRST SENTRY DUTY

Everything Plays Ghoulish Pranks With Raw Soldier's Nerves

A member of the French Foreign Legation writes:

Possibly it was not fair to make the men go on sentry work the first night in the trenches but still, there were the lives of the others to protect.

It was a fair night, but the moon had a nasty habit of throwing twisty shadows. One could just see the German lines, which were quite close, and horrible shapes lurked in that depth of darkness.

It must not be forgotten that trenches advance towards the enemy zig-zag fashion, while the actual trenches are formed as corrugated paper viewed edgewise. We were thus stationed one in each bend of the line, in easy earshot, but completely out of sight of each other.

On occupying the post, provided one's work is done conscientiously with a sharp eye and an alert ear, one always feels that something is going to happen. It is far too quiet for a battlefield, one reflects. The Germans must be creeping up. After straining the eyes in the darkness for a few minutes the shadows begin to dance, the props to which the barbed wires are fixed a few yards before you assume human forms, while the uncollected bundles of hay become corpses or crouching "Boches."

The wet black nights are the "nervy" nights. Impossible to see a yard before one, the least sound to the high-strung nerves suggests a horde of Germans creeping up.

"Look out there," whispered an eerie voice, "those two bundles of hay are moving forward. I can hear someone breathing behind them." One recalls the advancing wood dodge in "Macbeth," and the hair stands on end. Before you have further time to reflect your companion lets fire. There follows a hideous yell, the straw quivers, and something black hisses past you. The poor old sergeant's cat has had its tail amputated by a bullet! And so for a further hour the cold night creeps on.

Then it is yourself who sees a form lying a few yards away. A crouching man without a shadow of doubt. You wait five minutes and look in a different direction. On turning round the eyes catch it at once. It is still there—lying very close to the earth and hiding its head. You compare notes with the next sentinel, and he agrees. A volley of balls are discharged, but the form does not budge.

Next morning you look over the trench to verify or explain the mysteries of the eve. The horrible, lowlying shadow we shot at is still there—the corpse of a soldier left unburied. —London Daily Mail.

After the amputation he said to the general who stood by his bedside, "I am still good for military service as an aviator; I shall be lighter than before." His spirit is still so restive that for two days his wooden legs had to be taken away from him so that he should rest quietly in his new quarters.

The old veterans make a fuss of him. "He has a right to be proud of himself," they say; "the battles we went through were child's play compared to those of modern war."

Now Jean Marie Caujolle, stumping about the Invalides on his wooden pins, is a guardian of national trophies and waits impatiently for a new consignment of German guns and flags.

British Use Wire-wound Guns

British guns still retain their supremacy. They are lighter and more easily handled than the German guns. This is due to the fact that German guns are solid, while the English weapons are wire-wound. The Germans have never believed in the wire-winding; they have always regarded it as a piece of British stupidity.

War Brings Wage Increase To Workers Throughout England

LONDON, April 29.—War as a wage raiser has brought to a considerable proportion of the labouring classes in England some compensation for the increased cost of living. Social workers estimate that the increased cost of living averages at least ten per cent., while the average increase in wages is not more than five per cent. The plentiful supply of overtime work available in most trades makes it easy for most workmen to more than even matters.

The upward tendency of the English workingman's wages was very marked in March. According to the official Board of Trade reports, the increases granted during the month reached a total of nearly $365,000. The number of workers who shared in the increases was 440,000.

Increased wages in some of the leading branches of industry are summed up briefly as follows:

Railwaymen—All round increase of 75 cents a week.

Longshoremen—Increases varying from 25 cents to $2 a week.

Policemen—War bonus of 75c a week upward.

Carpenters—War bonus of $1 to $1.50 a week.

General labourers—Increases of 75c to $1.50 a week.

Miners—Employers generally offer ten per cent. advance in pay; miners demand twenty per cent.

Postal employees, including telephone and telegraph workers — Increase of $1 a week has been demanded.

Gas workers—Increases averaging $1 a week.

Bakers—Increase of $1.25 a week asked, but employers' offer of 75c accepted pending negotiations.

Textile workers—Bonus for overtime work in factories doing work on army clothing.

Boot and shoe workers—War bonus of five to ten per cent granted in some places.

Coppersmiths—Average wage before war, $9; now, $12.60.

Clerks—Some increases; 180,000 grocers' assistants have asked headjustment of wages; similar movements pending in other branches.

Engineering and building trades workers—Some sections have obtained substantial increases.

The number of unemployed in Great Britain shows a large falling off during February and March as compared with the corresponding months of last year. The Board of Trade's labour gazette prints statistics from the government's 403 labour exchanges, according to which there were 87,004 names on the register last month, as against 100,616 for February and 123,714 for March of last year.

The number of vacancies in employment reported to the exchange also shows an increase over the late winter of 1914, having a daily average of 5,746, or 100 more than the average for February and 1,600 more than the average for March of last year.

London passed through the winter with fewer cases of destitution demanding relief from the Poor Funds than any winter within the memory of the present Poor Law officials.

The war, in fact, has enabled many thousands of persons belonging to the classes which usually must be helped to dispense with this kind of relief and has even put them in possession of funds more than sufficient to meet their needs. London's pauper population has decreased steadily during the last three months.

The London Guardians at the beginning of 1915 were providing for 100,000 paupers. This was a decrease of 2,500 from the corresponding date a year before. April 1 showed the total decreased by a further 3,000.

It is evident, however, that these decreases are in part at least deceptive, being accounted for, not by improved conditions but by the fact that a great deal of relief is being administered by new agencies, such as the special war relief funds and the old age pensions.

CHAPTER VI.

The Golden Key.

After he had left his former partner in the office Thomas Gallon slowly went up to the bungalow. There was a glimmer of satisfaction in his dim eyes as he thought of the fact that the location of the real lode was unknown and that the plans that might reveal it were far beneath the waters of the Pacific. He went inside to the desk and picked out of the locker drawer the golden key which held his secret.

He stared at it and read the numbers that marked the position of the lost vessel, and the chest that held the plans. Whom could he trust with this? He looked out of the window and called to John Dorr.

"John!" he quavered. "I've already told you a little about my finding this mine and about my old partner."

"Wilkerson?"

"Yes, Wilkerson; but there is another secret. I lost the location of the mother lode in a wreck at sea. The chest slipped overboard; but find the wreck and somewhere near it is that old carved chest, and when you open the chest"— The old man suddenly staggered forward into Dorr's arms.

"I killed him once," he muttered feebly, and then the silence which presages the wordlessness of eternity overcame him. John gently laid him down on the bed and called Ruth.

"Father!" she called softly as she knelt by the bedside.

Thomas Gallon stood on the great divide, but he turned back a moment to gather his strength. Then he motioned with his gnarled hand for John. The young man stepped quietly forward and stooped over.

"My will, John! I leave Ruth 'The Master Key.' In my desk—bring it!"

When the desired paper was brought he whispered:

"Read it!"

John Dorr opened the document and read it aloud:

"* * * I leave all my property to my daughter, Ruth, to come into her full possession on her eighteenth birthday. I direct her never to let go of 'The Master Key,' which will make my little girl happy."

So ran the last words. The old man lifted himself still farther up and called for a pen and ink. Then, mustering his failing powers, he wrote in a firm hand the further words:

I direct that my daughter keep Harry Wilkerson as superintendent until she is eighteen. I appoint as executor of this my last will and testament, John Dorr.

THOMAS GALLON.

The pen fell from his fingers, and he lifted his trembling hand to his throat and tore at the string that held the golden key. It broke, and he put the key in Ruth's lap.

"That is the secret," he muttered. "John knows—and Wilkerson. Trust John." Again he opened his eyes and motioned toward the desk. "The letter!" he croaked.

Ruth's quick intuition led her to the desk again, and she found in the same drawer that had held the will a sealed envelope addressed:

John Dorr:

To be opened on Ruth's eighteenth birthday. Sooner if her welfare is threatened.

Gallon turned his dimming eyes to Ruth, who took both his chilling hands in hers.

"Child! 'The Master Key' keep always near you. Some day"—he choked—"it will bring you riches, happiness and love."

* * * * * * * *

When he first heard that Gallon was dead Wilkerson was appalled. He thought of the woman in New York and regained his courage. This was a case where he must win by brute force. He must immediately show his authority. He who struck first would win, he thought; yet in the back of his consciousness was the realization that he did not know what disposition Gallon had made of the property. And where was that rich vein of gold that would buy him Jean Darnell, with her velvet ways and her dark eyes of topaz?

Perhaps because for several years he had not handled other men, but been himself a mere cog in a great machine, Wilkerson mistook the spirit of the miners. He did not understand that they had a profound respect for Thomas Gallon.

"I must get these people in hand," thought Wilkerson, "and do it quick."

He spent the afternoon in making a schedule for a sweeping reduction in wages. Then he sent for Bill Tubbs, the engineer. When he had come, gross, liquor sodden and half insolent, the superintendent laughed at him.

"Tubbs, what do you know about this mine?"

"Well," Tubbs answered, "the ore panned out pretty good for awhile, but they lost the mother lode. There ain't a carload worth a dollar come out of here in three months, and that little grind up on the hill won't have nothing at all unless she takes the advice of some of us old timers and fires that young squirt of an engineer, John Dorr."

"I'm the superintendent of this mine. Now go!"

Tubbs looked astonished at the tone, but obeyed.

Wilkerson smiled to himself. One man, and he one of the most important in the camp, was his absolute tool and slave. He took his pen and rapidly wrote out an order:

"After this day all wages in this mine will be reduced 25 per cent."

He called one of the bookkeepers and curtly ordered him to post it on the wall of the office outside. A surprise awaited him, however, in the attitude of the miners. They paid no attention to the notice he had posted on the office wall, nor did they seem to recognize the presence of the new superintendent. He questioned Ed Mayer, the loading boss.

"Miss Ruth is running 'The Master Key!'" Mayer replied.

After the passing of Thomas Gallon things at the mine went very quietly for a few weeks. John Dorr had accepted the subordinate position under Wilkerson and was faithfully devoting himself in the intervals of his duties to soothing Ruth's grief. The girl had really been enormously dependent upon her father. She was only a child, but now in her solitariness she turned to John and old Tom Kane with impulsive trust and affection. She tried hard to be brave, but the days were long and the nights longer. The cook house bloomed with fresh roses every day, an excuse for her going down to talk with old Tom, and in the evening, when the shadows fell across the gulch, John and she would water the flowers together, and he would tell her of his life in college and in New York.

"I'd love to see New York!" she said a dozen times, and on each occasion John would smile at her and say, "You shall."

Neither of them realized that circumstances would shortly take them soon, though separately, to New York, for there was piling up in a secret drawer in Wilkerson's desk letters written in a woman's script. Some of them in scented envelopes on embossed paper. Each one of them was signed "Jean Darnell." When the seventh letter came the superintendent reread it many times:

Astor House, New York, May 15, 19—.

Dear Harry—From what you say and from what I learn from George, I think that I would be willing to put up the money to buy control of your "Master Key" mine, but you must be sure about this. I know that old Gallon made money out of it, but I'm also sure that he was concealing something, as you think. Make the mine worth while and—well, I remember my days in that camp—I'd like my revenge. George Everett will handle the stock end of it very quietly when you say the word. Don't let your ugly temper get away from you and look out for Dorr.

JEAN DARNELL.

"Now," thought Wilkerson exultantly, "I can put the screws on Dorr. I'll fire him."

At this moment the man he was thinking so bitterly of appeared, and Wilkerson, while his courage was still fresh, said insolently: "I see you are spending a good deal of time out of your office. The mine can't afford such extravagance. I guess we'll have to have a new mining engineer. I've sent for one, so you better pack."

For the moment John did not speak. They confronted each other for a moment; then Dorr turned on his heel and walked off. As he did so he brushed into old Tom Kane.

"The miners won't stand any more of Wilkerson, and they are going to strike tonight, when the day shift comes off," Tom croaked. "Lots of them are packing their duds now to get out. D—n him; he has ruined little Ruthie's property!"

John looked out of the window and realized that the various groups of miners, tired, sullen, as if waiting for something, made an ugly picture.

"I'm afraid it's up to them, Tom," he said, a little huskily. "I have been discharged, and I am leaving myself tonight."

He was perfectly amazed at the effect of his words. Dropping the coffee pot with a crash on the top of the range, Tom Kane dashed out of the door and into the nearest group of miners, gesticulating and laughing hysterically. He said two words and then rushed back, his bright eyes gleaming fiercely.

"That saves the mine for Ruthie, John," he gasped. "The miners were just going to quit quietlike. Now they will make Wilkerson take you back, and you can make him straighten matters out with them."

He Jerked Wilkerson to His Feet.

He peered anxiously up into the young man's face. "You won't desert her, will you, John?"

With an inarticulate growl John swung out into the sunshine and elbowed his way through the streaming throng of miners just coming off shift. Ahead of him he saw Wilkerson talking to an old miner, who seemed to be arguing earnestly. He saw the superintendent and the miner re-enter the office, and a moment later Ruth appeared.

As John came to the office door he heard the sound of a scuffle within. He kicked open the frail barrier and stood inside just in time to see Wilkerson draw a gun on the old miner.

"Drop that gun, you dog!" he bellowed, and with one leap was at Wilkerson's throat.

Wilkerson was no pigmy in strength and as agile as a panther. He managed to land two stinging blows on John's eye before Dorr drove him up against the wall, laid his powerful hands on him and thrust him to the floor in absolute helplessness. His fist was lifted to give the final finishing blow when he caught sight of Ruth's white face. He jerked Wilkerson to his feet, flung him into the corner and strode silently out.

"John, John! What is the matter?" demanded Ruth.

"That hound in there discharged me! I am going to leave tonight."

Her eyes slowly filled with tears. "You are not going to leave 'The Master Key' mine, are you, John? And—and"— Before he could answer her appeal in words there was a wild roar down the street and the tramp of booted feet.

"Get the dynamite and blow the fellow up!" bawled a couple of hoarse voices.

"Get a rope and hang him to the hoist!" yelled another. Then a full chorus of angry cries rose into the evening air and filled the valley with raucous sound.

Quickly John drew Ruth aside in the shelter of one of the cottages and said hurriedly: "This must be stopped, Ruth. I'll get out there and stop them!"

"Stop, men, stop!"

Ruth's property was in peril. John's stentorian voice rang out across the throng: "Stop, men! Stop!" But he soon saw that the crowd was getting out of hand. He perceived three or four of the tunnel men racing down the hill to join in the fracas. One of them, he was sure, had been to the powder house. He gritted his teeth and made his last appeal.

"Ruth—Ruth Gallon!" he called.

Doubtless none of the miners had noticed her presence, and when her slender figure emerged from a doorway, boldly, yet modestly, out toward the many who was trying to hold them in check, there was a dead silence. That silence was portentous. In it was decided the fate of "The Master Key."

It was broken by wild and tumultuous cheers as John lifted Ruth on the box, and she held out her slender arms in girlish entreaty to the men she knew so well.

Cowed, yet as ever alert to snatch at any opening, Wilkerson now came boldly on the scene. Just as he had bluffed his way many a time before, he now made a play on which he knew his own safety depended. He mounted on the box beside Ruth. "Miss Gallon has asked me to restore the former rate of wages!" he shouted. "It has been done."

What meant that ominous silence? What more must he say to those faces upturned to his? "And I have reappointed John Dorr to run this mine," he muttered.

Possibly he hoped that those low, hoarse tones would not carry far, but attentive ears caught them up and knew their meaning.

Old Tom Kane came through the crowd, thrust Wilkerson off the box without ceremony and raised his cracked voice in a yell that brought a perfect thunder of cheers from the miners.

Without waiting to listen for more Wilkerson went away with as much bravado as he could muster to the office.

On his way he picked up his gun, which John had flung through the window, and thrust it in the bosom of his shirt, with a meaning glance backward at John Dorr, who was now helping Ruth through the crowds toward the bungalow, followed by a yelling, tramping, laughing, bellowing column of men.

Once inside the office Wilkerson went to his desk and unlocked the drawer which held that seventh letter. "Some time"— he muttered meaningly.

The story of The Master Key will appear each Friday and Saturday in the Evening Examiner, and will be shown in Photo Play at the Red Mill Theatre on Monday and Tuesday of each week.

Germans May Be Flanked--Some Hidden Move

WASHINGTON, April 30.—From Dutch sources, based upon what were said to be the latest advices from that country, as well as the fact that England had absolutely stopped all Channel and North Sea shipping, came a report that England has been massing transport ships and large war vessels, which can bombard the Belgian coast while remaining out of reach of the Berman coast batteries, and will probably try to land a new expeditionary force somewhere between Heyst and Blankenburgh, or elsewhere north of Ostend, for the purpose of attacking the right flank of the German forces now attacking along the Yser Canal.

One suggestion is that this explains the statement from Berlin that the main German fleet put to sea several times recently, but failed to encounter the British fleet. It is pointed out that, accepting the Berlin report as true, the German fleet failed to encounter the British fleet for the reason that the latter was concentrating near the Belgian coast for offensive purposes looking to land operations.

Million Troops Are Ready.

About two months ago statements came from London that more than 1,000,000 British troops were in the field or prepared to go to the front. Last week the statement was made in the House of Commons in behalf of the British Cabinet that 750,000 British soldiers were in France and Belgium. If Great Britain has 1,000,000 men available, and three-fourths of these are on the fighting line on the Continent, the remaining 250,000, it is suggested, may be aboard the transports, which are supposed to be assembling off the Flanders coast, with the idea of landing as soon as the British warships have reduced the German batteries ashore.

Weak Spot in the Line.

The territory between the Dutch frontier and Ostend is the weak spot of the German possessions in Belgium. Ever since the Germans occupied the province of West Flanders they have been obliged to guard against an attack of a British fleet upon this point. The little villages from Heyst to Ostend have been fortified as well as could be, and at irregular intervals along the shore batteries of field pieces have been hidden in the sand dunes to prevent the landing of British troops.

After the capture of Antwerp, when no further danger threatened the German right flank from the Belgian army, the harbour of Zeebrugge was made the main naval base on the North Sea. From this port the German submarines have been operating in the English Channel. But Zeebrugge is an undefended port, and the fortifications which the Germans have built there could not withstand an attack by the heavy guns of a British dreadnought.

Question of Holland.

That the British fleet ever should try to reach Antwerp by forcing the Scheldt is unbelievable, since the Schedlt has been mined by both the Dutch and the Germans, and the waters of this arm of the North Sea are so shallow that they do not offer sufficient manoeuvring space for the larger men-of-war, which would have to be used in such a large under taking.

Say Antwerp Impregnable.

A serious British attack made on the seashore, and supported by the long range guns of the British fleet, would place the right wing of the German army operating along the Yser in a very dangerous position. If it succeeded in damaging the railroad between Ghent and Ostend (which passes through Bruges) the chief support of the German right wing would be threatened, and a shifting of the German line would be necessary.

On the lines of fortification which Germany has built along the left banks of the River Scheldt above Dendermonde, nothing is known. Nobody has been allowed to visit that part of Belgium. In fact, since October the entire province of West Flanders has been like an island, entirely cut off from the rest of the world.

"GETTING THE SOLDIERS' VOTES"--Cartoon by James Frise

"Iron Wall of the Rhine" Can Only Delay Allied Army On The Way To Berlin

LONDON, April 29.—Can the Rhine, that "iron wall" of Germany, stop the victorious advance of the Anglo-French army on Berlin?

This question has very often been put to me by my readers and friends. It was rather difficult to give an immediate definite answer. I was obliged to study carefully the present situation of this most important line of defence of Western Germany.

I have at various times had several opportunities to travel the whole length of the Rhine, and, knowing well the strength of its fortifications, I had enough material to judge this question, and the present is just the moment when we must turn our attention to that river on which the Kaiser and all the German nation have the greatest confidence. It must not be forgotten that the German anthem is called "The Watch on the Rhine."

The Rhine in German territory extends from the frontier of Switzerland to Holland, and is forfeited by several fortresses, but quite irregularly. For instance, the part of the Rhine in Alsace is protected by a series of so-called tete-de-ponts, such as Istein, Gunningen, Nuenberg, Neu-Brisach, and, behind them, more to the north, the strong fortress of Strassburg commands the defence of this region. The main defence here is based on the so-called bridge fortification, or some lines of redoubts built in semi-circles in front of bridges, their flanks resting on the banks of the river.

The second region of the Rhine, opposite Lorraine, is defended by a system of strong fortresses, as Germersheim, Mayence, Coblenz, and further, opposite the Belgian frontier, is the fortress of Cologne, while Wesel commands the frontier of Holland. In addition to these fortresses, this sector is protected by fortifications at Dusseldorf and Duisburg. The fortresses of Metz and Diedenhofen also are included in the sphere of defence of the Rhine in Lorraine.

Expect Crossing in North.

All the latest movements of the German army, as well as some hasty preparations on the Dutch frontier and in Belgium, and the anxiety of the German press in regard to the vigorous offensive of the Allies, show that our enemy supposes that the Rhine will be crossed in the region opposite the Belgian and Dutch frontiers.

Long before the war I often heard from German officers of the General Staff the opinion that the French army would never dare to cross the Rhine either in Alsace or Lorraine. Perhaps this opinion was based on the fact that this part of the river is far from the main road to Berlin, the strategical aim of the Allies.

Very recently some German military experts have shown a great anxiety lest the French, after occupying Alsace and Lorraine, should direct their main advance through South Belgium and Luxemburg, attacking the Rhine on the line Dusseldorf—Coblenz—Coblenz. They are hastening to calm public opinion, saying that to prevent this invasion it will be quite sufficient to rely on the garrison of those fortresses, supported by Landsturm.

At Coblenz the river is one-fifth of a mile wide, gradually increasing in [illegible] direction. It is [illegible] The current [illegible] are mostly flat and marshy. The depth is from ten to fifteen feet.

Both Cologne and Coblenz are first class fortresses. Cologne has two big bridges over the river, and forms an important point of strategical railway junctions. The outer fortified circle of Cologne has eight forts and fourteen fortifications on the left bank of the Rhine and four forts on the right bank. The central defence line comprises fifteen old-fashioned forts, connected by intermediate fortifications and batteries.

Coblenz a Fortress Camp.

Coblenz is similar to Cologne, and can be called a fortress camp, being capable of sheltering an army corps. North of Cologne are Dusseldorf and Duisburg, protected by numerous fortifications of the temporary type, in order to cover the bridges and the fortress of Wesel. Dusseldorf is situated opposite the Belgian fontier, and commands a strategical junction of railways and two bridges across the Rhine.

Wesel is the fortress close to the Dutch frontier at the juncture of the River Lippe with the Rhine, and the most important tete-de-pont of the Wesel fortified region is Fort Blucher (formerly Fort Napoleon), situated on the left bank of the river.

So, summing up all the fortification preparations of the Germans in this region, we see that the part of the Rhine from the Dutch frontier to Coblenz, a distance of about 140 miles, is supported in the south by two fortresses and in the north by one small fortress and two bridge fortifications.

It can be supposed that only two German armies would be sent to defend this line. The minor part of this army will occupy the line between Cologne and Coblenz, because its flanks will be protected by those fortresses, and the greater part of the forces will take up positions along the line from Cologne to the Dutch frontier.

Von der Goltz openly said that the "most simple way to cross the Rhine is to force the neutrality of Holland." But I consider that our gallant Allies will succeed in crossing the river in a legal way, if not at the first attempt, then at the second or third without a doubt.

We must not forget the immortal words of Napoleon, who said: "The wide rivers, though they are 'impenetrable,' are always crossed."

If we seriously study the role which the fortresses of the Rhine will play at the moment the Allies start the crossing of the river we shall understand that those fortresses can only be considered as a protection of the flanks of the German army, manoeuvring between them, and no more. Of course, these fortresses will allow our enemy to hold out longer, and that is all.

In conclusion, I can say that the "iron wall of the Rhine" can only detain the Anglo-French army on its way to Berlin, but not stop it.

THIS SCHOOL GIRL HAD BAD FAINTING SPELLS

Was Weak and Run Down. But Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Made Complete Cure

The most critical time in a girl's life comes during the school age, when she is impelled by rivalry to put forth her best efforts in studying for examinations. At the time she should have healthful outdoor exercise and abundance of fresh air, to keep the blood pure and rich, she is confined to her studies. Is it any wonder that she becomes run down in health and suffers from headaches, indigestion, loss of appetite and spells of weakness or fainting?

The case described in this letter is a good illustration and you can read here the splendid results of using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to help through this critical period.

"While attending school my daughter became weak and very much run down. She was frequently troubled with bad fainting spells, and nothing we tried seemed to do her any good. We were advised to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and did so with most satisfactory results. I am pleased to tell you that after using five boxes of the Nerve Food she was completely cured, and has no return of the fainting spells."

This statement is certified to by Mr. Hamilton Houston, Justice of the Peace.

The reason Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is so effective in cases of this kind is because of its extraordinary blood-forming influence. By creating an abundance of rich, red blood it strengthens the action of the heart, revitalizes the exhausted nerves and builds up the system in every way.

The appetite is restored, digestion improves, you rest and sleep well, and the new vigour and energy is felt in every organ of the human body. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is doing wonders for men, women and children whose systems have become weak and run down. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A DISTINCTIVE SKIRT.

By Anabel Worthington.

To those who prefer something a little different this skirt will appeal. It has the correct lines, with the addition of distinctive features. There are only two gores, with a seam at each side, the yoke and lower part being one and the same. At yoke depth the gore is slashed, plaited and then seamed again to the yoke part, covered or not with the strap according to individual preference. This construction makes for economy of material as well as taste. In cotton skirtings a dollar should amply cover the cost of the materials, including thread and other findings.

The waistline may be raised or finished with a straight band as preferred. The plaited opening is at the left side and the width of the skirt at lower edge is about two yards and a half. For medium size 5¾ yards of 36 inch material would be required. The pattern, No. 7,093, can be obtained in sizes from 22 to 32 inches waist measure.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Address — The Examiner Pattern Service, The Examiner, Peterborough.

LOSING HOPE WOMAN VERY ILL

Finally Restored To Health By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Bellevue, Ohio.—"I was in a terrible state before I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My back ached until I thought it would break, I had pains all over me, nervous feelings and periodic troubles. I was very weak and run down and was losing hope of ever being well and strong. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I improved rapidly and today am a well woman. I cannot tell you how happy I feel and I cannot say too much for your Compound. Would not be without it in the house if it cost three times the amount."—Mrs. CHAS. CHAPMAN, R. F. D. No. 7, Bellevue, Ohio.

Woman's Precious Gift.

The one which she should most zealously guard, is her health, but it is the one most often neglected, until some ailment peculiar to her sex has fastened itself upon her. When so affected such women may rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a remedy that has been wonderfully successful in restoring health to suffering women.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

FURTHER HEAVY FIGHTING IS REPORTED FROM THE DARDANELLES

Entire Allied Fleet Is Co-Operating With the Land Forces and the Warships Are Shelling Turkish Forts From the Inside of the Straits, From the Gulf of Saros and From the Aegean Sea--Allies Army is Advancing Inland

SITUATION IN THE WEST IS VERY QUIET

(Special Cable to The Examiner.)

LONDON, May 1.—(Special cable.)—Further fighting of the heaviest character is reported to-day to be in progress on the Gallipoli Peninsula, where the British forces are making every effort to cut off the Turks from the mainland. Special despatches from Athens say that in a series of night assaults on the Turkish positions, the enemy was driven further inland. The entire allied fleet is cooperating with the land parties, shelling the Turkish forts from the inside of the Dardanelles, from the Gulf of Saros, and from the Aegean Sea. Meanwhile the French are advancing on the Asiatic side. The admiralty has no confirmation of the Turkish claims that several of the allied war ships have been disabled by the bombardment of the land forces. It is stated, however, that it would not be surprising if some of the war ships had been hit, as they were steaming well within range. The latest reports indicate that the British force which landed south of Jenikoi had advanced inland and was engaged by the main body of the Turks. It is the intention of the campaign to isolate the forts and then to reduce them, if possible, by cross-fire from the fleet, with the Queen Elizabeth, the Warspite and other big gun ships operating from the Gulf of Saros, and with other warships operating from the inside of the straits. The Turkish positions at Nagara were heavily bombarded last night.

PARIS, May 1.—French official communique.—The war office to-day (Saturday) reports as follows:

"No change has been reported in the general situation on the front since the giving oue of the official communication of last night. Ten more shells fell on Dunkirk during the evening of yesterday, and there were several victims.'

OTTAWA, May 1.—Lieut.-Colonel J. T. Creelman, commanding the second field artillery brigade, is reported wounded. He is from Montreal.

TORONTO, May 1.—Private cablegrams received here to-day say that number two company of the fifteenth battalion was cut off and entirely captured.

LONDON, May 1.—Lt.-Colonel Buell of Brockville, is in the hospital here awaiting operation for the removal of a piece of shrapnel from his body.

TRIED TO SCARE PASSENGERS.

NEW YORK, May 1.—Scores of prominent passengers who sailed today on the giant Cunarder Lusitania, found anonymous telegrams awaiting them at the pier giving warning that the Lusitania would be sunk on her trip to Liverpool. Alfred G. Vanderbilt was told in one of these messages that the vessel would be torpedoed. Other passengers were warned that the liner would meet some mysterious end.

The messages were followed up by the circulation by a number of strangers on the crowded pier of similar veiled warnings. The strangers were hurried away as soon as the fact that they were accosting passengers was reported to the Cunard private detective force. None of these on the liner cancelled their passage, although the activity of mysterious men and the telegrams created a feeling of uneasiness.

Two Women Run Over on Simcoe St,

Were Crossing on George St. When They Walked In Front of a Team

Knocked down by a team of horses at the corner of Simcoe and George Streets at three o'clock this afternoon, Mrs. Joshua Chamberlen of Otonabee and Miss Annie Long, were run over by a double livery buggy. Eye-witnesses said that the two ladies were together crossing north on Simcoe on the east side of George. When they stepped on to the pavement they walked in front of the team reported to belong to the Jones livery.

A knee of the near horse knocked Miss Long down and the wheels passed over her body about the waist. She was picked up unconscious and carried into Payne's drug store. Mrs. Chamberlen was able to walk without assistance. Dr. Eastwood attended the young lady who appeared to be about 18 or 19 years old, and after a short time she was able to walk from the store to the automobile. No serious injury was reported. It was stated that the team was not travelling rpoidly.

S. D. ADVENTISTS.

Elder F. W. Johnston will preach as usual in Woodmen Hall over Nugent's drugstore, opposite Cressman's, on Sunday night at 7 o'clock. The subject will be "Peter's Vision of the Sheet Let Down from Heaven." What does it mean? And on Tuesday at 8 p.m., "The Greatest Thing in the World." What is it? Sabbath school is held every Saturday at 2 p.m. and preaching at 3 p.m. All are invited. Seats free.

IN MEMORY OF A FALLEN HERO

At St. John's to-morrow (Sunday) evening, the services will be of a national and patriotic character in harmony with recent events. The address at this service will have particular reference to the heroic death of Major Geo. W. Bennett to whose friends and military comrades a special invitation is offered as well as to members of the over seas contingents in town over Sunday.

It has been proposed to hold shortly a general memorial military service, but before taking definite action it was thought well to await the publication of the full casualty lists.

AGED RESIDENT OF EAST CITY IS FOUND IN RIVER

David McMahon, Aged Eighty-two, of 461 Mark Street, Loses His Life in the Otonabee Early This Morning

WANDERED FROM HOME

Just one year ago this morning Mr. David McMahon fell into the Otonabee River, but was able to save himself, but at an early hour this morning he was not so fortunate, when he again went into the water, and this time the river claimed him in death. His body was found and recovered by a son, Mr. Frank McMahon, about 9 o'clock, and removed to Messrs. Lane and Eano's undertaking parlours, where Dr. Greer, after hearing the circumstances, decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

The late Mr. McMahon had reached the age of 82 years, and for some years his mind has been rather weak, due to his advanced age.. He has always been quite harmless, however, and more inclined to wander about than to do anything violent. His family, with whom he lived, at 461 Mark Street, have had to be very careful for some time that he did not get lost, and it has been their custom to lock the doors at night, hiding the keys, as he sometimes got up once or twice during a night and might go outside and wander away from home, injuring himself from exposure or in a fall.

About 3 o'clock this morning he was heard to get up and no one in the house paid much attention, believing that he would walk around or sit down for an hour or two. He evidently got out of the house through a window and walked towards the river bank, which was a distance of about five hundred yards and slipped over a precipice into the water, dropping about eight feet into an eddy. Had he been sufficiently strong the water was not too deep for him to gain a footing and get out, but his advanced age was against him and he was drowned.

The late Mr. McMahon has often told his family that when the weather got warm he would go to live with his son, John, and when he was absent this morning, every one believed at first that he had started for his son's residence. Mr. Frank McMahon, another son, who is married and lives next door to his parents' residence, went to work as usual, but was sent for when no word was received of his faher's safe arrival at Mr. John McMahon's home. He accordingly started out to look for tracks and found some leading to the water's edge and then saw his father's body against some rocks above Mr. Ed. Wand's planing mill. The rocks form a sort of island in the river at that point, and the body had been carried over there by the current. The son got a boat and managed to get the body to the East shore at a place where it was easy for Messrs. Lane & Eano to remove it from the water, which was done after

AN APPEAL TO CANADA

LONDON, Eng., May 1.—(Special Cable to The Examiner.)— Sir Max Aitken, the "official eye witness with the first Canadian contingent in Belgium, has issued a supplementary report of operations in Belgium. He concludes with this appeal:

"Arise, O, Israel," the Empire is engaged in a struggle without quarter and without compromise, against an enemy still superbly organized, still immensely powerful, still confident that its strength is mate of its necessities. "To arms, then, and still to arms."

In Great Britain, in Canada, in Australia, there is need, and there is need now, of a community organized alike in military and industrial co-operation. That our countrymen in Canada, even while their hearts are still bleeding, will answer every call which is made upon them we well know. Those who lie there have left their mortal remains on alien soil. To Canada they have bequeathed their memories and their glory.

"On fame's eternal campaign ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards in solemn round
The bivouac of the dead."

THE CANADIAN CASUALITIES MAY TOTAL 5,000

Impression is Growing at Ottawa That Several of the Battalions Were Practically Decimated in Battle of Langemarck

THE OFFICIAL REPORT

SPECIAL WIRE TO THE EXAMINER:

OTTAWA, Ont., May 1.—If any confirmation had been necessary of the glowing accounts received concerning the perfect work of the Canadians in the battle of Langemarck, it has been finished in the story of the Canadian eye witness received to-day. The official story does away with any impression that the heavy casualties might have been practically due to mistaken tactics and established, beyond peradventure that not only did the men behave gallantly, but that the officers handled their companies like veterans. It has been received with great satisfaction at headquarters here.

So far the list of officers killed and wounded in the sanguinary fight totals about 220. Several are missing, which indicates that a number of prisoners must have been taken. The impression is growing here that several of the battalions were practically decimated and that the total casualties will approximate 5,000.

The regiments which have suffered most heavily are the 10th, 10th, 4th and 1st.

TO-DAY'S LIST.

OTTAWA, Ont., May 1. — Ontario men included in the casualty list issued to-day by the militia department are as follows (all wounded):

First Battalion—Pte. Alfred Dennington, Blenheim, Ont; Private Harold Beardmore, Campbellford, Ont.

Sixteenth Battalion—Private Thomas H. Thomas, North Hamilton, Ont.

First Field Artillery Brigade— Sergeant John Heaton, Kingston, Ont.

Third Field Artillery Brigade—Gunner Joseph Dawson, Toronto bombardier; William Niven, Toronto; Driver Peter McIntyre, Hamilton.

No. 2 Field Ambulance —Pte. William Miller Leishman, Hamilton, Ont.

Princess Pats—Private Foreman, Toronto. All wounded.

No. 2 Field Ambulance—Private Sydney Smith, seriously wounded (gunshot wound in arm), St. Davids, Ont.

200,000 FAMILIES SENT FROM NORTH OF FRANCE.

GENEVA, April 28.—Swiss charitable societies have been notified by Germany that between 220,000 and 300,000 French families, expelled from the northern departments of France in the possession of Germany because of the lack of food, will pass through Switzerland during the month of May.

The Swiss people are doing everything possible for the comfort and care of these refugees. Most of them are penniless, and they are composed in large part of old men, women and children. Upon their arrival they are being nourished and clothed.

A MESSAGE OF CONDOLENCE FROM KING AND QUEEN

Mr. John Bennett, Perry Street, Brother of Late Major Bennett, Receives Messages of Sympathy —Official Report of Death

KILLED IN ACTION

Mr. John J. Bennett, 191 Perry street, brother of the late Major G. W. Bennett, who was killed in action a few days ago, has received a number of messages of condolence, including one from the King and one from Major-General Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia.

The message officially re-announcing Major Bennett's death, reads as follows:

J. J. Bennett,—Deeply regret to inform you that Major G. W. Bennett, of the Second Battalion, is officially reported killed in action.

Adjutant-General.

The following messages of condolence followed:

From the King.

The King commands me to assure you of the true sympathy of His Majesty and the Queen in your sorrow.

Kitchener.

Minister of Militia.

Dear Mr. Bennett.—Will you kindly accept my sincere sympathy and condolence in the loss of your splendid brother, Major G. W. Bennett.

While one cannot too keenly mourn the lois of such a brave soldier, there is consolation in knowing that he did his duty fearlessly and well, and gave his life for the cause of liberty and the upbuilding of the Empire.

Again extending to you my heartfelt sympathy,

Faithfully,

Sam Hughes.

Royal Theatre

Mr. M. Pappas, proprietor of the Royal Theatre, has returned from a week's trip to Toronto on business. Mr. Pappas has decided, beginning on Monday, to cut out vaudeville from the Royal. The reason for this is the Summer is now on. During the Summer months the best vaudeville performers are engaged at high salaries at the various parks. Mr. Pappas will show no vaudeville unless it is the best.

His visit to Toronto was to arrange with the film exchanges to supply the Royal with the best films that money can procure. There will be nine reels, all new, shown daily, which will show the world's best actors. The daily programme will include tragedy, comedy, melodrama, and scenic pictures, all of the highest grade. A complete change of pictures will be made every Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Mr. Pappas will now give his personal and exclusive attention to the Royal Theatre, which, with his years of experience, will assure patrons of the Royal getting the best value for their money. It is now up to the public to decide where they get the best

LIEUT. FESSENDEN REPORTED MISSING

Well Known Peterboro' Boy, Son of Mr. Cortez Fessenden, of the Collegiate Institute Staff, Went to the Front With the 48th Highlanders.

A BRILLIANT STUDENT

To-day's official casualty list brought fresh grief to Peterborough, as the roll of honour contained the name of a popular and clever young citizen, Lieut. C. Vivian Fessenden, son of Mr. Cortez Fessenden of the Collegiate Institute staff, who is reported missing, Lieut. Fessenden was a subaltern in the 48th Highlanders attachment in the 15th Battalion, and his name appears with a large number of other officers of the same corps in the list issued at Ottawa early this morning.

Lieut. Fessenden was born in Peterborough twenty-one years ago, and was educated in the Public schools and Collegiate Institute. On graduating from the latter he was third highest on the list of those trying the entrance examinations into the Royal Military College, Kingston. At R. M. C. he showed a remarkable ability in his studies as well as an all-round proficiency, which won him many honours. He was the best rifle shot at R. M. C., winning all competitions among the Cadets, and in addition, won the riding competition while he graduated with high honours last spring. When war broke out he was given a commission in the 48th Highlanders, and went to the front with the Toronto Kilties. During his term in the Collegiate Institute Lieu. Fessenden won a name for himself as a sprinter of no mean ability. Quiet and unassuming, bearing his many honours modestly he was a popular student and his former school mates will be most deeply grieved to hear that he is missing.

His parents have the sympathy of the entire city. Their eldest son, Major J. H. Fessenden of the Royal Army Service Corps, accompanied the first British expeditionary force to France, and has been at the front ever since. He, like his younger brother, is a graduate of R. M. C.

BRITANNIA IS RULING WAVES

Special to The Examinert.

NEW YORK, May 1.—In the face of an advertisement, signed by the German Embassy, and published in all the New York papers to-day, warning the public that they travel to Europe at this time at their own risk, nearly three thousand persons sailed on the Trans-Atlantic liners to-day. The booking offices reported their heaviest day's work so far this Spring. The United States people are, apparently, satisfied that Britannia, not Germany, rules the waves.

VICTORY HAS GIVEN CANUCKS GREAT PRESTIGE

T. P. O'Connor Says That Their Bravery is Regarded As Evidence of Great New Bond Sealed in Blood

THE FRENCH SITUATION

(By T. P. O'Connor)

LONDON, May 1.—The end of the week finds London cool and even sanguine, although it began rather gloomily in the face of the undoubted, though small, gains made by the Germans in the vicinity of Ypres. Those on the inside seemed, throughout the week, quite easy over the trend of events; first, because of the knowledge that the British had several lines of defence behind those won by the Germans, and they never contemplated the smallest possibility of the Germans breaking through; second, they fully expected the French and English advance more than to offset the German success.

However, the fact that is attracting the most attention is the conspicuous bravery disclosed by the Canadians. This has given the Canadian troops the greatest prestige, and their victory is regarded by everybody as evidencing a great new bond, sealed in blood, between the Motherland and the Dominion.

Growing Bitterness.

It is again necessary to record the growing bitterness against the Germans. This is partly due to the ugly revelations concerning the treatment accorded British prisoners, and to the use by the Germans of asphyxiating bombs. The universal determination not to end the war until Prussian militarism is crushed is enormously increased by the universal conviction that Prussia respects no law of civilised warfare.

Our mission to Paris, on which I left London Thursday morning, arose from a desire to demonstrate Ireland's solidarity with the Allies in their determination to save France from destruction and to vindicate her own principal of nationality by helping to liberate Alsace and Lorraine. It was felt that the mischevious and mendacious suggestion of violent anti clerical legislation on the part of the present French Government which was keeping the French population divided into two great sections, should have an authoritative denial. To this end the Ancient Order of Hibernians, one of the most powerful and oldest of the Irish Catholic societies, resolved to present an address to the Cardinal Archbishop of Paris. The latter gladly accepted the suggestion and took full advantage of the opportunity to bring out the fact already known to all the world that thousands of French priests are brave by fighting in the trenches for the defence of France. Frenchmen, today, of all religions, have suspended their differences to preserve France from ceasing to exist for either Catholic or Free Thinker, or those of other beliefs.

Reception by President.

Those who heard the mission offered our delegation the honour of a ceremonial reception by President

Special Photo Plays Secured For "TIZ-IT" THEATRE

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday May 3rd, 4th and 5th

Manager Clayton has booked for his Tiz-It theatre, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of next week "The Price of Crime. This wonderful feature will be at the Tiz-It for three days,' so as to give every lover of good photo plays a chance to see it. The third series of the "Master Key" will also be shown with this feature. Manager Clayton's motto is to secure the best photo plays only, also splendid music by Mrs. Foster's Orchestra. Don't miss this programme next week. The ventilation is perfect—2,500 cubic feet of fresh air per minute. If you have not yet had the chance to visit this theatre do so next week.—H. Clayton, Mgr.

Supervised Playgrounds.

Among the slides to be shown at the Y.M.C.A. Thursday evening, May 6th, are the following:

Boys playing craps.

Bread line on the Bowery.

Municipal playgrounds for coloured children.

Swimming race.

Recess time in New York Public school.

Come and see these and other pictures and learn what supervised playgrounds mean. Then be prepared to buy carnations on May 8th to help along the playground in Peterborough.

Playgrounds Diminish

1. Illness. By keeping the child constantly employed.
2. Delinquency. By influences that tend to develop the better self.
3. Exclusiveness. By getting each some part in the games.
4. Unfairness. By teaching true sportsmanship.
5. Gang spirit. By diverting the spirit of leadership into the right direction.

SIR ROBERT'S RESPONSIBILITY

A change of government at the present time would be as inadvisable as a general election. The present Government has the responsibility in respect of war measures promotion; and constitutionally is in charge of the government of the country for a year and a half at least. The discharge of that responsibility will be interfered with by the holding of an election at the present time. No government, whatever its ability, can satisfactorily do two things at the same time. It cannot conduct political warfare and real warfare at the same time. It will have either to neglect the work of directing and promoting Canada's share in the war, or it will have to neglect the election contest; and we know that under the high pressure of Canadian party politics, the election will not be neglected. So that for weeks or months, in the event of an election, at the most critical period of our war activity, while our sons are falling, dying or sore wounded by hundreds, and the necessity of undivided attention to their needs, is at the acutest point, we lay aside the work. Under these circumstances there should be no change of the administration's status quo. Hon. Mr. Borden is on the bridge, and he should not leave it, to stir up political bilge water in the hold.

It is claimed that deference should be paid to the wishes of the people—that they should be consulted through a general election, as to what they want done in regard to Canada's share in war work. There is no need for such a consultation. We all know that the mind of the people is one in approving broadly of what has been done, and of the Government doing all that needs to be done. In this unanimity the present Parliament is with the people, and no parliament could be elected that would more unanimously approve of Canada making liberal expenditure in the prosecution of war measures. Sir Robert Borden should consider the attitude of the people to an election. There is no popular demand for a premature general election. There is, on the contrary, a great deal of popular opposition to the election idea; and this popular majority includes thousands of Hon. Mr. Borden's political friends. The people know, the country knows, that if an election is brought on it will be by Mr. Borden yielding to the pressure of professional politicians, the sinister element of his official entourage. Sir Robert Borden has the chance of a century to show himself in the highest or the lowest light. He has an unique chance for the exercising of his highest abilities in aiding the work of Canada and the Empire. He has a chance to show the highest statesmanship, to show that he holds the good of the country higher than mere party advantage.; or he has a chance to debase his statesmanship and play the part of the ward politician. Every thinking citizen, every patriotic Canadian, when he thinks, thinks a general election and all it involves at the present time, unthinkable. It will be unpatriotic; it will do do little good and so much harm. Our work in helping on the interests of our share in the war; of catering to the care of our wounded soldiers counted by the hundreds; of filling the ranks of Canadians in the fighting line, depleted by death and wounds; demands our undivided energies. This work won't be done by the holding of an election; it will cease for the time being.

CULTURE IN PETERBOROUGH.

We are ready to denounce Germans by reason of the methods of Germany, as Huns and Goths and Vandals—savages and barbarians; and we are justified in so doing. We are, however, forced to partial acceptance of the assertion of a speaker at the Ontario Educational Association that "Ontario children have much in common with savages." This applies also to children grown up. Of the large grain of truth in the assertion there is unfortunately too much evidence.

We contend for the city beautiful; many of us spend much money and labour to this end, only to have the work done, undone; and the results aimed at defeated of achievement. This is due to an outcropping of the chief characteristics of primitive savagery, selfishness, self will, disregard of allurstic rights and feelings. We are all descended from savages, and under the veneer of civilization, and sometimes mighty close to the outside of the skin, lie dormant or sub-active, many of the characteristics of savages, and to these we owe the difficulties of making progress in city beautification.

We see frequent examples of the desire to beautify private premises, for the benefit of the public as well as to satisfy the owner's inherent love of the beautiful; for the public enjoy as much as the maker the delight of seeing beautiful lawns and grounds.

A resident of Hunter street, west of Bethune, beautified a beautiful residence, with neat, tasteful and tidy grounds. The work was done last year; but was destroyed, tramped out of shape, by marauding children. This year the work, at almost as much expense as at first, had to be done again.

The object of this double work was to give pleasure to the eyes of the owner and the public. But in the very attempt to preserve the beauty created, ghastly ugliness was created. In the early days of the country "brush fences" were made to enclose fields. They were not beautiful; on the contrary they originated a rural standard of comparison—"as ugly as a brush fence." The citizen mentioned, in order to preserve the doubly created lawn had to pile it thickly with brush to prevent its destruction by vandal children, and perhaps vandal adults. Thus instead of creating beauty ugliness was created.

We find the same all over the city. People have to border their newly seeded lawns and protect flower plots and borders, with all sorts of crude contrivances, making the streets unsightly and ugly—a public demonstration in this regard, of the low state of our civilization, of the low moral standard of our citizenship.

If all our citizens, like most of them, had high principles of respect for the rights of others, respect for the beautiful and freedom from yielding to selfish impulses, and the inherited instinct of destruction, such protection would not be necessary. The vast majority of our adult citizens would pass such new-made grounds a hundred times a day, without doing a particle of damage.

Children for various reasons, are the chief enemies of the city beautiful. They are excused by the plea that the destruction they do is done from thoughtfulness. This may be so; but that is no excuse. They are thoughtless from lack of training. Children may be trained to be thoughtful. They may be trained in the principles of unselfishness; in the principle of respect for the rights of others; trained to respect the beautiful.

These are some of the things for which we have erected a million dollars' worth of churches in Peterborough, and pay perhaps $50,000 a year in maintaining them; for which we have erected nine or ten schools and pay about $100,000 a year in maintaining them.

Theoretically the churches are supposed to influence home life, and help in the proper training of children. The schools are theoretically supposed to supplement home training, and aid in implanting culture in children, as well as, the three Rs. But church influence, home training, and school work, seem to leave the children of the present generation a menace to city beautification.

In default of education in right principles, is it not possible for some specific means to be adopted to prevent children from being the agents of destruction? Are citizens to be compelled to pay double price for the work of making the private places of the city an ornament to the city, and a delight to the public? To pay for churches and schools and their maintenance, agencies supposed to teach respect for the rights of others, and pay sometimes twice, for the work of having their home surroundings made beautiful?

Yet the children are not all to blame; there are children of mature years who are similar offenders. They "cut corners," and destroy the beauty of lawns. These have no excuse for this; they know better, but don't care. They are selfish, devoid of public spirit and neighbourly feeling.

The children, however, have an excuse; their training in right principles has been neglected, and owing to the default of the civic authorities, they have no place to play but the streets, and in the impulsiveness of youth they sometimes slop over upon private grounds and destroy them.

When we find that vandalism in varied forms, prevents the work, or destroys the work of civic beautification, and annoys and discourages taxpaying citizens of taste and culture, and public spirit, we should be a little more thoughtful in hurling "Huns" after the German militarists. The latter have one advantage over us in Peterborough; they can and do enforce culture with a club, while we fail to accomplish the principles of culture by preaching, teaching, home-training, or exercise of civic authority.

HARMONIOUS NEUTRALITY.

A correspondent sends us this story: A few soldiers belonging to a part of a Swiss garrison at Basel went to a certain cafe for refreshments. One of them sat down alone at a table. Later a civilian, a German, joined him and the two began to talk war politics. "Would you shoot on the Germans if they invaded Switzerland?" asked the German.

"Oh, no, never!" exclaimed the soldier.

"Waiter, a pint of beer and a beefsteak, with potatoes for this brave man," ordered the civilian.

"And your pals sitting at the next table—would they also not shoot the Germans if they tried to invade this country?"

"Oh, no, never!" retorted the Swiss.

"Waiter, a glass of beer for each of the soldiers at the next table!" ordered the civilian.

And addressing again the soldier, he asked: "Is this generally the view held in the Swiss army in regard to a possible German invasion? Are all the Swiss soldiers so Germanophil?"

"I don't know," replied the soldier.

"But why would you not shoot the Germans?"

"Because we belong to the band."—Montreal Guardian.

FACTORY BLOWN UP.

Ammunition Plant in Petrograd Destroyed — Several Killed.

PETROGRAD, May 1.—A number of persons were killed, many others were injured, and much material damage was done as the result of an explosion in an ammunition factory in the suburb of Okhta last night.

Several workshops were destroyed and many of the inhabitants of the neighborhood were hurt by flying debris.

The number of persons killed has not yet been ascertained. It is asserted that the stores of loaded shells were not affected, and that work will be resumed in a few days.

The Magnitude of the Work of Getting Ready For the Drive

Mr. Lloyd George's intimation that British preparations for the expulsion of the German invaders from northern France and Belgium are not yet complete will prove a disappointment to many who hoped that the war would be brought to a triumphant end early in the summer. The Chancellor's careful allusion to the need of a very large accumulation of ammunition and war material to be used "when the time comes to drive the Germans out of Flanders and France" indicates that it may be some time yet before the needed accumulation can be made. The daily use of artillery shells is very great, and it would be most unwise to stint the army now in the field to provide supplies for the greater venture of the future.

The public have no adequate conception of the strain under which the arsenals and arms factories of Great Britain have been working during the past nine months. It is stated that three million men have offered for service. In August last, it is believed, there were not a million military rifles in the United Kingdom. To provide two million rifles would involve an average output of 8,000 weapons for every working day since August 1. In the early months of the war no such output was possible, because tools did not exist in sufficient numbers to provide it. The probability is that at present the output is from twelve to fifteen thousand rifles daily, and that there are still many thousands of men in training for whom arms have not been provided.

If the manufacture of rifles and small arms ammunition on an adequate scale has proved a difficult task the problem of providing artillery must have been vastly more serious. Great guns cannot be forged and bored and finished in a few days. The larger weapons involve weeks and months of labour by skilled artisans. Thousands of guns ranging in calibre from three inches up to the tremendous fifteen-inch weapons for the new super-Dreadnoughts have been turned out since the war began. The making of artillery ammunition has gone forward simultaneously, and machine shops all over the world have been brought into service in the construction of shells. The cost of some of the largest projectiles is startlingly great. It is said that each 15-inch shell used by the Queen Elizabeth costs $5,000. This may include the damage done to the gun as well as the cost of the projectile, but the fact remains that a single day's bombardment at the Dardanelles will use up more than a month's product of hundreds of workmen engaged in the arsenals at home.

Germany had vast accumulations of rifles, small arms ammunition, artillery, and projectiles when she declared war. She was "stocked up." Britain went into battle bare of war material and without even the tolls to produce large quantities in a short time. It is not to be wondered at that there has been delay. All that Lord Kitchener could have hoped for last fall has been accomplished. The relatively small British army sent to the continent has assisted the French in holding back the German rush till Britain's great new army could be equipped and put in the field with adequate supplies. The time rapidly approaches when her preparations will be complete. There there will be war on the western front upon such a scale as the world has not hitherto seen. But the time is not yet.—The Globe.

ADDITIONAL LOSSES ARE REPORTED AMONG CANADIANS

Fourteen Officers Added to the List of Killed---Most of Them Are From the Western Provinces

Ottawa, May 1—An additional list of 54 Canadian officers killed, wounded or missing was given out by the Militia Department Friday night. Toronto, Winnipeg, Victoria and Vancouver are the principal cities affected. Fourteen officers are included in the list of killed, nearly all from western Canada. Twelve officers are reported wounded, four wounded or missing, and twenty-five missing. The missing are probably either prisoners or else their bodies still lie in the no-man's land between the opposing armies.

Of the wounded and missing nineteen are members of the 15th Battalion under command of Lieut.-Col. J. A. Currie, M.P., and the most of the these belong to the 48th Highlanders of Toronto.

The total of casualties thus far announced among officers now reaches approximately 180, of whom some 50 have been killed and 130 wounded, in addition there are forty-two officers reported missing.

Following is the list given out last night:

Killed

Capt. R. V. Harvey, Victoria; Lieut. C. C. Holmes, Victoria; Lieut. H. A. Bromley, Victoria; Lieut. N. A. Jessop, Victoria; Lieut. R. P. Latta, Vancouver; Lieut. J. E. Reynolds, Winnipeg; Capt. H. A. C. Wallace Winnipeg; Capt. F. Pott, Medicine Hat; Lieut. J. T. H. Nasmyth, Port Hope, Ont.; Lieut. G. A. Coldwell, Brandon, Man.; Lieut. R. Hoskins, Winnipeg; Lieut. D. C. M'Collar, Medicine Hat; Lieut. A. L. Bell, Toronto; Lieut G. W. Stairs, Halifax.

Wounded

Lieut. J. M. Currie, Regina; Lieut. W. Bisp, no address given; Major H. H. Matthews, British Columbia; Lieut. G. Durrand, Winnipeg; Lieut. G. M. Harris, Winnipeg; Capt. J. W. Warden, Vancouver; Lieut. G. H. Leslie, Vancouver; Lieut. L. S. Dear, Port Arthur; Major D. M. Ormond, Portage la Prairie; Lieut. D. H. Sinclair, Toronto; Major W. W. Nasmith, (seriously), Port Hope, Ont.; Capt. C. J. Arthur, no address given; Lieut. W. Mavor, Toronto; Lieut. W. H. Schoenberg, no address given; Lieut. E. W. Bickle, 48th, Toronto; Lieut. H. M. Scott, no address given; Capt. G. M'Comb, Montreal.

Wounded and Missing

Major J. E. K. Osborne, Toronto; Capt. T. V. Scudamore, Vancouver; Lieut. J. C. Thorn, Vancouver; Lieut. W. De C. O'Grady, Winnipeg.

Missing

Lieut. R. R. McKessock, Sudbury; Capt. A. R. McGregor, Toronto; Capt. G. N. Alexander, Toronto; Capt. A. M. Daniels, Sudbury; Capt. R. Y. Cory, Toronto; Lieut. H. A. Barwick, Toronto; Lieut. F. J. Smith, Toronto; Lieut. E. O. Bath, Toronto; Lieut. C. V. Fessenden, Toronto; Lieut F. V. Jones, Toronto; Lieut. G. T. Langmuir, No address given; Lieut. G. P. Taylor, no address given; Capt. G. W. Northwood, no address given; Lieut. J. K. Bell, Winnipeg; Lieut. G. F. Andrews, Winnipeg; Lieut. W. A. Mackenzie, Winnipeg; Lieut. H. E. L. Owen, Port Arthur; Major P. Bynghal', no address given; Capt. P. J. Locke, no address given; Lieut. E. D. Bellew, Vancouver; Lieut H. C. V. M'Dowall, Victoria; Lieut. R. F. Steeves, no address given; Hon. Capt. D. W. Irwin, Y.M.C.A., attached; Lieut. C. Fryer no address given.

In an earlier list the following were reported wounded and missing:

Lieut. Charles Bruce Pitblado, Montreal; Major Douglas Robert McCuaig, Montreal; Capt. Lionel Ward Whitehead, Montreal and Privates T. W. Robinson and Adam Addison and Lieut. M. Greenshiels, all of Montreal, and Pte. John W. Hartwick of Lindsay were reported wounded.

Considerably over one-third of the total number of commissioned officers at the front are now reported as being either killed, wounded or prisoners of war. And the lists are still coming in. The list of casualties of non-commissioned officers and men is still coming in in batches of twenty or thirty at a time, and nearly one hundred names are now waiting publication, pending notification to next of kin.

Wounded

NEW LINE OPEN FOR BUSINESS

Government Operating National Transcontinental For Summer

Ottawa, May 1—The Government begins to-day a limited operation of the National Transcontinental from Moncton to Winnipeg. A tri-weekly service will be given to accommodate the settlers who have gone in along the new line. The operation of the line will include also the G.T.P. line from Superior Junction to Fort William, which the Government under the legislation of last session is now taking over.

Italy Still Wavering

But Intervention Appears to Be Merely a Matter of Days

London, May 1—The weights in the political scales which indicate the likelihood of Italian neutrality or intervention have considerably altered their relative values in the past couple of days, says Dr. E. J. Dillon in a despatch from Rome to the Daily Telegraph.

At present all the symptoms point to a speedy decision in favor of intervention. Hitherto these tokens, while warranting a strong impression that accord with Austria was superlatively probable, seemed partially balanced by the optimism of the German-Austrian negotiators and their supporters. To-day this counterpoise has vanished. Apparently the sole question which still remains to be answered is when will the curtain fall on the diplomatic prologue to the resolute struggle in Southern Europe.

THE RUSSIAN CAMPAIGN

Movement Along East Prussian Border Not Quite Understood

Petrograd, May 1—An extensive German movement apparently is under way along the whole East Prussian border as far south as the Vistula River. This development of German activity on the northern bank of the Niemen is regarded here as a demonstration connected with probable movements of the German fleet.

This region at present is devoid of independent strategic importance. The Russians have advanced five miles southwest of the Hungarian town of Maramoros in the direction of Okormesc. The battle of Stryj continues, the Austro-Germans attacking continuously.

Uprising in India Rumored

New York, May 1—Residents of the Lahore district of India are fearing a massacre at the hands of the native troops who have risen and killed all their white officers, according to John H. Cooper a Mormon missionary who arrived here on Friday from India. The soldiers were inspired by German agents, Cooper says.

TURKISH TRANSPORT IS SUNK

LONDON, May 1.—In the course of its bulletin last night describing the naval operation at the Dardanelles, the British War Office says:

"During the operations Turkish warships from Nagara (in the straits) several times have attempted to intervene, but have always made off directly the Queen Elizabeth was at hand.

"At noon on the 27th, however, a transport of about 8,000 tons was reported off Maidos, and before she could escape the Queen Elizabeth opened fire. The third shot hit and destroyed her. She sank rapidly, but whether she contained troops or not could not be seen.

"On the 28th and 29th the allied forces rested and improved and consolidated their positions and continued the disembarkation of stores and artillery. All counter-attacks by the enemy, which were incessant on the 28th, but weaker on the 29th, were repulsed.

"The fleet, as well as the supporting army, have begun to engage these batteries. The Triumph bombarded Maidos, which was in flames last night, the 29th."

Suez Canal Fighting.

LONDON, May 1.—Military operations in the vicinity of the Suez Canal, from which region little has been heard of late, apparently are continuing, says The Post in publishing a letter just received from an officer who states that a party of Turks raised on a white flag, killing two and wounding eight men while they were attempting to deliver a letter to Turkish officials. The letter says: "We expect soon to be sent up the canal again as we hear the Turks are again advancing."

"The Wonder Car"

This is the car that 38,000 happy owners have given the "rough and tumble" acid test of real automobile owners' wear

An automobile on the road for 18 months in constant, every-day use by an owner ceases to be a designer's theory.

It becomes—either a great automobile success;
Or it becomes—a great automobile failure.

Multiply one model by 38,000 and give each one of these 38,000 automobiles day in and day out rough and tumble road wear, and if this car stands up and delivers, it has become one of the rare great automobile successes.

And that is the Maxwell success today—that is exactly the "Acid Test" that the Maxwell has passed through, and that is why the Maxwell is the most talked about automobile that is built today.

The Maxwell automobile is today one of the very few great automobile successes the world has ever known.

And this is the car we urge you to see. This is the car that you owe it to yourself to see. We want to tell you about its hill climbing triumphs. We want to tell you about its speed and endurance records. We want to show you and add up for you every one of its new features.

Read This List of Expensive Features. The 1915 Maxwell Has These Features And Many Others.

PURE STREAMLINE BODY

A large, roomy, beautiful body, fitted with deep, comfortable upholstering, ample leg room, adjustable front seat and the best fourteen-coat, hand-painted and striped finish. All Maxwell bodies are constructed of pressed steel, mounted on a steel-channel sectional frame, offering the greatest possible strength with minimum weight.

SPRING SUSPENSION

Without a doubt you will find the Maxwell the easiest riding, light car made. With its amply sufficient wheel base, and semi-elliptic front springs and three-quarter elliptic rear springs built of the very best of spring steels, the Maxwell cushions its passengers from all the jars and bumps of rough roads. It is so comfortable and easy riding that you will remark the difference on your first ride.

THE POWERFUL MAXWELL MOTOR

The most powerful, durable motor of its size made. Ample power to negotiate any road, mud, sand or hill—always at your command. Almost troubleproof, every part accessible, and what is more, it is a motor of genuine economy. More miles per gallon, day in and day out, than you would believe possible if one were to tell you. The Maxwell motor stands to-day one of the very best in dependable efficiency.

DOUBLE SHELL RADIATOR

A beautiful, troubleproof, highly efficient radiator. Every part but the shell constructed of high-grade copper. It will not corrode and leak. Protected against breakage by a heavy pressed steel shell and special shock-absorbing devices on each side of the frame that protects it against the many strains and twists of the car.

THE STEERING GEAR

Irreversible worm and gear, the only safe steering device. Maxwell uses a gear instead of a sector. This makes adjustment very simple, as you have merely to turn the gear one-quarter way and you have a new surface, just as good as a complete new steering unit.

BRAKES THAT HOLD AND LAST

One square inch of braking surface to every twelve pounds of weight. That's more than most any other car gives to-day. Maxwell brakes are thoroughly dependable, enclosed and protected from dust and dirt, and have special anti-rattling devices. Maxwell brakes are very easy to handle. The slightest pressure of the foot and your car comes to a dead stop.

The Maxwell Company's Guarantee of Service to Maxwell Owners

No other automobile is backed by a more reliable service than that guaranteed every Maxwell owner. Scores of Maxwell dealers in every part of this country are always ready to give expert advice—to make adjustments and to supply new parts at reasonable prices.

This splendid Maxwell Dealers' Service Organization is perfected and completed by the great Maxwell Service Station in Windsor, Ont. The main offices and factories of the Maxwell Motor Company in Detroit, U. S. A., are within comparatively short distance of many points in Canada. This in itself means rapid delivery of replacement parts to Canadian Maxwell dealers and owners. Maxwell Service is one of the great advantages enjoyed by Maxwell owners.

Order a Maxwell from us now, and when you want it delivered, we will give you your car—not an excuse on delivery day

NEARLY WHOLE WORLD IS INVOLVED IN WAR

With the virtual alignment of Portugal with the allies, three-fifths of the land area of the globe can now be marked red on the war maps. The total area of the land surface of the earth is 48,574,646 square miles. The total area at war is 29,182,890 square miles.

Practically the same proportion holds the population of the globe now at war. The most recent census figures of the various countries of the world make a total of 1,814,870,000 people, of whom the total now at war is 953,009,000.

This represents a population practically 10 times that of the United States, and the land area involved is practically 10 times the area of our country.

Of course, the overwhelming preponderance both in land and in population is on the side of the allies. The figures for these total 809,750,000 in population and 27,[illegible]51 square miles in extent of territory involved. The combined population of Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey and their colonies is 154,081,000 on an area of 2,649,849 square miles.

Against this the flag of Great Britain alone waves over 400,272,000 of population and 18,781,776 square miles of territory. Three-quarters of the British population is represented by her Indian subjects.

Russia stands second on the side of the allies with a population of 171,000,000 on an area of 8,595,897 square miles. Then comes France with a population in Europe of nearly 39,600,000 on 207,120 square miles of territory, but with colonies enough to increase her total population 89,400,000 on 4,200,000 square miles of territory. Japan's contribution to the strength of the allies is 70,602,000 of population on 248,000 square miles of land. Belgium contributes 27,979,000 on 924,500 square miles of land, but of this 20,000,000 are credited to the Belgian Congo, which has an area of 918,127 square miles.

"Wherever Two or Three"--Scene In War Zone

Characters.

Minister—A Scottish corporal.
Congregation—Three privates.
Choir—All four (minor key).
Intruder—A German officer.

Scene.

Loft in a Belgian house. Battle raging in the street; houses burning.

"In all times of our tribulation, in the hour of death, and at the Day of Judgment." — Church of England Litany.

There had been a sharp engagement, and the British troops holding a village had been hurriedly forced by great masses of the enemy to retire, says an article in the United Free Church Record. In the confusion three Scottish privates and a corporal were cut off: in the streets, so they backed into the first open door they came to. The occupants had fled, and they made their way up a long staircase, intending to find the roof and watch events from there. But it ended in an empty loft, where there was only a skylight, beyond their reach.

Halted by Gunnery.

"Better lie low for awhile," suggested the corporal as they stood listening to the terrible sounds outside. The Germans were evidently burning, looting and killing. Now and again they heard screams and the discharge of rifles; sometimes an explosion would shake the building; while the smell of burning wood penetrated to their retreat. This went on for hours. The soldiers knew they would be discovered sooner or later and expected no mercy.

Suddenly the corporal said: 'Lads, it's time for church parade; let's hae a wee bit service here; it may be oor last." The soldiers looked a little astonished, but thy piled their rifles in a corner and came and stood at attention. The corporal took out a small Testament from his breast pocket and turned over the pages. "Canna we sing something first? Try ye're hand at the 23rd Psalm. Quiet noo—very quiet."

Yea, though I walk in death's dark vale,
Yet will I fear none ill;
For thou art with me; and Thy rod
And staff me comfort still.

There wasn't much melody about the tune, but the words came from the heart.

Times of Our Tribulation.

Then the corporal began;

Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell. Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? And one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not, therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows.

As he read there were loud shouts below; doors banged, and glass was smashed. But he went on.

He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for My sake shall find it.

He ended and his grave face took on a wry smile. "I'm no' a guide hand at this job," he said, "but we maun finish it off. Let us pray."

Scottish Corporal's Prayer.

The corporal stood, with the book in his hand, and the others knelt and bowed their heads. A little haltingly, but very simply, he committed their way to God and asked for strength to meet their coming fate like men. While he prayed a heavy hand thrust open the door and they heard an exultant exclamation and then a gasp of surprise. Not a man moved, and the corporal went calmly on.

After a pause he began, with great reverence, to repeat the Lord's Prayer. That a German officer or private was standing there they realized; they did not see, but they felt, what was taking place. They heard the click of the heels, and they knew that he also was standing at attention. For a moment the suspense lasted, and then came the soft closing of the door and his footsteps dying away. The tumult in the house gradually ceased, and soon afterwards the storm of war retreated like the ebb of the tide. At dusk the four men ventured forth, and by making a wide detour worked round the flank of the enemy and reached the British outposts in safety.

Pope's Great Opportunity To Take Stand

ROME, May 1. — Belgian and French cardinals, archbishops and bishops have united in an appeal to Pope Benedict for the Vatican to abandon the attitude of neutrality it has maintained since the beginning of the war. They say they cannot understand how the head a church which is founded on principles of right and justice can remain neutral, without protesting at the same time against those who violate written or unwritten laws. The Pontiff is urged to asume an attitude which would be epoch-making in the history of the Papacy.

Cardinal Mercier, Archbishop of Malines, Cardinal Amette, Archbishop of Paris, and other members of the sacred college have sent memorandums to the Pope insisting that such an opportunity may never occur again for the church to show that it stands above political considerations, caring only for the moral and religious interests of its people. It is recalled that even in the Vatican Council of 1870 a petition signed by forty bishops was presented, demanding that the church promulgate Christian principles to regulate war and the rights of nations.

Opportune Time.

The memorandums presented to the Pope say: "Now is the moment to put into practice the result of those studies, as Catholics and even a certain number of Protestants look to the Pope as the natural defender of Christian morality, demanding guidance in matters so connected with modern civilization which are the outcome of Christian teachings. The Pontiff as the supreme pastor of Catholics throughout the world has the right to lay down moral principles which would govern all Christian nations in their reciprocal relations.

The earliest theologians condemned war altogether, but later, chiefly through the influence of St. Augustine, war sometimes was considered inevitable. St. Thomas and other authorities teach that war always is unlawful unless it is just, which justice can exist only through a just cause and a right intention.

German Brigandage.

"Injustice is no more morally right for a nation than for an individual, and its perpetrator is condemned by all Christian principles. Theologians denounce as a pagan error the assertion that 'might is right' or that the right to wage war depends on force of arms. It is worse still when a stronger country fights from a desire for conquest or demands a great indemnity. Thus, after the killing of thousands, is called by St. Augustine 'brigandage,' necessitating a league of honest, peace loving nations.

"Christian theologians call such wars thefts and also teach that the injustice which war seeks to redress must be certain and evident. War is morally wrong when in vindication of probable or doubtful rights."

The memorandums close with this statement: "International laws and conventions are expressions of legitimate consideration. The Hague Convention of 1907 gives expression to moral principles binding on the conscience of all Christians."

SOLD WHEAT TO GERMANY.

Bulgaria and Roumania Averted a Food Crisis.

LONDON, April 22.—The Baltic, London's great produce exchange, is not very optimistic over the possibilities to bring Germany to her knees by a process of starvation, especially since it has learned that the entire surplus wheat crop of Bulgaria and Roumania has been sold and delivered to Austria and Germany. The experts of the exchange compute that this imported wheat from the near East fills the gap between home production and consumption in the central powers, thus bring the supply up to that of normal years.

Roumania is reported as having a great surplus of corn which Germany has refused to purchase. Consequently hope is growing here that having vanished her trading with Germany, Roumania will now be more inclined to throw in her fortunes with the Entente Allies.

Victory Has Given Canucks Great Prestige

Poincaire. Redmond, who, despite the most cordial invitation, was unable to attend, owing to the importance of the proceedings in the House of Commons, asked me to address a few words to the President, voicing Ireland's sympathy with France in her present trouble, and our determination to support her by every means in our power. This was immediately followed by an invitation to the members of the mission from both chambers of the French parliament to attend a banquet, an almost unprecedented honour. The deputation consisted partly of members of the Hibernian Society, including Devlin and President Nugent. The address, which presented in glowing terms the affection of Ireland for France, will be preserved in the archbishopric archives. The reception accorded us was symbolic of the reconciliation of all parties in France and even the most stalwart French radicals approved it.

The gentleman who introduced the delegation to the Lardinal Archbishop was Denys Cichin, one of the most brilliant men in France, and a member of the French Academy. As a testimonial to his marvellous gifts as an orator he has been the chief spokesman of the Catholic party in the French Chamber since the death of Count de Mun. He is universally popular, even among the strongest of his opponents. A tall man of great robustness, with a shaggy beard and a quiet expression, he looks not unlike a good-natured mastiff. He completely won the hearts of all the Irishmen.

The Irish Representative.

The municipal life of Ideland was represented by the Lord Mayor of Dublin, Thomas Condon, who is Mayor of Clonmel, as well as member from Tipperary. Everywhere the mission received the most enthusiastic welcome. All the speeches referred in terms of affection to the long ties which have bound France and Ireland through the centuries and the heartiest congratulations were extended to Ireland on her final victory in the fight for her liberties. Altogether the mission was a splendid success, bringing out the following facts:

All the parties in France are united—the Catholics, particularly, resenting with horror the idea that they are not fighting as valiantly and unitedly as any other class for the liberation of their beloved country. Every Catholic supports loyally the French Ministry; many of the bravest generals are of the Catholic Faith strong Catholic sections are as loyal as any other part of the population; finally, the French Catholics look forward confidently, as do all other Frenchmen, to a great and final victory over the insolent invaders.

There also growing signs that the war may bring feelings between the warring sections of the French nation, and that after the war France will be ruled so tolerantly and wisely as to enable Frenchmen of every creed gladly to join in an effort to help the government increase the well being of the country.

Will the Votes of Soldiers In Canada the Trenches be Fairly Taken?

If there is an election during the war, soldiers who vote ought to be protected as well at least as the circumstances permit. When the bill was before the House of Commons, Mr. Doherty, the Minister of Justice, admitted that the protection was not complete. He said:

"I wish to state frankly now that if the view put forward is that before the soldier votes we must surround his vote with all the protections which surround the vote of a man in this country, the bill does not attain that object."

During the debate on the second reading of the bill, Sir Robert Borden remarked that the discussion was of a kind which usually takes place in committee—that is, it was a discussion, not on the principle of the bill, but on the means of applying that principle. For instance, Mr. Pugsley, who was in favour of the soldiers voting, if possible, called attention to the fact that there was no provision for sealing the envelopes containing the soldiers' ballots. We quote Hansard:

"Mr. Pugsley: What safeguards are there that the ballots marked by the soldiers will be the ballot returned to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery?

"Mr. Doherty: The safeguards are that the ballot is, in the presence of the soldier, inserted in an envelope and sealed by the officer.

"Mr. German: The bill does not say sealed.

"Mr. Doherty: If it does not say sealed we can provide for that. Certainly the intention was that it should."

We believe that the bill as passed provides that the envelope shall be sealed. Surely the soldier is entitled to that protection, and Mr. Pugsley, who called attention to the defect, is entitled to credit rather than to blame. Admittedly the holding of an election on the battlefield is a proposition surrounded with many difficulties, and requiring many safeguards. More than once during the debate the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice admitted that the original bill was defectively drawn, and expressed their thanks for suggested improvements.

For instance, in the general bill there was no distinction between soldiers actually at the front and soldiers in camp in Canada. Obviously voting in a camp in Canada can be managed much more easily than voting on the field of battle; and certain safeguards are possible in Canada that might not be possible in France. For one thing, the voter in a camp in Canada may know the name of the candidate, and vote for him or against him on grounds of personal fitness. In France or Belgium he has the privilege of saying by his ballot whether he is for or against the Government—that is, to declare his party preference, without regard either to the issues before the country or to the character of the candidate. It does not seem to us that this is a very valuable privilege, but such as it is it should be protected. If the soldier is to vote, he ought to be placed as nearly as possible in as good a position as the civilian. If it is possible to surround the soldier's vote in Canada with safeguards that are impossible in Europe, that protection ought to be afforded.

The bill was improved by the criticism offered by the House of Commons and in the Senate. The House and the Senate finally agreed that there should be six scrutineers to supervise the voting and the distribution of the ballot papers, three to be appointed by the Government and three by the Opposition. That was certainly an improvement, and it was a measure of justice to the soldiers as well as to the electorate.

The truth is that the Government, by its own admission, brought down a bill which would have enabled partizans of the Government to steal the soldiers' votes and thus defraud them of the very privilege it was ostensibly giving to them. It was greatly improved both in the House of Commons and in the Senate. The soldiers had a right to a law that was fair and carefully drawn. So far as we can see, both the Opposition and the Senate did their work well, and did their best to make the bill thief-proof.—Toronto Star.

HIAWATHA PEOPLE GAVE TO TWO FUNDS

And Wondered Whether Any Report Had Been Made in the Papers

Some time ago the Hiawatha Indians donated $100 in cash to the Patriotic Fund, and thirty bags of potatoes to the Belgians. They say that no reference has been made to their gifts and they would like the people to know that they are in this war as much as the people in Peterborough. Although they do not assert it, their showing of four young men is a higher one than Peterborough's, for the Hiawatha youths are very few. The village has been blessed with good health during the past four or five years, and the older men are proud that their boys have volunteered. Of course, Madden Howard does not say it in so many words, but words are not the only indication of thought.

The Charge Was Withdrawn

Harold Williamson, before Magistrate Langley, yesterday afternoon, on a charge of seduction, was let off when an agreement was reached whereby he should marry the young lady. County Constable Archie Moore was accordingly directed to take the couple to a minister where the ceremony was performed in his presence.

A Common Sorrow Says Buffalo News

"The War Came a Little More Nearly Home" United States Paper Remarks

The Buffalo News says:

The war came a little more nearly home yesterday.

Buffalo and the frontier generally has something more than a common interest in the list of Canadian casualties after the battle of Langemarck and St. Julien. We experience too, something of the thrill of their countrymen across the border when we read the tales of their heroism and gallantry in action.

Buffalonians who have paused in their short automobile journeys and drawn up alongside the road at old Fort Niagara to watch the businesslike Canadians at their game of playing soldier, have difficulty visualizing them in a setting of deadly artillery fire, rushes across fire zones, fierce charges and all the other terrible pictures of war.

Yet they were the same men who made an imperishable name for the territorials at Langemarck an St. Julien — Major Bennett of Peterborough, Captain Lockhart-Gordon of Toronto, and the affable Lieutenant Day of Kingston.

These men were more nearly our brothers than they were kin to the English comrades with whom they fought, Canada will understand when we make her affliction a common sorrow.
